AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average if not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which gives pleasure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of whose followers I am indebted for many pleasant days.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LAWS MAKING IT A CRIME TO HAVE POSSESSION OF GAME

Two decisions were rendered last year by state supreme courts which it is highly important should be recalled at this time, when various new game laws and amendments are being proposed for legislative action thereon.

In the first, the supreme court of Ohio pronounces constitutional a law which reads: "Whoever purchases, sells, exposes for sale, or has in his possession any of the birds, game, or animals mentioned * * * during the time when the killing thereof is made penal, shall be fined not exceeding twenty-five dollars nor less than two dollars, or imprisoned not more than thirty days, or both." This case (Roth v. State, 37 Northeastern Reporter, 259) was submitted for trial upon an agreed statement of facts, showing that the person who was being prosecuted for violating the above statute was "the proprietor of the St. Nicholas Hotel, in the city of Cincinnati, and a citizen of the said city. On the 21st day of October, 1891, he had in his possession, for the purpose of sale, not in the original package, to his guests in the said hotel, in the city of Cincinnati, in the state of Ohio, six quails, which quails were by him purchased in the state of New York, and shipped to him for the purpose aforesaid; that he did sell one of the quails, not in the original package, to Ora Minor, for the sum of seventy cents, to be eaten by her as a guest in said hotel, on the said 21st day of October, 1891, in the city of Cincinnati, state of Ohio. Said quails were killed in the state of New York at a time when the killing and selling thereof were not prohibited by law." The justice found the accused guilty, and adjudged that he pay a fine of $25 and costs; which judgment was affirmed by the court of common pleas, and its judgment by the circuit court, and finally that of the latter by the supreme court. The defense chiefly relied on was that it was not a violation of the law to sell, or expose for sale, quail or other game which was not caught or killed in the state during the prohibited season; and, as it was agreed that the quail sold was killed in the state of New York when it was there lawful to do so, the accused was guilty of no offense. But the supreme court holds otherwise. It declares that it cannot say that a statute of that kind will not be more effectual in preserving birds and game within the state than one preventing the sale of such only as should be killed there. Nor does it think such a statute unconstitutional. Everyone is presumed to know the law, and persons who acquire such property when the statute is in force take it subject to its provisions.

The other decision referred to is one of the supreme court of Minnesota. It holds (State v. Rodman, 50 Northwestern Reporter, 1098) that the preservation of such animals as are adapted to consumption as food, or to any other useful purpose, is a matter of public interest; and it is within the police power of the state, as the representative of the people in their united sovereignty, to enact such laws as will best preserve such game, and secure its beneficial use in the future to the citizens, and to that end it may adopt any reasonable regulations, not only as to time and manner in which such game may be taken and killed, but also imposing limitations upon the right of property in such game after it has been reduced to possession, which limitations deprive no person of his property, because he who takes or kills game had no previous right of property in it, and, when he acquires such right by reducing it to possession, he does so subject to such conditions and limitations as the legislature has seen fit to impose. The statute which this court expressly holds constitutional provides that "No person shall catch, take or kill, or have in possession or under control for any purpose whatever, any fawn, at any time, nor elk, moose, caribou, or antelope, before the first day of January, 1898; nor any variety of deer, at any time between the twentieth day of November and the first day of November following, except that when the same have been lawfully caught, taken or killed, they may be had in possession or under control for five days, after the time herein limited, for use in the manner and for purposes herein allowed."

What makes this case of still greater interest is the fact that it was admitted in it that the deer for having which in possession the prosecution was had had been killed in the open season. But the supreme court holds that the statute covers such a case, and says that "no court would be justified in declaring unreasonable the provision limiting the time to five days after the commencement of the closed season, during which a person may lawfully retain possession of game taken or killed during the open season. What this provision aims at is not the mere fact of possession of game lawfully obtained, but to prevent its being unlawfully taken or killed. If it were permitted to have possession during the closed season, without limitation, of game taken or killed during the open season, it would inevitably result in frequent violations of the law, without the least probability of a discovery. Game is usually found in secluded places, away from habitations of men, with no one to witness the killing but the hunter himself. The game would have no earmarks to show whether it was taken or killed in the open or the closed season, and hence conviction under this statute would ordinarily be impossible, and the law would become practically a dead letter. In these days of cold-storage warehouses, the mere lapse of time after the expiration of the open season would furnish little aid in an effort to prove that the game had been taken or killed out of season. The regulation is one which reasonably tends to prevent the taking or killing of game in the closed or forbidden season, and is therefore a legitimate exercise of the police power."

PRAIRIE CHICKEN SHOOTING, 1894

BY EMORY

(President of the Ananias Shooting Club)

Oh, my! what sport! Not since prehistoric days were the stubble-fields of North Dakota as prolific of sharp-tailed and pinnated grouse as on the opening day, August 20, 1894. Anticipations, born a year ago, and most delicately nurtured during the year, were realized by one outing party at least, in that Mecca of sportsmen, the "Midway Plaisance" of North Dakota. Not even the pleasure of being in the field when birds are plenty, and the dogs work to a charm, and a sportsman is in "good form," affords half the pleasure one receives in corresponding with friends, and getting ready for an outing, such as our party took. There were letters sent from the Northwest, urging friends to "Come and join us;" letters received from down East: "Regrets; we want to, but can't;" letters from the South: "You bet we'll go;" then, letters received from the Northwest, telling us we must be careful our Southern brethren don't make any missteps in perambulating the slippery walks of our windy and, perhaps, wicked city, Chicago, and fall, answered by a quotation from the good book: "The wicked stand on slippery places." If the walks of our city are slippery and our Southern friends are wicked, they will not fall, or the good book fibs; yet, woe be to him who puffeth himself up as one of the elect; he is liable to catch a fall, and have a broken rib. May your readers have just one extract from a St. Paul letter?

ST. PAUL, MINN., July 4, 1894.

MY DARLIN' EMORY:—Have just heard from the preacher. He says he will go to Dakota with us, and take Robertson, and a stock of Rob's gum. You know the preacher's weakness. When at home he is just too good for anything; but when he travels he is awful. He promised his parishioners that he would be good if they would give him a vacation on pay; but your very presence is seductive—intoxicating, I may say,—hence, please be cautious and good, and don't ask him to drink club soda, there is too much gas in it for him. You and Rob may fiz and fiz as much as you like, but don't give the preacher even one drink of that gaseous Chicago mixture of lemon, sugar and soda; it is dangerous. Bring him to his dear old friends at St. Paul, not later than the morning of August 17. (Signed) JOE.

This letter is but a sample. The preacher, when at home, is a temperance man. When on a shooting trip, where alkaline water only, is to be had, he becomes dreadfully thirsty. That is because he is human; most everybody is—human. En voyage home, last year, after the shooting, he was told that Chicago water was bad; that there were microbes in it; and that everyone in Chicago drank the so-called microbe killer, club soda. The preacher declined to take a drink of any kind, save aqua pura. It seems he had, when young, heard Gough lecture on "Temperance and the Seductive Influences of City Life;" also, Father Matthew; and, later, his own esteemed Southern friend, Sam. Jones, on "Mixed Drinks;" and so, in reply to all invitations, he would say, "No club soda in mine." Club soda has a siz or fiz, but there is nothing intoxicating in it. It is strange what imagination will do—even aqua pura was offensive; and our Southern gues wanted to go to a hotel and rest. Chicago is said to be a "crooked" city, and so he thought it. The streets struck him as being awfully meandering. True, the city map shows only straight lines and right-angles, but from the way he walked, the inference was that the map was dead wrong. Still, this I do know, he had drank nothing but plain aqua pura.

Our party consisted of T. P. Wilkinson and F. F. Robertson, of Robertson County, Tennessee; Mr. Chas. Lay Prostrate, of Chicago; Miss Bessie Hamilton, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Williamson, and Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Kiddersen, of St. Paul, Minn.; and Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Whitewell and sister, and R. C. Cooperton, Esq., of Mecca, N. D. Particularly were the other members of the party greatly indebted to those hailing from the Mecca for their constant acts of kindness and attention during the entire outing.

Mr. Wilkinson is known to your readers by a nom de plume. The mere mention of his articles on nitro powder and kindred subjects is a sufficient introduction of him as a writer and a gentleman. He is a Southerner of the old school; can hunt, shoot, ride, tell stories, and make everybody in a company happy and, so to speak, "at home;" but he can't preach worth a cent. In one respect, however, he is like most other preachers. Though more than seventy years old, he just "takes the cake" with the ladies, God bless them! Why, once upon a time, he—but, as the French say, "that is another pair of sleeves." Then, he is so thoughtful of the dumb brutes! He could scarcely pass a farmhouse without suggesting that the dogs needed water. He would get out of the wagon, rap on the front door of the house, and, if a lady answered, inquire, in the most gentle and dignified tone, "May I be permitted to water our dogs at your well?", and when the dogs had had their fill, he would thank her so courteously, and then inquire about those abominable notices on the corners of the farm, "No shooting on these grounds allowed;" and, with a "Beg pardon, my dear, good lady, may we kill just a few birds?" permission was always granted. No woman in North Dakota ever refused the preacher permission to water the dogs at her well, and to hunt on her lands. Just one of his smiles, and the notices did not count, the party could hunt anywhere. But if a man, instead of a woman, answered his rap at the farmhouse door, it nearly broke the preacher's heart; and watering the dogs became a side issue, and they seldom got any water. The only question we overheard on such occasions was, "Sir, can you tell us where we can find any prairie chickens?"

Mr. Robertson is a character. You may remember him as one of a team of Southern gentlemen who came North, in Dexter Park (Chicago) days, and fairly "wiped the earth" with some of our best trap shots. There were with him, Merriman, Meaders, Leland, Vance, [illegible], all equally good shots at trap and in the field. Mr. [illegible]son is petite, and, by the ladies, is voted fine [illegible], especially in shooting costume. We thought the [illegible] a little jealous of him. Rob often "wipes the Domin[illegible] eyes" in the field, and that is offensive in the extreme for it's anything but nice to miss a prairie chicken, shot ters over the miss, and then have a supposed friend shoot [illegible] at you into the bargain. Not so, old sports[illegible] re[illegible]

[illegible] ge[illegible]r. Robertson invented chewing gum. h[illegible] large orange grove in Florida. Society [illegible] was not just to his liking, and so he started a Sunday school near the orchard, and distributed gum as a reward for attendance. The members of that Sunday school, later, started others, and now there are lots of Sunday schools down South; and, epidemic-like, the craze finally reached the North. Result, Sunday schools up here. In a year when the sale of oranges fell off, members of the Sunday schools tamed on that fruit, and would not get their lessons,—would not chew the problems about the milk and honey the Israelites fed on,—Rob discovered a way to utilize the juices of his surplus orange-grove crop. Oh my! What nice "Florida Fruit Chewing Gum" Robertson does now make!

And here let me say that the great sale of that Southern product mystified the late Congress not a little; and to that fact, more than to any other known cause, it is due that the tariff bill was "held up" for a long while in the Senate. At one time, Mr. Carlisle urged the President to send a special message to Congress, asking that the income feature of the Wilson bill be eliminated, and a slight tax on Robertson's chewing gum be substituted. Some of the senators also urged that this product should make up, in part, for the great shrinkage in receipts from the sale of tobacco stamps, as the gum had nearly taken the place of "the weed." But Rob's friends in Congress objected, on the ground that most of the gum, wax, and sugar he used was still on the taxed list. That is the real history why the passage of the tariff bill was delayed, and how the gum escaped a stamp tax.

Then there is Col. Prostrate! They call him Colonel;

PRAIRIE CHICKEN SHOOTING, 1894—ROB DISTRIBUTING GUM TO HIS SUNDAY-SCHOOL SCHOLARS

but he isn't one; is simply plain Mister. He can talk shoot until a whole sleeping-car load of people will order berths made up at midday, fancying it must be night, he makes them so tired. This trip has proved the correctness of what his friends have always said of him, "He can't shoot a little bit." Up to the end of the first week of the outing, he had not killed a single prairie chicken.*

The modest, unassuming man of the party was Mr. Kiddersen, an attorney by profession. We all know that good attorneys are modest—Mr. Kiddersen is; Chauncey Depew also is. It is for that reason, and on account of his retiring disposition, that Mr. Depew so often gets invitations (transportation furnished) to dine out, and to attend openings and banquets in distant cities. Mr. Kiddersen is often invited for a similar reason; yet he was the only gentleman in our party who did make a good after-dinner speech. It was in response to the toast, "The Ladies;" and if he can talk as sweetly to them as he did of them he is a "good one."

Our Joseph is not just like the Joseph of Bible lore; but wherein we don't intend to "give him away;" nor is he at all like the Joseph in Aladdin, Jr. Yet, in many things, he is like Jacob's favorite son—the one who was dumped by his brethren into the sand pit, and was pulled out and sold to the Egyptians; who lost a part of his garments in maintaining his "honor," he having refused to play hide and seek in old Potiphar's palace; was lied about, and was sent to prison; and, while behind the bars, became a prophet, and interpreted dreams; and, when liberated by Pharaoh, immortalized himself in the Egyptian grain business. He started the first board of trade, and sold grain to the Israelities; and thereafter became reconciled to his brethren, and sent for his father Jacob to come [illegible], that he might fill his sacks [illegible] a cent. That was after the [illegible]ns had a North Dakota drouth, [illegible]and the corn crop was a failure. [illegible]n his dress and correct in his demeanor; hence, no garment of his will get torn; nor, would old Potiphar have cast him into prison. Not much! Our Joe is in the coal business, and hundreds of the poor attest the fact that it must be an awfully cold day when he refuses to contribute more cold—for their comfort. That is wherein he resembles Jacob's favorite son. The Joseph in Aladdin, Jr., was also an Israelite; but he is in the clothing business in Chicago. In trying to serve a one-legged customer, he cut off the wrong leg of a pair of pants, and lost the sale. Then, seeing his error, he cut off the other leg, and sold the trunk to a Michigan Avenue dude for bathing pants. Our Joseph would not have done that; not he. He would have given the old soldier a good pair.

The Nashville and Chicago contingent left Chicago on the evening of August 16, on one of the best, if not the best, railways leading out of that city—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. Every sportsman making a Western trip should take at least one ride on the 6:30, p. m., train of that road, returning on the 8:10, p. m., train another day. The ride is restful, pleasurable, and instructive. The handsome finish and the luxurious furnishings of private apartment cars and palace sleepers, and of the buffet smoking and library cars, as well as the excellent menu and service in the dining-car of this solid vestibuled train, inclines a tourist or a business man to call the formerly favorite trains of other roads "antiques"—mere "back numbers." Besides, one's dogs are cared for on that road by men at the depot and on its trains who will neither injure them by harshness or carelessness, nor rob their owners. Then, the track is so smooth that we may rest in the night-time almost as in the quiet of a rural home. Just prior to leaving Chicago, one of the party, by a fall, broke a rib. When examined by a surgeon, on inquiry as to whether there would be danger of further injury if he continued his trip—mentioning the intended route—the surgeon answered: "Not in the least, if you go on the 6:30, p. m., train of that road." A view of the scenery, in a morning's ride alongside the Father of Waters, the Mississippi, will alone amply compensate the expense of the trip; yet the charge of passage is the same as on ordinary trains on that road and others going west. If a day train be taken on this road, one passes many a favorite camping ground for Summer outing parties while riding through Wisconsin; but especially is the scenery beautiful in the early Autumn months. Is there a more magnificent sight at that season, than that furnished by old Sol—master of ceremonies of the planetary system—when, retiring for a night, he casts his fiery eye over a landscape of rivers, dotted with islands and margined with foothills, and now and again a mountain peak, on foliage beautified by the frosts of early Autumn, with ravishing prismatic tints—green, and gold, and silver, and crimson, and straw color, and pink—against the rich dark background of an occasional evergreen, or pine, or fir, or hemlock! Such was the feast for our eyes, as seen from the car windows, as we glided along on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway toward St. Paul, en route for our shooting Mecca.

Beyond St. Paul we saw only a vast rolling prairie, broken occasionally, at best, by fields of wheat stubble, strawstacks, and farmhouses. The coloring was that of dead grass dingy brown. Nor, except at night, when strawstacks were being destroyed by fire, was there any change from this coloring of a vast drouth-stricken prairie.

A day spent at St. Paul for the pleasure of seeing that beautiful city, with which there are few to compare, the transfer of dogs and baggage to the baggage car of the Northern Pacific Railway, and of ourselves to a private coach on that excellently equipped and managed railway; then a night's ride through Minnesota, and, on the morning of August 18, we reached the line dividing that state from North Dakota. Passing westward, it was only as the train crossed the Cheyenne Valley—the banks of its watercourse (the Cheyenne River) fringed with low cottonwood trees and willows—that there was any variety in the landscape, or any change from the brown-hued prairies. All vegetation seemed dead. It was only as an occasional covey of grouse would rise alongside the railway track and fly a short distance and alight (as though knowing that the season for their destruction by sportsmen had not yet arrived,) or as an occasional hawk made an aerial flight, keeping near Mother Earth in his search for food, that there was any evidence of animal life anywhere. Even at the railway stations, men seemed dull, inactive, almost lifeless. Gracious, how hot it was! No shade, no breeze, no seeming breath of air was there anywhere. At one station the question was asked: "Are prairie chickens plenty this year?" and the answer came, in such languid, hesitating, stuttering, labored tone as to give positive pain to the listener, from sympathy with the speaker: "Lots of 'em—lots—lots! But one can't hunt chickens when the temperature is a hundred and one in the shade."

At the next station, the same question and a similar answer; but the thermometer indicated one degree more of heat. An hour later—possibly thirty miles westward—old Sol had anchored the mercury at precisely one hundred and four; however, his mistress, Luna, when she took the scepter for the night, playing at hide and seek through the heat-clouded sky, made such an atmospheric change that a man needed many blankets, if he was to be physically comfortable. The temperature recorded for one day, from midday to midnight, ranged from one hundred and four degrees Fahrenheit, in the the shade, to forty-five degrees. But the extreme heat is not the only drawback to physical comfort in that grainfield of the grainfields of the world. During two days of our outing, veritable Sirocco winds made life a misery. They were terrific in velocity, and burning hot; nor man, nor beast, nor vegetation, even, could endure them. In Winter, the temperature is so low that the ground is frozen to a depth of seven or more feet, and the winds wheel about from the torrid Sirocco of Summer and Autumn to the freezing blizzard of Winter. And such blizzards as they are, to be sure! They are cyclonic in character, accompanied by snow and hail storm clouds. They burst everywhere—seem never to cease bursting—and move forward uninterruptedly over the boundless prairie, at a wind velocity, sometimes, of ninety miles an hour. How does man endure such storms? How can our exquisite game birds, the sharp-tailed and the pinnated grouse, exist there during the Winter months? The probability of their great suffering, perhaps, furnishes us the only reasonable excuse with which to meet the reproaches of those who condemn us for killing them for sport.

We reached the Mecca at 7:30 o'clock, p. m., on August 18, happy in being at our journey's end. Sunday, followed. The religious services were conducted by the Preacher Wilkinson, and were short. The sermon, "The Negro Problem;" music, by the band; i. e., the ladies and Rob; selections from the Bohemian Girl; solo by Bessie, "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls, with Vassals and Serfs by my Side," during the singing of which the Preacher was visibly affected. The Colonel was the only one who did not attend. He had a "considerable" more faith in his friend as shooter than as exhorter, and during the day freely offered odds of a bottle of aqua pura or club soda in re Tennessee partridges vs. Sunday meetin', any time during the open season, when the preacher was in Tennessee of a Sunday. The Colonel's devotional exercises were held in private, and consisted mainly in grunting, grumbling, and groaning over his broken rib; and in swearing that, since it was to be, it hadn't been a broken neck instead. The announcement by the preacher, just before the sermon, that at its close a collection would be taken up, caused most of the party to leave before the sermon was half through—a distinct disappointment to the Preacher, he having spent some weeks in making his arguments hitch, and looking up precedents for slavery in the Bible, of which he found many, so he said, in introducing his arguments.

The writer recalls that his first prairie chicken shoot was at Dwight, Illinois, now the haven of the inebriate, the home of the only Keeley. In those days, all was open prairie there,—few houses, no fences, some wheatfields, many cornfields, some oatfields, and thousands of prairie chickens. It was in the early days of the breech-loading shotgun—the pinfire—a weapon now seldom used or seen. In a few hours' walk, and having a fairly good dog, his first morning's bag was twenty-seven. His companion, a market-shooter, bagged eighty-three. That country is now fenced and posted, and there would be many birds, were sufficient care taken that local shooters do not kill before the season legally opens.

The country about the Mecca is like that in Illinois, save that wheatfields abound and maize is not grown there; while in Illinois, maize is the main cereal, there being few wheatfields, except in portions of the southern part of the state. As to topography, there are no hills, no valleys, no woodlands that are worthy of the name—no change from one vast wavy landscape of prairie. In North Dakota, this is varied, now and then, by a diminutive "tree claim," i. e., a few cottonwood trees, or silver-leaf poplars, or soft maples, or willows where the grounds are low—so planted as to make a hollow square—set out by homestead claimants who desire to secure an additional "forty acres" of land by that means, from the government. These tree claims, with underbrush and high weeds, or other vegetable growth, and the high grasses in the dried-up sloughs and in the valleys, and an occasional shrub-willow patch not higher than a man's waist, furnish about the only retreat from a midday Summer sun for the prairie grouse. In the early morning and in the evening, the wheat and oat and flax stubble-fields become feeding grounds, and when grain is not plenty and grasshoppers are, these game birds will accept a midday lunch on those saltatorial insects. But the "tree claim" is the real refuge for pintail and pinnated grouse, on a superheated midday, and the stubble-fields furnish the edibles on which they best like to breakfast and sup.

Monday morning, August 20, was the opening day for grouse, ducks, and geese in North Dakota. Possibly, in fact if not in law, the goose has no "close season." It may not be lawful to do so, but he is to be killed in that state at any time his presence is observed. He loves wheat too well to be allowed to live until an open season. Years ago, and during the memory of the writer, it was not only lawful but it was considered just the thing to kill all wild pigeons wherever found. In those days, in Spring, they came North in myriads to nest and breed, the flocks fairly darkening the heavens above. Their nestings would include thousands of acres of forest lands, each tree having hundreds of nests. In their migration between their nestings and their feeding grounds, they would alight on newly-sown grain fields, and pull up and eat the sprouted seed. For that reason, farmers soaked seed in poisoned water, and spread it broadcast over their plowed lands, thereby poisoning and killing thousands of these predatory, ravenous birds, while feeding. Boys and men shot them, trappers netted them for trap shooting, and marketmen visited the pigeons at their nestings in forests, and whipped the trees whereon were the young birds in nests, causing their fall to the ground beneath, and killed and sent carloads of squabs to the markets of our Eastern cities. Toothsome food for epicures! In this latter day, the wild pigeon is a curiosity. Sportsmen now lament the loss of that quasi-game bird, and ask legislatures to pass laws for the protection of the few living. The chief cause of the exodus, or, rather, of the depletion, in the opinion of the writer, was, the breaking up of the nestings by the killing of squabs. Certainly it was not the killing of birds at the trap. The few wild pigeons that survive have taken Horace Greeley's advice; they have gone further west to live. As it was with the wild pigeon, so will it be with the wild goose. He is a grain gormandizer, and farmers do not want him to live. What cares the tiller of the soil how that gormandizer is killed, and when, or by whom?

But with prairie chicken it is different. So long as the marketmen in Boston and other Eastern cities will admit grouse, quails, ducks, and geese, killed in other states to their markets during the "close season" in the states in which they were killed, so long will the Dakota farmer trap and kill grouse when not in season, regardless of law, and when scarcely fit for food, and ship to those markets. It is not the sportsmen of the country who should be blamed for the depletion of game birds, but the local shooters (misdemeanants, not sportsmen,) who kill mere squab chicklets, and the netters, who unlawfully net birds so late in the open season that the meat is not palatable, and also after the season has closed, and whose acts are tolerated, that the tables of epicures may be "garnished" with game birds.

And right here occurs to the writer other matter, possibly foreign to an outing article, but it has to "go in." Sportsmen's papers admit all sorts of nonsense—vagaries—to their columns. This that Emory has to say may seem such to many of your readers, and may be such. If so, be it so.

To the writer, it seems absurd, unsportsmanlike, and wrong to, by legislation and enforcement of the law, prevent the shipment of game lawfully killed in one state to another state during those months when it is most fit as food for man. Game birds are luxuries. Are citizens of other states who cannot visit Dakota to be deprived of the pleasure of eating Dakota grouse, there being no like sort of birds in their respective states? Pinnated and pintail grouse are plentiful in many Western states, but are not found east of Ohio, except when specially bred. The writer is not greatly endowed with this world's goods, but he has shot birds these many years. If he resides in Boston, his purse might say "nay" to an inspiration to "go West" during the chicken season. Possibly his general health, or some anatomical derangement, such as loss of limb while "doing" our Southern brethren thirty years ago, or while in the field in pursuit of game, or some infirmity due to age, would prevent his enjoying field sport so far from home. What shall be said, then, of that "heathen Chinee" wall, which would prevent his receiving birds from some friend's hand, whose means allowed him to enjoy an outing in another state? Or, if not from a friend, then why may he not receive them through a local market? Why should the citizens of Illinois not eat venison, or of Massachusetts not eat prairie chickens that have been lawfully killed in the open season in another state? Away with prohibitory shipment laws! Let Americans eat at their will, anywhere, birds that have been killed lawfully in any state of the Union during such season of the year as they are luxuries as food. Sportsmen's papers initiated the unfriendly and selfish legislation and it has now become "fadish" with some unthinking sportsmen.

Away with the indiscriminate raid of sportsmen's papers on those who shoot ducks in the Spring. All the long Winter, bang! bang! go the guns down South. If a by killing a like number in the Fall months, as those birds do not breed in this latitude no more than they breed in the torrid zone. In order that shooting in the Fall on our local marshes may be better, however, the laws may well prohibit the killing of so-called Summer ducks late in Spring, as they may breed on our marshes if permitted to do so. Let us but be reasonable, and legislatures will pass just laws; and being such, sportsmen will respect them. Bear in mind that mallards, woodducks, and teal are Summer ducks—marsh ducks,—while bluebills, redheads, and canvas-backs are open-water fowls, and do not frequent our marshes to any great extent; and never, save in their flight North in Spring, or South late in Autumn. Any sportsman who knows the difference between a bluebird and a blue-winged teal will quickly recognize the kind of duck he sees over his gun and refrain from shooting a Summer duck, if the law protects the latter. It is four dollars to a doughnut, of value equal to a nickel only, that nearly everyone who writes against Spring shooting at ducks would not only shoot them in February and March, if in the South, but would also kill that bonnie bird of all our small game birds—almost the pet and companion of man—the partridge of the South, during the same months. It is not Spring shooting solely that makes our duck shooting poor in the Fall; it is the drying up of our marshes, and the destruction of our rice beds.

What fools our goody-goody people were when they imported the "pestiferous sparrow," as the writer designated him, in an address before the State Sportsmen's Association of Illinois many years ago, and before the public had realized the injuries that bird would do. How like half-idiots were our fishculturists when they brought to our inland waters (then filled with as fine food fish as are known to the waters of Mother Earth) that mud-sucking, spawn-eating, rice-devouring water-hog, the German carp. Summer ducks visit, on their flight South, the best feeding grounds they can find, and they love the wild rice of our marshes better than any other food. The pestiferous German carp has already depleted, nearly destroyed, the marsh rice beds, on waters where it has been placed by fish commissioners, and has been pro-sportsman kills a few redheads or bluebills or canvas-backs in the Spring up North, he does no more harm than tected by laws prohibiting the use of s[illegible] ture. Obtain the passage of laws [illegible] destruction of these mud-hogs by sein[illegible] otherwise, as they are an inferior fi[illegible] being a bait-biting fish, all the ang[illegible] could not clear a single stream of the pests with hook and line, and thereby again give your better food fish a chance to increase in numbers. Then restock our marshes with rice, and prohibit shooting Summer ducks late in Spring, if you will, during the mating season, when they cannot be utilized as food, and should not be killed, law or no law, until their young have been reared.*

NOTE.—The attention of the AMERICAN FIELD was called to the destruction of rice beds by carp, by the author of this article. Vide AMERICAN FIELD, October 20, 1894.

THE PROPOSED ILLINOIS GAME LAW

A meeting of the directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association was called for Friday afternoon, February 1, at 3 p. m., in the Sherman House, Chicago, to discuss the game bill introduced in the legislature by Game Warden Blow. There were present W. L. Shepard, president; W. J. Edbrooke, vice-president; H. B. Meyers, secretary; R. B. Organ, chairman; Abner Price, L. M. Hamline, R. L. Mott, Mr. Wilcox and F. S. Baird. Several other sportsmen were present at the invitation of the board.

R. B. Organ called the meeting to order.

W. L. Shepard stated that the passage of House Bill 56 would be an injury to the cause of game preservation, and that while the directors had approved the bill at their meeting January 17, he believed, in the light of later developments, that House Bill 56 was inimical to game preservation.

Mr. Baird declared it would wipe out all the game in the state on account of its defective wording, and claimed it was more in favor of the game dealer than of the sportsman. This seemed to be the opinion of the other directors present. It was then decided to ignore House Bill 56, and, on motion, the action of the directors, in support of the bill, on January 17, was formally rescinded.

Game Warden Blow was invited to be present, but as he was in Springfield he sent the following letter:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., January 30, 1895.

OFFICERS ILLINOIS STATE SPORTSMEN'S ASSOCIATION:

Having this day received forwarded mail requesting me to attend a meeting to be held at the Sherman House Friday afternoon, February 1, 1895, I regret very much not being able to attend. Having in the meantime been informed of the object of the meeting, I will say it does not surprise me to learn its object. Having come in contact with a goodly number of the members, I have always found them opposed to anything anyone else suggested outside of a so-called sportsman. Any change in the game law must be for the sportsman and no one else. Of course the present proposed law was published and at the same time suggestions were called for upon the subject. I have in my possession over 500 letters from all over the state, and from them I drew my conclusions. Not a word from this so-called sportsmen's association did I receive until the bill was corrected, the expense of which I paid, outside of that contributed by H. H. Fahnestock ($13) and C. Kern ($20). The said bill cost considerable more than that. But what surprised me is that at this late date these agitators put in their appearance. I would suggest that the above association get up a bill to suit its interest and not lose any time over mine, as I shall let the intelligence of the general assembly decide which is the better for the people.

I learn your great objection is that the hotels, commission men and railroads are detrimental to your association, except when any of your members want a pass to go hunting or fishing. They are in line then. I would like the above association to tell me what object Illinois lawmakers have in protecting game in Canada or Montana, Dakota or other states where game comes from? Is it that when these so-called sportsmen go there they will find plenty of game to kill because they pay no attention to their own state, or is is to drive a legitimate business from the state of Illinois to some other state? Show me one case which the above association has prosecuted for killing game out of season or the game wardens under their direction. I say not one. They have always directed their persecutions at innocent parties, such as commission men, hotels or restaurant keepers. Does that protect the game? I say no. You make laws for Illinois and have your wardens out in the field and keep the game alive, and not shout after it is dead.

What interest has Illinois in the game of other states that it should make laws of that kind? Is it not a discouraging fact that this association only meets once a year? And what does it meet for? My personal experience is that the members meet to talk over trap shooting, proper charges of shells, handicaps, etc., from 8:15 p. m. until 11:20 p. m., forgetting altogether that they were incorporated for the protection of game and fish, and had not the chairman called their attention to the above facts they would never inquire about game. At your last meeting I was called upon to make my report, which I did, and of which I am not ashamed. They were much surprised to find I had been out in the state and tried to stop the illegal killing of game at the root, where the evil exists. They encored my methods and passed a resolution to reimburse me for my shortage. Now did I ever get it? Yes, I got it from eight out of twenty-six or thirty clubs up to date. The above was ordered June last. Now this is what this association amounts to. I would respectfully suggest that you call it the Illinois Trap Shooting Association. It would be more fitting for the support you give the game in comparison to the making up of purses to shoot pigeons, to give it the above title. I believe in enacting laws for the whole people of the state and not the few. Truly yours,

C. H. BLOW,
Game Warden.

It was quite evident that there was a lack of harmony between the chief game warden and the officers of the state association.

The game warden stated to us in extenuation of his letter that he had gone to the association often enough, and now the association could come to him. Furthermore, the directors were attacking the phraseology of the original bill, but which had been revised and perfected in every detail in accordance with the views of over five hundred sportsmen in sections of the state which he had visited in the interest of game protection. The officers of the association stated that the voting of money to the warden by the association was wholly gratuitous and that it was under no obligations to pay the warden said gratuity at [illegible] fied time, but undoubtedly the amount would b[illegible] coming at the next annual meeting in June, [illegible] any rate a strong feeling was at once aroused against [illegible] Warden Blow's House Bill 56, while at the same time it was admitted by all present that he was the best gam[illegible] warden Illinois ever had. Personal debate was finally stopped, the meeting adjourned to meet on Monday, Feb- [illegible] m the law committee having been in- [illegible] ng amendments to the old law, and [illegible] ill be together.

The meeting was called to order at 4 p. m. last Monday, R. B. Organ in the chair. Mr. Mott's legal opinion was read, in which he declared the wording of the bill fatal to its enforcement and made it possible for game to be sold the entire year. Each section was commented on, but, inasmuch as the entire opinion was based on the wording of the original draft of the bill and not the one now before the legislature, there is no need wasting space in reporting the debate of the meeting on a bill which is not in existence.

The law committee reported in favor of the following amendments to the present law: To have one warden appointed for each county of the state, the governor to appoint one chief game warden; to lessen the time when game may be sold, viz., October 1 to December 1, prohibit sale of Illinois game absolutely, provide for the seizure on sight of game in possession out of season, provide that all the fines and proceeds of sale of confiscated game go to the wardens as remuneration, provide that the state shall sell all confiscated game, the justice to deduct costs from fines and turn the balance over to the wardens; also, to give wardens, in addition to fees, on petition of twenty-five residents of any county, such compensation as the Govenor may think justifiable. Mr. C. E. Felton, who was present by invitation, thought some of these amendments would prove reactionary, and that any law which will allow one class to shoot game to eat and deny another class the right to purchase game to eat would not receive the support of the people and would thereby become a dead letter.

Finally it was decided to appoint a committee to visit Springfield and present the amendments to the present law for enactment. Circular letters were also ordered printed to be sent to all the legislators, and the sportsmen throughout the state, asking the former to withhold their support of House Bill 56, and the latter to use their influence to defeat it.

Inasmuch as the bill printed under the number House Bill 56 is not Game Warden Blow's bill now before the legislature, we are under the impression there is quite a tempest in a teapot, and subjoined we publish the actual bill as before the Illinois legislature for enactment. Of course, any law is bad which has not popular approval, and as this bill evidently meets the popular demand it is better to try it with the support given it, than to go on as in the past, with the result that nearly every sportsman seeks sport in far away states at great expense, because game has grown so scarce under the present law. We would suggest, however, that the words "coming from the state of Illinois" in Section 4, be eliminated, for certainly a four-months open season for the sale of game from any state is long enough. Game Warden Blow informs us that, if given this law, game will again be plentiful in Illinois, for he will make it so hot for every violator, whether pot-hunter, market-shooter or mock sportsman, that the game will be left severely alone until it may be legally killed. We hope such will be the good luck of every Illinois shooter.

The actual bill is as follows:

GAME WARDEN'S BILL

SECTION 15.—WHEN TO TAKE EFFECT.—This act shall take effect from and after its passage, all previous acts inconsistent herewith being hereby repealed.

Just as we go to press we are in receipt of the following declaration, which bears the signatures of over one hundred of the most reputable and responsible houses which deal in game in Chicago; but as it arrived at the last moment we are compelled, for want of space, to omit the long list of names. We shall publish them next week. The declaration was drawn up for presentation at the meeting of directors Wednesday, February 6:

CHICAGO, Feb. 5, 1895.

TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE ILLINOIS STATE SPORTSMEN'S ASSOCIATION:

We, the undersigned game dealers of Chicago, do solemnly declare, on our word of honor, that we are unalterably opposed to the traffic in game illegally killed in this or any other state, and will do all in our power to uphold a law just to all the people; and we further pledge ourselves to do all in our power to prohibit the buying, selling, handling or killing of any game during the season when such killing is by law prohibited; but when such game is killed and shipped legally, from any state, we claim the right, as American citizens, to buy, sell and handle it for the American people at large, who have rights in game as well as the sportsmen class. Give us a law which will allow us to sell game during the legal open seasons, when all people want it, and you will not have any stancher supporters of game protection anywhere. We indorse Game Warden Charles H. Blow's bill because it is just to all people alike, and is not class legislation like the existing law.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I notice in the proposed Illinois game law that any person caught exporting game out of the state will be subject to a fine. Does that refer to the sportsmen shooting for pleasure? I do not think any state law should read so that a man visiting his relations and shooting a few birds should be deprived of taking them home with him. The law as it reads will deprive many poor men here from enjoying the sport they could have by crossing the river. We read in sportsmen's journals that the rich and poor are on a level in the field, but the rich man can go hundreds of miles while the poor man cannot, and the little sport the latter could have is cut off by laws that I think might be changed so as to give them their sport and at the same time benefit the state. Why not have a hunter's license and make the price double the amount for non-residents, and then permit them to take their game home? The state would be benefited by it. I have hunted many seasons and am certain any sportsman leaves far more money in a state he visits than the game he takes out would amount to.

I am surprised that more sportsmen do not suggest this change. Insert something to make everybody pay for the protection of game.

A SUBSCRIBER.

FOUR DAYS IN A GAME SECTION OF LOUISIANA

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The game territory within the limits of Louisiana is so completely an unknown region to the sportsmen of the United States that I am tempted to write a plain, unvarnished tale of a shooting trip from which I returned a fortnight or more ago.

The lower half of that part of Louisiana west of the Mississippi, is a region of prairie and marsh. Near this city this portion of the state is thickly settled, large sugar estates covering much of the upland territory. The extreme western portion of Southern Louisiana—the country bordering the Gulf of Mexico and near the Texas line—is the paradise of the sportsman. It was to this country that I, with one companion, betook myself at the beginning of the new year.

Taking the Southern Pacific Railroad at New Orleans we were borne 218 miles to the westward, leaving the train at Lake Charles in Calcasieu Parish. Here we stopped over night at the Lake House, an excellent hostelry, and at 7 o'clock the next morning embarked on a small, but comfortable, tugboat—the regular packet—known as the Xantho. Going down the Calcasieu River toward the Gulf of Mexico, for some thirty miles, we entered Calcasieu Lake, a smooth body of water some eighteen or twenty miles long and very nearly as broad. From this lake we again entered the Calcasieu River, and, after a ride of some six hours from our starting point at Lake Charles, landed at Leesburg, the parish (county) seat of Cameron Parish, two miles from the Gulf of Mexico.

We were now in the heart of the game country of Louisiana—in a parish practically without woodland of any kind—nine-tenths of it marsh, with here and there a ridge of upland a few feet above the surface of the marsh. Just here let me observe that the few sportsmen I have met who came to Louisiana on pleasure bent, have made the mistake of not "getting in with" a native—a native pot-hunter preferably—who "knew the ropes." In my shooting trips, which have been many and have in the course of years covered every parish in Louisiana, experience has taught me that the wisest and best investment is a native—an old-timer resident—of the market-hunter variety. He saves you many a weary, profitless tramp, his "camp" is more comfortable than your tent, and he cooks and does the drudgery.

But to return to my trip. After spending the night at Leesburg we were met, in accordance with previous appointment, by Gus Farque, the son of our native friend, a good, broad-shouldered, strapping fellow, strong as an ox, who packed us bag and baggage on a small "lugger," or sailboat, and we set sail for Oyster Bayou, five miles away, where a house, consisting of one room and an 8x10 kitchen, formed the camp of Amedée Farque, who killed game for the Lake Charles market and shipped it on the Xantho.

An hour or so after our arrival, our host invited my companion to go with him on a deer hunt out on the marsh, some half-mile distant. I am not a big-game hunter. My ambitions cover smaller territory, so I did not attempt the "deer act," but made for the snipe bog, two or three hundred yards distant. It was then about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. I returned just at nightfall with a bag of 92 snipes—jacksnipes, or, as the French put it, becassines—and the Creole patois has it, in imitation of the sound made by the bird when rising, "cache-cache." There was one lone chinaberry tree—a small specimen—near the house, planted there a few years before. I was worn and weary, and did not look up as I passed by the tree. Entering the "camp," I found my friend and old Amedée with an elegant game supper already prepared. I was quite confident than I had been the wise man, and that venison was not yet on our bill of fare. Invited out to the tree, I saw two deer hanging in the branches—yearling deer, weighing 60 to 70 pounds each. The two hunters had returned at 4:30 o'clock with these "trophies of the chase," and, bagging a few snipes on their jaunt, had broiled them á la Parisienne. To the uninitiated I will state that the Parisienne style is the style au naturel, which, being further interpreted, is the snipe not drawn at all. Only ill-informed people ever eat a snipe that is drawn. The cutting of a snipe or a quail or a woodcock, or any small bird, before the eating begins, is nothing short of a culinary crime. Stomachs intimately connected with minds may rebel, but the cold fact remains that a man who knows and loves good eating never draws one of the smaller birds.

The next morning I still had the snipe fever, flavored with a burning longing to pour a few barrels of No. 2 shot among the thousands of wild geese that covered a "burn" in the marsh in plain view of our camp. These geese our friend Farque called brant, and, as I am not very sound on distinctions between geese and brant, I will simply say that these wild fowl were of a solid white color, save a small patch of slate-colored feathers near the end of the wing. So I spent this day snipe shooting and goose destroying. The net result was 72 snipes and 42 geese, the latter being the product of just four barrels of a 12-gauge gun loaded with 1¼ ounces of No. 2 shot. I am within the truthful limits of an honest sportsman when I say that the number of geese I could have killed—perhaps slain would be more accurate—was only limited by my desires in the premises. A goose that weighs five pounds is a pretty object to look at, but he is not so handsome when you have to carry him through the marsh. My 42 geese were borne homeward by the combined efforts of four of us, and we all retired early that night. My companion devoted his day to snipe, geese and curlew, with a net result of 50 or more snipes, some 20 geese and 25 curlews. He also bagged two Canadian geese, weighing eight or nine pounds each, of a solid slate color, that were feeding on the marsh uplands and avoiding the watery spots.

On the third day the deer fever returned and I spent half a day with satisfactory results—one buck, whose weight we guessed at possibly 110 pounds. I finished the day with my favorite sport, snipe shooting, and added to our already large store. My companion in the crime of slaying besought my aid in carrying to camp his goose product. I was really too weary to count them.

On the fourth day—the last of our hunt—we spent an hour or two within two hundred yards of the camp shooting rabbits. Net result, 12 rabbits. Snipes, geese and curlews were added to the score, and the next morning at daybreak we secured two large skiffs and a sailboat, and, overtaking the Xantho where Oyster Bay joined the Calcasieu River, we soon had our trophies stowed away here and there. Six or seven hours later we landed at Lake Charles, and the same night 550 pounds of game, accompanied by two fair, but by no means marvelous experts with the gun, returned to New Orleans.

In conclusion I desire to say to the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD that if anyone sportively inclined desires to know more of Louisiana shooting territory, my knowledge is at his service. A letter to P. O. Box 1334, this city, will reach me and receive attention.

THE PROPOSED INDIANA GAME LAW

NORTH JUDSON, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Before expressing an opinion on the proposed Indiana game law, permit me to say I am an enthusiast in any attempt to prevent willful slaughter of game, and to restrain illegal shooting and the sale of game. As evidence of my statement I will say that I have secured twenty signatures to organize a gun club and game protective association, each member pledged to support, to his utmost, the full requirements of the law, and woe be to the man who attempts to do illegal shooting, or ship, carry, or transport game from the state. We are prompted to this action by the imposition practised upon us by "market shooters" and non-residents who indiscriminately slaughter our game before the open season and transport it beyond the limits. To this end I have enlisted members from every direction, farmers, business men, railroad men and commercial travelers, who will be on the alert at all times to report and bring an offender to terms.

Before entering into a consideration of the proposed law, I wish to call attention to a matter of great importance, and I trust that when the game and fish laws are presented to the next House of Representatives it will not be forgotten. In this section we are dependent upon the Kankakee River for fishing ground, and are almost helpless for want of a law for protection. With a wide-awake fish commissioner, backed by stringent laws, the Kankakee would afford ample sport for all anglers in Northern Indiana. The present fish law is lame, a farce I might say, so far as interpreted. The statutes permit spearing during certain months in the year, and it has gradually merged into a continued warfare and capture of all fish large enough to be lodged on the barbed tangs of a spear whenever the river is open. Spearing is wrong, and brutal in effect. It not only diminishes the supply, but lacerates and leaves to die many fish that otherwise would be left to the angler who goes for sport.

The river is netted, seined and reported to be dynamited. I have appealed to the commissioner but without relief. What I ask for is the abolishment of gigs, spears and nets, or any appliances other than hook and line, and making the possession of such a finable offense. I would recommend that the fish commissioner fill the office to which he is appointed and act as game warden also, with a salary commensurate with the duties involved, and that he be a man fearless in the prosecution of the duties of his office, the appointment to be made regardless of political preferment or influence, and to expire any time when cause is shown that he is neglectful of his duties. Also let the law provide that for each conviction under his direct prosecution he shall be entitled to half the fine collected.

Location, quantity and quality of game birds temper public opinion regarding open season. For example: When Representative Allen of Hoopestown, Ill., asked for five years' protection in the state, it was not so much on account of the scarcity of game, but because hunters abused their privileges and crossed from Lafayette, Ind., into Illinois and killed young prairie chickens, on wagers, pulling off the heads to count from, and leaving the bodies in the fields to go to waste. Indiscriminate slaughter by a few reckless poachers from a border state inflicted a penalty on residents who were willing to observe the law, with plenty of game at hand to supply the demand. When the bill was introduced the southern faction objected and a compromise was arranged limited to two years. Therefore some exceptions I [illegible] take to the proposed law are due to the [illegible] advantages of Fall shooting.

We have but few prairie chickens a[illegible] few quails. This climate seems poor[illegible] on account of cold Winters and a scar[illegible] of the birds. About every three years the increase is frozen, leaving but a limited supply for propagation. On this account, and in consideration of the small flight of geese, ducks and snipes in the Fall, we are compelled to ask a short season of Spring shooting; otherwise our guns are practically useless except for trap shooting.

Let us reason together, brother sportsmen of Indiana, and adjust the matter suitably to all concerned. Give us four weeks' shooting on geese and ducks, closing the season April 1. Neither geese nor ducks nest here, except teal and woodduck, and I fail to comprehend the utility of protecting migratory birds that feed here in the Spring and go elsewhere to be killed in the Fall.

Snipe shooting has been very poor here during the last three years, last Fall being an exception, and, like some others, I want the law to remain unchanged.

Regarding the law on quails, I am willing to forego the pleasures of a bright October day with dog and gun and satisfy myself with a short season, but I believe that September 1 on prairie chickens would recompense in a measure the short open season on quails. Four weeks on prairie chickens will afford good sport to the hunter and excellent exercise to our dogs.

Mr. Sharp has my congratulations in his effort to regulate the question of protection to game in this state, and his work should meet the hearty approval of all sportsmen.

ABNER T. HETFIELD.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Three bills for the protection of fish and game are at this moment in the hands of the House Committee on Rights and Privileges, in the General Assembly of Indiana, now in session. They were introduced by Mr. McBeth, of Pulaski and White counties.

The Committee on Rights and Privileges is composed of the following: Messrs. H. C. Pettit, of Wabash; C. F. Hesler, of Fountain; A. W. Porter, of Lawrence, Orange, Martin and Dubois; O. L. Woodruff, of Noble; J. G. Allen, of Daviess; D. Bohanan, of Warrick; A. J. Stakebake, of Randolph; J. P. McGeath, of Adams, Jay and Blackford; R. W. Harrison, of Shelby.

I am very much afraid the committee may report unfavorably. Every sportsman in Indiana who is interested in fish and game protection should, without a moment's delay, address the members of this committee and also write personal letters to his delegation in the legislature, urging favorable consideration on House bills—

No. 286—"A Bill for an Act Authorizing the Appointment of a Fish and Game Commissioner."

No. 379—"A Bill for the Protection of Game and Birds."

No. 380—"A Bill for the Protection of Fish."

There have been about a dozen bills introduced in reference to fish and game protection; but, as far as I can learn, none of them cover the ground so fully or effectively as those above mentioned. If Indiana sportsmen delay a moment or miss one mail the measures may go by the board, and our three months' work will have been for naught. They should write at once, addressing letters to the care of the General Assembly, and be sure to make mention of the numbers and titles of the bills as above.

I. WALTER SHARP.

BROOK, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The proposed Indiana game law. Yes, we all ought to have something to say, of course, and our laws ought to be better enforced. There is no use of making laws unless they are enforced, and I would like to see our present game law enforced a little right here in Newton County. I am in favor of the proposed Indiana game law, except on snipes and plovers, for our ducks are all gone and there are left us only snipes and plovers to shoot. Spring is the only time we have them to shoot, and we would like to have a little shooting in Northern Indiana. Southern Indiana shooters do not know what kind of a law to make if they think this law is what we want on snipes and plovers.

The proposed bill says "all shore birds." The author of that bill surely does not think plovers are shore birds. They feed on small grain and are very destructive to it in this section of Indiana, for they go in large flocks and farmers complain of the mischief they do, as they will gather up half an acre of small grain whenever they settle down on a newly-sowed field. I know of one man who sowed four acres of a very bare piece of meadow with grass seed last Spring, and he says he thinks that the plovers picked up the last seed. I think the bill, so far as it relates to snipes and plovers, out of all reason

GAME LAW LEGISLATION NEEDED

PHILADELPHIA P[illegible]

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The following special [illegible] patch from Wilkesbarre to the Press of this city, will, I [illegible] doubt, be read with interest by the many patrons of AMERICAN FIELD in this state, and for this reason [illegible] part of this communication.

[illegible] this part of Pennsylvania are [illegible] slaughter of game by market [illegible] out of season, and they will make [illegible]. A bill has been drawn up by the Luzerne County Sportsmen's Club and will be sent to the Legislature. It is to prohibit the sale of grouse in market and shipping the birds out of the state.

"The sportsmen know if something is not done at once to protect the grouse from wholesale slaughter by market shooters, that only a few years will elapse before this most noble of all game birds will meet the fate of deer and Pocono grouse. The grouse is only found in seven of the Northern states and Pennsylvania is really its home. If the bird is not protected here it will be entirely exterminated, unless the Legislature passes a law to prohibit its sale in market. The slaughter of these birds has been very great during the last few years.

"There are within a few miles of Wilkesbarre fifteen market-hunters who are known to the sportsmen here, besides a large number who are not, and they are increasing every year. Each one of these averages 500 birds apiece during the season. It is easy to be seen that under these conditions the grouse will soon be exterminated. As nearly as can be ascertained, 3,160 grouse have been retailed in this city by five dealers alone, and a great many have been shipped to New York and Philadelphia by the hunters.

"Some years ago there were more deer in Pennsylvania than in any other Eastern state. They are now about exterminated. Forty years ago a bird known as the Pocono grouse was plentiful in this section. They were as large again as the pheasant, and in color and shape a great deal like a prairie chicken. They have been entirely exterminated. Said a gentleman recently: 'Of all the birds the ruffed grouse is the only game bird left, and it remains with the sportsmen of the state whether these birds shall be destroyed or not. In the Western states, where game is plentiful, laws have been passed prohibiting the sale of game or taking it out of the state.'"

It is to be hoped that the above mentioned bill will pass the Legislature and put a stop to the work of market-shooters. Of course no man can be prevented from hunting, and until all markets are closed against the sale of game our game will receive very little protection. Sportsmen in every state should use their efforts to frame bills and push them until they are passed, to prevent the sale of game. How many thousand head of game are mercilessly slaughtered, not for pleasure and recreation, but for a few paltry pennies? How many market-hunters are good citizens? Not one in a hundred. And why should there be a way left open for them to make a living by slaughtering our fast-decreasing stock of game? There are lots of other ways for them to make a living without exterminating our game.

There are certainly enough sportsmen (I do not mean game-hogs who are not satisfied unless they can kill a cartload) in every state in the Union who, if they will use their best efforts, would be successful in having bills passed that would give our game some protection. The trouble is that so many read these things, agree with them, say they are right, etc., but do not put their shoulders to the wheel and help the thing along. I think if the AMERICAN FIELD would have a form printed asking the Legislatures to prevent the sale of game, with blank spaces left for at least a hundred names, and distribute them with two or three issues of the paper, every reader that received one would get the signatures to them of nearly all of the prominent men in their section, and thus show their representatives in the Legislature what is wanted. The circulation of the AMERICAN FIELD is, no doubt, 50,000, and three such slips would make 150,000; and if each was to contain one hundred names, or fifty names, or even twenty-five names, they would represent at least 3,750,000 citizens, and if our representatives will not listen to this we should do all in our power to sweep the rascals out at the polls. I shall be pleased to have the opinions of other sportsmen on this subject. A. G. SOISTMANN.

THE CHOICE OF A GUN

CLEVELAND, O.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In a former issue of the AMERICAN FIELD there was a communication from I. Jim which I agree with in so far as to believing that the gun a man owns is the best. I had that same idea when I had used my first gun for a time. As time went by I wanted a better gun and was in the position so many are in who write the AMERICAN FIELD asking for information regarding the make of gun to buy.

I at one time made up my mind to buy a Colt gun, and I am still of the opinion that the Colt gun is the best American-made gun on the market to-day, for the reason that the locks are simple and strong, and consequently almost impossible to get out of order.

After reading the advice so often given regarding what gun to buy, I was beginning to think they were all the best until I got the idea I could settle the question very easily, and I did it in this way. My office is only a few doors from [illegible] gunsmith, and being on good [illegible]nced dropping into his shop [illegible]ad a gun apart I would examine [illegible]uld usually find out all the good [illegible] gun. I cannot remember the [illegible]y [illegible]minations I made. I know some struck me as being very good, notably the Colt, and some struck me as being very poor; and of all the examinations I made I found nothing that pleased me as well as the Greener. It is simple, strong and years of wear will not wear it loose. After months of watching I at last concluded to buy one of this make. I selected a little 6¾ pound full choke, and it is the best gun I ever had in my hands; and I honestly believe a Greener will wear more years at less expense to the owner than any other gun. Then the way the Greener is bored cannot help but make them great shooters. My gun is a 12-gauge, so called, but I find that the entire length of barrels is 13-gauge until with in 1¼ inches of the muzzle, when it is choked down to 14-gauge. According to my ideas this holds all gases until the wads have left the muzzle of the barrel. Few guns can equal mine in either pattern or penetration.

If I. Jim wants a good gun, one that can be depended on at all times, my advice to him is, buy a Greener.

SHOT.

A SHORTER OPEN SEASON FOR GAME

BEAVER FALLS, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Trap shooting is about all the shooting we have here now as game is not plenty enough for a man to derive much pleasure in hunting. The state sportsmen's association is going to make a desperate effort to have a law passed shortening the open season on woodcocks and squirrels. It is my opinion that most of our pheasants are killed by those hunting woodcocks and squirrels, therefore a shorter season on the former will be beneficial to the latter. I do not think there are enough woodcocks in this part of the state to justify a sportsman to hunt them. I have hunted in this part of Pennsylvania for twenty years, and I do not remember of ever seeing a half dozen in any one day in that time. If a law is enacted that will keep guns out of the woods and fields we will have more game than we have now.

Some three years since the Spring Chicken Gun Club leased 2,000 acres of land along the Little Beaver Valley for a hunting preserve, and at the close of the season we left it well stocked with plenty of good, strong quails. The Winter was mild, feed plentiful and cover good, and we congratulated ourselves on having a place we could call our own to hunt on. The following November found a friend and myself on the grounds expecting to have royal sport, but we were sadly disappointed. The first day, early in the morning, about one-fourth of a mile from where we were stopping, our dogs scented game, roaded some distance and came to a grand point. It was a grand sight to look upon and we let them hold the point for some minutes, when we walked in and one lone quail flushed, dropped nicely with the first barrel and was retrieved by old Sport, who seemed elated over his success as a bird finder. We were much surprised, however, as we expected a good big bevy to rise in front of us. We hunted all the rest of that day and did not find another bird, and so far as I know none of the club members had much better success.

I read in the AMERICAN FIELD many articles on game protection. Some advocate non-export laws. Now I do not like that idea at all. I think if a sportsman is allowed to kill game in a state he should be allowed to take it home with him. Some advocate a twenty-five dollar license for shooters who are not residents of a state. I do not think that just either, for we have among us as true sportsmen as live who are too poor to stand the expenses of a trip and a license fee of twenty-five dollars for a few days' shooting.

Now I know some will say if a man is too poor to pay the license and stand the expense of a trip, he should stay at home, but I do not. I say to all true sportsmen let us be just to all; let us abolish Spring shooting, shorten the open season, have uniform game laws in all the states in the North and stop the sale of game in all states. If we can stop the sale of game and thereby the business of the market-shooter and the game dealer, it will do more for game preservation than all the game laws we now have. BAD SHOT.

HOW SHALL WE PRESERVE THE GAME?

OMAHA, NEB.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I inclose you a copy of a letter that I think explains itself, hoping that you will speak a good word for the object and invite the attention of Nebraska sportsmen especially to the vital necessity of immediate action in this matter. I know of no city where so much game is handled illegally as right here in Omaha, and it must be stopped. To do this I have started the following chain letter which is already bringing forth good results. I think this matter of the preservation of game should be a national affair, and I would like to hear from sportsmen and get their ideas on the subject. We have pretty good game laws here, but it seems impossible to enforce them, the principal reason being lack of funds. My idea at present is, to obtain a little money through these chain letters and have our gun club, the Bemis Park, attend to the prosecutions. I have time at present to attend to the funds, although I suppose as the matter grows the work will be such as to require a special man or men. The chain letter mentioned is as follows:

The problem at present before the lovers of the gun and dog is, "How shall we preserve our game?" Much has been said and written on this subject, but who has come forward and offered to subscribe any money toward establishing a permanent fund for the prosecution of violators of the game laws? I ask your kindly aid in establishing a permanent fund for the prosecution of said violators.

Make three copies of this letter, as I have done, changing the date, and put the next highest number at the top, numbering them all the same, and sign your name. Return this letter with one cent (or more) to Edwin A. Shepherd, Bee building, Omaha, Neb., and the name and addresses of the three to whom you have written; and they are asked to do likewise.

Anyone not wishing to do this is asked to return this letter to Mr. Shepherd, that we may know the chain is broken. Although this may seem a small thing to you anyone breaking this chain will involve serious loss to the enterprise. Kindly give this your immediate attention and oblige EDWIN A. SHEPHERD.

THE MINNESOTA GAME LAW

CROOKSTON, MINN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Our present Legislature is now at work and from the discussion that has taken place it looks as if we are to have some changes in our present game laws; and it is very important that every sportsman be on the alert and have his representative in the Legislature help shape whatever legislation may be attempted.

The first step to be taken should be to close the markets at all seasons of the year against the sale of all kinds of wild game found in the country. Next the open season on deer should be changed from November 10 to December 1; on prairie chickens the open season should be from September 1 to November 1; on grouse, pheasants, quails or partridges, from September 1 to December 1. The law should also prohibit the shooting of ducks in the Spring.

The wild game found within the limits of a state is for the use of the people of that state. It is for them to say whether the game shall be used to enrich the market-hunter and a few marketmen and game-dealers, whether it shall be used as a delicacy for the tables of the rich and prosperous business men of one or more large cities in the state, or whether it shall be used to furnish sport and recreation during a certain portion of the year and under certain conditions, under which the poor man or the man of moderate means may enjoy the sport alike with the rich man.

The time is near when it will only be a question of a few years before all our wild game will be a thing of the past unless the game market is closed at all seasons of the year. Last season there were shipped from this section of the state 1,000 prairie chickens daily, and it is safe to say two-thirds of them spoiled before they reached the cold storage houses.

A. G. ANDERSEN.

TO KANSAS SPORTSMEN

TOPEKA, KAN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Realizing that the AMERICAN FIELD is read each week by nearly every member of a gun club and the majority of sportsmen in our state, I ask the publication of the following notice to Kansas sportsmen:

At the last meeting of the Kansas State Sportsmen's Association, held in Topeka last June, I presented a draft of a bill for the better protection of game in this state, and after consideration the bill was approved and referred to a committee to be appointed by the president-elect, which committee was directed to see that the bill was properly introduced at the next session of the Legislature and every effort made to secure its passage. As chairman of this committee I handed the bill to Mr. Gardenhire, member of the House from Shawnee County, who introduced it on Wednesday, January 16. The bill is numbered "H. B. 273. An act for the protection of birds." It is known as the Gardenhire game bill.

I now wish and ask that every sportsman in the state of Kansas, desiring to forward the interests of game protection, and who is willing to perform his part in preventing the entire extinction of our rapidly disappearing game supply, immediately write the representative from his county, or any other member of either house of the Legislature with whom he is acquainted, requesting and urging him to support this bill. This should be done promptly, and care should be taken to specify the bill by number and name, as one or two other bills of similar character are pending, which have not, however, the ratification or approval of the state association. J. C. CLARK.

NOTES

AT a recent informal meeting of the Saginaw (Mich.) Game Protective Association the question of the open seasons on game and fish was thoroughly discussed and the prevailing opinion on this question seemed to be that the open season for deer, partridges, turkeys and quails should be from October 15 to December 1. It was also thought that a law should be passed giving protection to rabbits and that the use of ferrets in their pursuit should be prohibited. August 15 to December 1 was thought to be the proper season for woodcocks. Concerning the duck season it was thought that the present dates are all right but in the matter of the proposed $25 license for non-resident hunters there was some objection. The majority thought that a $5 or $10 license for non-residents is enough and that resident hunters should pay a small license fee, the money thus received to be applied for the protection of game in the state. The open season for fish is at present May 1 to September 1, and there is a desire on the part of many persons to increase the length of the season. The gentlemen present thought that possibly April 15 might do to begin the season and the same date for closing for trout and grayling, with stringent measures for the protection of trout as to the killing and shipping. The present law for the protection of bass is somewhat of a dead letter and it was thought that it should be revised. A petition is going around asking for a change in the fish law as far as the river is concerned. The gentlemen expressed the opinion that the law should not be changed as far as the net fishing is concerned, but that, as at the present time the channel is often closed by the nets, some construction should be placed on the present law that would prevent this, and which would show plainly the meaning of the statute. The association hopes to secure the necessary legislation to carry out its ideas and the matter will be placed in proper form at the next meeting.

AFTER an almost incomprehensible amount of work and no little expense on the part of I. Walter Sharpe, his three much approved but little-acted upon-by-the-sportsmen-of-Indiana game and fish bills, have been killed in the Indiana legislature in almost the twinkling of an eye. It is a shame, a burning shame, that he was left almost single-handed to secure the passage of these bills. It seems that practically none of the legislators had been spoken to or written to about game and fish interests. Well, maybe this will teach the sportsmen of Indiana the lesson that comfortable inactivity will always result thus. Perhaps two years hence may see the sportsmen get a hustle on themselves. Under a deceptive title a bill has already passed its second reading—H. B. 146—prohibiting the killing of quails for five years. There is no sense in passing such a bill, as quail prospects are now better than for two years. But it will perhaps in the end be the best if this bill shall pass, then many sportsmen will be brought to a realizing sense of their inactivity. Two years ago ex-Representative J. H. Claypool and the writer spent two days in the legislature combating the five-year non-killing quail bills. This year an offensive campaign was planned, but it looks like there will not even be a successful defensive one. Personally I care but little if the non-killing quail bill is passed. In fact, I think it will do good in the end in arousing sportsmen to their interests. Mr. Sharpe is completely discouraged, and I say, under the circumstances, let the five-year non-killing quail law become a law for two years.

Connersville, Ind. HYATT L. FROST.

THE South Dakota Fish and Game Protective Association has prepared and introduced Senate Bill No. 127 (a copy of which I send you under separate cover). The bill, as you will see, provides for a game and fish commissioner and endows said commissioner with sufficient power to enforce the main idea of the law, i. e., the protection of game and fish within our state. This view should surely meet with the approval of every sportsman, whether he be a citizen of this or an adjoining state. The prairie chickens, like the buffaloes, have made their last stand within the borders of North and South Dakota, but the inroads made among their numbers by market-hunters, trappers and other persons far beneath the make-up of a sportsman, are rapidly diminishing their numbers to such an extent that within a very short time, like the buffaloes, they will be a thing of the past. The bill provides for an open season sufficiently long to satisfy anyone, and if the birds are protected as provided by the bill, the shooting of prairie chickens within this state will always continue to be one of the best sports known to the huntsman; but without a game warden system the supply will soon dwindle down to so few in number that a man who loves to go afield with dog and gun will not get a chance for a single shot, though he travel many a mile.

Mitchell, S. D. F. P. STEARNS, Secy.

THE game law bill prepared by the California State Sportsmen's Association has already been introduced in the legislature of that state by Mr. Flint of San Benito. It makes the close season for valley quail from February 15 to October 15; for mountain quail from February 15 to August 15; for doves from February 15 to July 1; for male deer, October 15 to July 15 of the year. following it makes it a misdemeanor to kill pheasants within three years from the passage of the act; to kill spotted fawn, female deer, elk or mountain sheep at any time; to destroy the eggs of quails, robins, doves, pheasants, or grouse; to offer for sale the meat or hide of deer. It also prohibits hotels, market men or cold storage companies to offer for sale any quails or ducks except between November 15 and January 15, and prohibits sportsmen from using a shotgun larger than a 10-gauge. This bill prohibits also the killing, at any time, except for educational or scientific purposes, any meadowlark, canary, oriole, hummingbird, thrush, mockingbird, or the robbing of their nests The close season for black bass is fixed from January 1 to July 1; for lobsters or crawfish, May 15 to July 15; for speckled brook or salmon trout, November 1 to May 1 of the year following; fresh salmon, August 1 to October 1.

MR. J. W. GREY, of Siskiyou County, Cal., writing recently to Mr. F. D. Gordon, of Marysville, Cal., has the following to say regarding the deer in his section and his experience with a wildcat: "The deer in this section have been having a hard time of it; the snow was three feet deep for five weeks. I packed hay on snowshoes to all the deer within my reach, but now, since the thaw, we have some bare ground and they are making it all right. I saw thirteen in one bunch to-day. During the time the snow was deep I was riding a colt of my own raising. Of course we could not get out of the beaten path and going up a hill I met a wildcat or lynx. He would not get out of the way and I could not. I saw he was determined to jump upon the colt, so I turned back and hitched my horse to an oak tree beside the trail and then went back to Mr. Cat. When I got within ten feet of him he jumped at my face. I threw out my left arm as a guard and as he struck it I hit him in the breast with my right fist and knocked him about six feet. He jumped again and grabbed me by the thigh with his sharp teeth, but I finally got him off and kicked and trampled him to death. I don't care to try it over again. He was driven to it by hunger as there was nothing in his stomach."

THE appointment of Chas. S. Osborne as state game and fish warden of Michigan, by the governor, is a case of putting the right man in the right place. This may easily be said without any reflection upon Mr. Hampton, his predecessor. Mr. Osborne is a sportsman tried and true, who knows the requirements and duties of the office and has the courage and firmness to discharge those duties without fear or favor. He will appoint ten deputy wardens and they will have to be men of the same stamp. The duties begin on February 1, and it is expected that Mr. Osborne will be in Lansing during the period when action is taken on the game laws. Mr. Osborne is not only a sportsman of the right sort, but a bright newspaper man as well, having been owner and editor of the Soo News for three or four years past, previous to which time he was engaged on the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, and later the Mining Gazette, of Florence, Wis. Mr. Osborne's appointment gives great satisfaction.

THE Blooming Grove Park Association an organization of prominent business men of New York City and vicinity who seek pleasure in Spring and Fall in the association's game and fish preserve in Pike County, Pa., held its annual meeting at the Hoffman House, New York, on the evening of February 1. The meeting was largely attended and the report of the secretary-treasurer showed the association to be in a prosperous condition, the club house at Blooming Grove the past year having made $832.66. In the report of the executive committee it was shown that the association owns 16,000 acres of land, more than 5,000 acres of which is heavily timbered, and leases 4,000 acres more so as to control the hunting and fishing privileges. "Grouse shooting," says the committee, "which promised well early in the season, did not prove a success. Seventy-five out of these birds were killed, seven deer, four lynxes, two minks and considerable small game."

THE Michigan State Fish and Game Protective League, which embraces in its membership most of the more prominent sportsmen of the state, at a recent meeting held at Lansing, agreed upon the bills the legislature of that state will be asked to pass. The deer season is made the same in both peninsulas, from October 15 to November 1, no person is to kill more than two deer in one season, and the use of dogs, pitfalls and artificial lights are prohibited. The open season for squirrel shooting is from September 1 to November 30; that for snipes and woodcocks, from August 1 to November 30; and that for quails and partridges from October 15 to November 30. The sale of quails, partridges and woodcocks is prohibited, duck shooting in the Spring is permitted, and non-resident hunters are to be required to pay a license fee of $25 for hunting in the state.

THE Linwood Gun Club, recently organized at St. Paul, Minn., has leased an elegant duck marsh within about thirty miles of St. Paul, for a period of ten years, upon which a club house will be erected in the Spring. The leased grounds are said to be the best in [illegible] mallards, woodducks and redheads, and [illegible] will be so located that shooting can [illegible] door, as it were. The shooting on the [illegible] to two days in each week during [illegible] members of the club only are permitted to shoot on the grounds.

THE Fox River Hunting and Fishing Club was recently organized at Oshkosh, Wis., with a membership of fifty, and the following gentlemen were elected officers for the first year: President, Joseph Arnold; vice-president, E. S. Siewert; secretary, Daniel Whitzel; treasurer, Charles Sweet; directors, Charles Maulick, H. E. Tanner, William Faber, Henry Ingles and C. L. Rundel. The club owns 500 acres of land on the Wolf and Fox rivers, on which it will erect a club house.

THE people of Stevens County, Wash., are demanding at the hands of their legislature a more stringent game law. They claim that the December open season should be abolished, and this once done would afford all the relief desired. They say the slaughter of deer during the month of December, each year, is simply appalling, and has resulted in almost exterminating these denizens of the forest from the ranges of Stevens County.

A REPORT from New Haven, Dunn County, Wis., tells of the finding of the dead body of a game warden (supposed to be that of Warden Hicks) on the bank of Hay River, near Best Settlement, on January 31, with three bullet holes in it. It is supposed that the warden had been in pursuit of parties that were killing deer illegally, and that an encounter ensued, resulting fatally to the warden. So far as has been learned no clew to the parties who did the murder has been obtained.

REPRESENTATIVE MCDONALD, of Moultrie County, Ill., has introduced a bill in the House of the Illinois legislature, changing the open season on quails in that state, from October 1 to October 15, and extending the season to January 1, each year, giving two weeks more of open season than now.

THE board of supervisors at Visalia, Cal., has passed a law protecting the Mongolian pheasants, wild turkeys and Virginia quails, that are now and will be placed in the foothills of that county by the Visalia Sportsmen's Club, for three years.

THE College City Hunting and Fishing Club is the name of a new sportsmen's organization recently organized at Galesburg, Ill. The incorporators are F. W. Phillips, C. C. Craig and Josiah Babcock Jr.

A PARTY of sportsmen in New Britain, Conn., have formed a syndicate and will purchase, it is said, about 4,000 acres of land in the Adirondack Mountains to be used as a game preserve.

PRAIRIE CHICKENS are very plentiful here this Winter, and next season will see lots of good sport. There are some quails, more than common of late years.

THE AMERICAN FOXHOUND

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In reply to Dr. Hetfenger I would say that a man need not be known in the [illegible] field to be a fox-hunter. It is more than probable that I hunted foxes and knew what a foxhound was before Dr. Hetfenger was born, and I will strain my native modest enough to say that I am known and honored where Dr. Heffenger was never heard of.

I [illegible] positively that there have been many out-[illegible] our hounds since the days of Lafayette. [illegible] beagle and pointer have been drawn [illegible] from the pointer did the dished faces so common in Dr. Heffenger's pet type come from? Who ever heard of dished faces being hound characteristics? Why, Mr. Wm. Arkwright, a prominent English owner of dogs, is now lamenting the fact that hound blood has got into pointers and given them "hound heads," i. e., drooping noses.

Despite Dr. Heffenger I say there is an American hound. Who that ever saw Mr. Kinney's Ned did not recognize that he was an American hound? And if Dr. Heffenger wants to know how good a hound he is, even when put against Logan (that no hound ever owned by Dr. Heffenger has a ghost of a show with), let him ask Mr. Kinney. Has Dr. Heffenger a hound that can stand up with Ned on a cold trail or an all-day chase? Any man with half a dog eye in his head can pick out lots of hounds at shows that he knows are American hounds by their similarity in type to Ned. Head is the only thing that does identify type. I will guarantee that I can cover the heads of six native hounds and six pointers, shave the hounds' tails, and Dr. Heffenger cannot pick three of each out of the lot by their "bodies and feet."

If there is no American hound, what breed was it that Dr. Heffenger made a standard for? Was it the pure mongrel "'arf-and-'arf" English-American hound? Did Dr. Heffenger see what a member of the world-wide famous Quorn Hunt (of England) says of Logan and Ned? I did not start this with the notion of doing nothing but puffing Ned, but if Dr. Heffinger is such a lover of "the beautiful, proud standing, courageous hound" I suggest that he see Ned's picture and tell me where he ever saw a "prouder standing" or a more "beautiful" hound. Fiddlesticks! Dr. Heffenger dreams of hounds, aspires to some ideal, and will arrive at a grand mongrel when he gets done. If the English hounds, "the superb specimens seen to-day," are so superior to our American hounds why don't Dr. Heffenger stick to them? What does he want a mongrel for? Why does he say that an American hound built on his patent lines can beat an English hound—— oh, I don't know how much, but Dr. Heffenger's own standard will tell you all about it. Does not Dr. Heffenger know that there are packs of native hounds in this country that a celebrated English hunting man says no horse can live with?

In almost every county south of New York they have what they call a "strain," and it is a great strain on anyone's constitution to read what they say about the various "strains." All have the best—Avent, Goodman, Walker, Whitlock, the July, etc., etc., strains that can all beat the world on paper, but the whole lot of them combined cannot catch a healthy red fox where I live, here in Steuben County, N. Y. A northern trained hound is no good south of the Ohio River unless he is as deaf as I am, for they cannot stand the racket they make in the "hunting world."

Just as good dogs are bred in the backwoods as in the town, and if the judge of the future is to first consider "legs, feet and body" then the future will have the same old lot of mongrel mixtures they have now, the crossroad type. If Dr. Heffenger knows so well who is to judge at New York and Boston he might send the awards at once and end the suspense. I can name the winner as soon as I know who is to judge.

I am an American with a pedigree and the blood of Otis, Putnam, Warren, Hartwell and Gibson courses in my veins. Can Dr. Heffenger say as much, or that he has a better right than I to decide on the shape of an American foxhound's head? I ran foxhounds of my own breeding at public trials, and won with them, before anyone ever heard of Dr. Heffenger. I'll run Young Pride of Hornell and Dan T now against any two foxhounds owned by Dr. Heffenger. My foxhounds are of a distinct type, not "crossroad-English-mongrel pot-lickers or hang-dog monstrosities."

In my travels I have seen many of Dr. Heffenger's "proud standing, beautifully formed, courageous and thoroughly game hounds." Mr. Avent had a pack on the grand circuit about three years ago, "warranted to catch a red fox," and the English Stock-Keeper's report of the New York show said "they could probably catch cockroaches better, as they had muzzles like ant-eaters.'

Dr. Heffenger should remember that America is a big country and that there are many fox-hunters besides the Brunswick club and the National Fox-Hunters' Association, many who hunt for pleasure or pelts and not to see how much noise they can make.

J. Otis Fellows.

Tuckahoe, N. Y.

Editor American Field:—Dr. Heffenger evidently intended to squash the impudent foreigner who permitted [illegible] that there is such a dog as the [illegible] nd. Whereas he, a blue-blooded New [illegible]ca[illegible]res there is no such dog. Bueno, [illegible]vs [illegible]e needed not such heavy shot to [illegible] not know anything about foxhounds because I never run any hounds nor own a pack and was even born on foreign earth. Good heavens, must that all be to make one capable of seeing the difference between a mule and a jackass? If so, I offer my sincere pardon, but I hardly think that even most of his own kind will agree with the Doctor's arguments on the whole line. By the stroke of his pen he makes all his hounds weedy, puny, degenerated English foxhounds, and yet he is crowing about his special standard! For what is that standard meant if we have no American foxhounds, pray? He says they all sprang from imported Irish or English hounds; all right, we have all heard that dozens of times in the warfare of the Southern foxhound breeders, but also that that was some twenty-five, thirty or more years back, and quite hazy are the records thereof in many instances, and does Dr. Heffenger or anybody else think it so impossible that a side breed (what I take them to be) has formed itself by voluntary selection or through some such foreign infusion as beagle or bloodhound? And this latter blood shows very strongly in those hounds which I and many others think to be a distinct type and homogeneous to this country, and consequently correctly termed American foxhounds.

What the Doctor means is not what I mean, and even his gentlemanly (?) allusion to know-nothingism does not make me see it. He wants his hound to be a weedy English hound, but under what pretext? Is any American hound better in the average than the good English hounds if bred correctly and on the same grounds? I doubt it.

Of course the worthy Doctor will sweep me off completely again by asking if I have a pack. No, sir, I have neither the means nor the location, and my hobby for the last seven years has been the pointer, and I venture to say I have no pack of them but as many as the Doctor has hounds; besides my setters, beagles and terriers. But if ownership is the criterion to enable one to judge a breed and know its distinct particular, Dr. Heffenger would, I am afraid, have every breed in a bigger mess than the new standard hound is. I fully agree with him that the principal feature of a foxhound should be its hunting qualities, but the absolute ignoring of everything else will just foster a heedless and headless lightning-like running mongrel; and this only wanting hunting dogs in our American "field-trialism" produces in a few years a class of dogs which one will not pick up on the street if their record is not tagged on too, because the main and only object is to win, no matter with what, and consequently the breeder's art and intelligence are prostituted to this (excuse my strong, but true, expression) gambling vein of ours. But it seems to me like harnessing up a horse hind-foremost to breed only from such a dog's reputation. Yes, if there was an absolutely reliable record of blood lines, but usually it is only the name of winning that makes the breeders use the dog, no matter how foreign and consequently unhomogeneous the blood may be, and any breeder of experience knows the small chance of such mating.

Get a hound with distinct character (and I say he is here, older, I am sure, in character than Doctor Heffenger is in fox-hunting) and then develop him to what you want him to be in its character; but the hounds Doctor Heffenger and most fox-hunters of field trial fame are advocating do not look one like another. And it would not need so long to make anything one wished them to be, as is best shown in the short term of years it took to make the fox terrier a firm established typical breeding type, but not such dogs as are given as American foxhounds, which are not a harrier nor a hound; just "running dogs" would be the best term for them. At least I, who, as an artist, have made a specialty of the different types in our dogs, cannot understand how Dr. Heffenger, who denies one foreign born to have a right to see something which he as a native Yankee cannot or does not care to see, is not proud to grasp the chance to have at least one homogeneous breed. All others are all like myself, original to foreign earth; and whence the Doctor's ancestors come from too, unless he claims relation to Lo. How many of his comrades will indorse his condemnation of the American foxhounds I am curious to see; if they, or even he, have taken his quick flashfire as serious.

G. Muss-Arnolt.

NOTES

Hunting men will be glad to hear that Mr. H. C. Trigg, the keen and plucky old sportsman who dislocated his shoulder at Olympia and thirty-six hours afterward was in the saddle fulfilling his duties as one of the judges of the foxhound trials, is suffering no ill effects from the accident. In a letter dated February 2 he writes: "Am now busily engaged with my pamphlet on my foxhounds, which I trust will be of some interest to those that are fond of the sport. My shoulder is O. K., and I was in the saddle yesterday fourteen hours."

Foxhounds are offered for sale this week by Messrs. Stannard & Coleman, Sparta, Mich.; No. 11 John Street, Hoosick Falls, N. Y., and Mr. W. G. Packard, South Haven, Mich.

Fish and Fishing

THE FOURTH BIENNIAL REPORT OF THE STATE GAME AND FISH WARDEN OF MICHIGAN

By the courtesey of the late state game and fish warden of Michigan, Mr. Chas. S. Hampton, we glean the following from an advance copy of his biennial report to the governor of that state:

During January, 1894, the warden's effort to break up the illegal sale of game proved almost entirely successful, the parties arrested having all save one pleaded guilty when the warden called their attention to the provisions of the law and the supreme court's decisions upholding the same, although in every instance the accused parties had made preparations to defend themselves vigorously and determinedly.

During February, of the same year, special efforts were made to enforce the law regarding the killing of deer upon the Upper Peninsula with marked success in convicting violators, for which convictions the warden says his deputy there, Mr. Mayotte, is entitled to much credit. The number of known violations of the deer law was less in that part of the state than during former seasons, and there were fewer reports of spearing fishes through the ice.

During the latter part of the Summer there were less complaints than usual of violations of the game laws, the principal ones being a few cases of deer killing upon the Upper Peninsula and in remote parts of Lower Michigan and instances of dynamiting trout streams. The latter offense—from its nature—the warden found difficulty in obtaining adequate evidence upon which to make arrests with a fair chance of conviction. Success was attained in preventing the shipment of trout, convictions for that offense having made would-be violators shy of chancing punishment.

Special efforts were made to protect the deer of the Upper Peninsula during October of that year, and with marked success, for which Deputy Warden C. E. Brewster is awarded great credit, the records showing that more violators of the deer law were punished in that section of Michigan that month than during the first four years after the office of game warden was created in the state, and tons of game were seized.

During November the good work was followed up, many convictions were secured, and systematic efforts resulted in the prevention of many violations.

The warden congratulates the people of the state upon the fact that through having secured the coöperation of transportation companies for a system of watching all trains leaving the deer region and searching all baggage, freight and express, the export of venison from Michigan was almost entirely prevented.

Notice is taken of the fact that a strong public sentiment in favor of game laws and game protection is manifested and is constantly increasing. The statement is made that Michigan stands ahead of every state in the Union in the matter of fish and game protection, and the wonderful record of the conviction in 1894 of 324 violators and the collection of $3,320 in fines (not including costs), is cited as proof of the statement that the record is unparalleled; particularly so, when the small cost of the enforcement—as compared to that in other states—is taken into consideration.

Recommendations of amendments to the fish and game laws are made. Warden Hampton is not in favor of a law which would prohibit absolutely the sale of game, his first objection being that such a law would be considered as legislation in favor of the few who have time and can kill game, to the exclusion of the greater number. He is in favor of licensing hunters, a nominal fee from state residents and a larger fee from non-residents to be charged for each yearly license. The secretary of state should issue the licenses and the holder should be described therein for identification whenever necessary. A license should entitle the non-resident holder to the privilege of exporting a certain amount of game.

The fact is noted that the fish laws are very defective, and that a thorough overhauling is needed. It is recommended that one act be passed to govern fishing in boundary waters and one for inland waters. Among the provisions the warden recommends are the following:

"Regulating the character of nets, size of mesh, etc., and fixing a minimum weight and minimum length for various kinds of fishes. Forbidding putting sawdust or other filth in fishing waters. Regulating the depth of water in which gill nets may be set, so as to prevent catching fish off spawning beds in Fall. Forbidding the use of nets (except perhaps dip nets for soft fish) in streams and the use of anything except hook and line in inland lakes. On account of the large farmer population who insist upon the privilege of spearing soft fish in the streams in the Spring I believe it would be well to permit this, to prevent antagonizing the whole system. There should be a general provision for fish chutes in dams. In all possible cases the burden of proof should be put upon the defense."

The number of deer killed in 1894 could not be accurately ascertained, but Warden Hampton estimates the aggregate at eight thousand, and notes the gratifying circumstance that notwithstanding the large number reports from all parts of the state declare deer are becoming more plentiful; this, too, despite an estimate that there were about two thousand non-resident hunters in the state last Fall.

VIOLATIONS OF OHIO FISH LAWS

Canal Dover, O.

Editor American Field:—Being aware that the columns of the American Field are ever open when the interests of hunters and fishermen are to be promoted, I take the liberty to send these lines for publication. I do not claim any great ability as a writer on sporting topics, and therefore pray the almost countless readers of the paper to pardon this, my first attempt, as my motive is that I think the matter of importance to every lover of the rod and finny tribe and it should receive attention.

Our State Fish and Game Warden, Mr. L. K. Buntain, of Dayton, O., has an article in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 22, headed "The Pollution of Rivers and Streams in Ohio," in which he complains of it being very difficult to convict parties for killing fishes by polluting our streams.

I, for one, cannot see why it should be so. Right here, in our picturesque Tuscarawas River and on its left bank, a sewer pipe about twenty-four inches in diameter has been laid, opening into the stream to drain off the refuse fluid from a galvanizing establishment only two hundred yards off. This sewer pipe is visible to every passer-by upon a public highway, not twenty yards distant from a main bridge and thoroughfare. The substance that is drained off has a yellowish color, and its odor is quite offensive. That it contains acid and defiles the water there can be no doubt, and that it certainly is unwholesome and injurious to fishes is quite conclusive.

If our State Fish and Game Warden is in doubt about the impurity and injurious quality of this drainage he can easily get a quantity of the same and have it analyzed. He is employed and paid by the state, and I think it is his duty to see to such matters. He was in this locality for some time last season, while this very offense against the law existed. How it comes that he did not take notice of this case nor take steps to have such polluting stopped at once and have the guilty party suffer the penalty, I do not understand. If an officer appointed for the purpose of watching for violations of the law does not attend to such violations and have them corrected, but allows them to slip by unpunished, whom does he expect to attend to the same?

A similar case exists not over one-half mile from this place, in Sugar Creek, which debouches into the Tuscarawas River—a salt-works, with a distillery in connection—where the refuse, a rank poison, is drained into that stream.

These are only a few cases of which the writer has knowledge, and many more of a similar character may be found. I do not expect the State Fish and Game Warden to go and examine every brook and ditch in the state, for he certainly cannot do that, but where a thing is so public as the first case herein described, it should not be allowed to remain unpunished. There is another case to which I wish to call his attention: About one and one-half miles down this river a dam or dike has been put across the stream, to force water into a millrace for the benefit of one or two parties, without the slightest provision of a fishway, which is a perfect obstruction of the watercourse and contrary to the laws of our state. A similar structure exists about ten miles upstream, put in by a society of colonists; but they complied with the law by putting in such a fishway.

In conclusion I would suggest that State Fish and Game Warden Buntain investigate the truth of these statements. A TUSCARAWAS NOVUS HOMO.

[If every Ohio sportsman who knows of any such violations of the fish and game laws of that state will place his proofs before Warden Buntain, we feel certain that official will institute proceedings against the violators.—ED.]

THE MASSACHUSETTS TROUT CASE

GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Your readers no doubt remember something of the report which I sent the AMERICAN FIELD nearly a year ago of a case brought against R. E Follett (one of the fish commissioners of the state of Connecticut and superintendent for several years of the state hatchery at Windham, Conn.) for the illegal netting of trout from Lee Brook, in the town of Sheffield, Mass., in the District Court for Southern Berkshire, held in Great Barrington, Mass. At that trial (last Winter) Follett was found guilty and fined $150, while James M. Davis and M. McDonough, his assistants in the netting, were each fined $10. From this decision Follet and Davis appealed to the Superior Court, while McDonough paid his fine.

The appealed cases have just been tried at the January term of the Superior Court, sitting at Pittsfield, Judge Maynard presiding, and on January 30 Follett was found guilty of illegally netting sixty trout and Davis guilty of illegally netting two trout; these numbers having been agreed upon by counsel for both prosecution and defense. Each fish constitutes a separate offense, for which the fine is $5. At the last trial, after the evidence had been submitted and the counsel for both sides had argued the point of how far ownership in cultivated trout extended—the defendant claiming that it went so far that he might reclaim after several months trout put into an open stream, a part only of which he controlled by lease, as a sanitary measure, they being diseased—the prosecution claimed that, having once put the trout into the stream, he thereby lost control of them, and hence ownership in them. The latter view was confirmed by Judge Maynard, for in giving the case to the jury he instructed them to render a verdict as above; stating that the law on this subject was meant to protect the fish-culturist and also the public at large, and that one riparian owner had no right to interfere with the rights in a stream of another riparian owner because the first happened to be engaged in fish-culture while the other was not.

This is the view taken by Judge Sanford of the District Court also.

In the course of cross-examination Follett said that, although a fish commissioner of the state of Connecticut, he did not know whether he had lost his residence in that state, although he had a home in Sheffield, Mass. He also stated that he stopped netting in 1893 (when the offense for which he was tried was committed), only because of the pressure of other business; and admitted that he did not know whether he had taken out other trout than those he had previously put in; and that he meant to get all he could, and that wild (or native) trout were better for his purposes (getting spawn) than the cultivated trout which he had put into the stream two or three months before in a diseased condition, although he claimed that he could readily distinguish his cultivated trout from the wild ones, even after a year's residence in the same waters with them. He also admitted having netted 150 trout.

The verdict rendered in this case is very gratifying to the sportsmen of Southern Berkshire, who have taken much interest in the case and desire to thank both Game Warden Benj. Smith, of Pittsfield, and District Attorney C. L. Gardner for their effective work in this case in behalf of sportsmanship and especially fish protection.

On the morning of January 31 there was a rumor that Follett had filed exceptions to the finding of the Superior Court on the previous day, and that he will carry the case to the Supreme Court. Will let you know as soon as I can whether the rumor is confirmed or not.

MAIIAIWE.

NOTES

THE Michigan State Game and Fish Protective League has been in session at Lansing, and has completed a bill to be presented to the legislature for enactment making some radical changes in the game and fish laws of the state. By the new bill the open season for speckled trout is unchanged, being from May 1 to September 1. The open season for bass is changed to read from June 1 to November 15. No trout of less than six inches in length nor bass of less than ten inches in length can be taken, and when any such may be hooked the law requires the angler to carefully handle the same and to release them at once, placing them in the water. The use of nets is absolutely prohibited in all inland waters, including St. Mary's River, Lake St. Clair, and St. Clair and Detroit rivers. Fishing through the ice is prohibited; as is spearing at any time in inland waters, No fishing can be done within 100 feet of any fishway, and in inland waters fishes can be taken only with hook and line. This latter clause is good so far as it goes. But, as the AMERICAN FIELD has suggested, in previous issues, the desired protection is not given by the language used. The last sentence should read: In inland waters game fishes may be taken only with hook and line, by fair angling; the use of trot-lines, set-lines or other devices of hooks and lines, other than rod, reel, hook and line—as used in what is termed fair angling—being absolutely prohibited at all times in such waters. We suggest this addition to the law to the consideration of the Michigan sportsmen who desire to protect the fishes, knowing that the proposed law as now worded opens the way for unscrupulous fishermen to take bass and other game fishes murderously with set-lines or other devices than hook and line.

THE fellows who are doing illegal fishing for the market, with nets, through the ice, on Calumet Lake, and in that vicinity, in Illinois, will do well to keep a weather eye out for Deputy Warden Albert Lenk. That efficient official recently took in five men who were engaged in the above occupation. Frank Bahn and Nick Germyer were arrested for gill-netting in Calumet Lake and arraigned before Justice Wilder of Kensington. They were convicted and each paid a fine of ten dollars and costs of four dollars. George Rocinski, of Hegewisch, was taken before the same judge, and he also paid ten dollars and four dollars costs. Nick Owinga, of Pullman, was caught with one hundred and fifty pounds of silver bass in a hoop-net, on Calumet Lake, and taken before the same judge. It being the man's third conviction, he was fined thirty dollars and six dollars costs, and upon his refusal to pay up he was committed to jail for sixty days. John Fleischer and Jake Gomer, of Blue Island, were tried before Justice Schaffer of Riverdale. The former was fined ten dollars and two dollars costs. As it was the first offense for the latter his penalty was remitted. The warden has a pocketful of warrants now, and the fellows who are violating the fish law in the locality named had better look sharp or he'll nab some of them.

THE wholesale and retail fish dealers of New York are instituting a movement to stop the illegal sale of brook trout in that city. They say that although the open season does not begin until April 15, for many weeks trout have been received by New York commis[illegible] packed in boxes and marked smelts [illegible] epicures pay big prices for them, thi[illegible] illegal traffic; that an order for a large [illegible] filled at two days' notice, and that th[illegible] New England. This practice, it is claimed, so surfeits the wealthier fish eaters that when the law-abiding dealers have trout on hand in the proper season the demand is so small a paying business cannot be done; and as a matter of business policy, they wish to break up the illegal traffic. We would suppose the fish and game protective associations or the game wardens of New England would investigate this unlawful appropriation, for mercenary motives, of their finest stream fishes, and put a stop to the same.

RECENT advices from Connecticut declare that a movement is on on foot there to cause the removal of State Fish Commissioner R. E. Follett, on the grounds that he is not a resident of Connecticut and has not been for some time past. In the trial in Massachussets courts last season in which Follett was charged with netting trout contrary to law, the evidence devulged the fact that Follett was a resident of Sheffield, Mass. As soon as the facts in the case became known it is said steps were at once taken to have him removed from office, and that in a few days the matter will be formally presented to Gov. Coffin, and he will be asked to remove Follett.

THE Tri-County Fish and Game Protective League, of Michigan, held a meeting at Detroit, the night of January 29, and elected the following officers: President, Dr. H. O. Walker; vice-president, A. B. Avery, Port Huron; secretary-treasurer, George A. Johnson; executive committee, William T. Sweet and Geo. W. Smith, of Mt. Clemens, Chris. C. Smith, Algonac, H. N. Botsford, Port Huron, James N. Dean, James Roach, Dr. H. O. Walker and George A. Johnson of Detroit.

FISHING through the ice for pickerel, in the states of New York and New Jersey still affords good sport to anglers who are hardy enough to stand the severe weather. On Lake Champlain big strings are being taken daily of yellow perch and pickerel, and on Greenwood Lake, in New Jersey, one fisherman recently hauled through holes in fifteen-inch ice thirty-seven pickerel and one big perch in two days' fishing with tip-ups.

THE following was sent in as an open letter to Kingfisher, alias "Jeems Mackerel:" "Why don't you write up your last fishing trip? Let's have it soon.

"Cincinnati, O. H. W. V."

[The Editor of the AMERICAN FIELD will be pleased to receive Kingfisher's manuscript.—ED.]

THE market fishermen of Saginaw (Mich.) and the vicinity have appointed a committee to visit Lansing and protest against the passage of a bill prohibiting the use of nets in the Saginaw River. They have formed a permanent organization for the purpose of securing legislation favorable to their interests.

A BILL has been introduced into the Wisconsin legislature by Mr. Buckstaff, of Oshkosh, which, among other things, prohibits the use of nets in the Fox River, the shipment of fish beyond the state borders, and deer killing save in the month of November.

A LARGE number of fishes from the Illinois River are being shipped to New York, from Lacon and vicinity, it is claimed. Perhaps that matter will bear investigation on the part of the Illinois state game and fish warden.

FROM Punta Gorda, Fla., comes the report that the first tarpon of the season was caught January 25, at Naples, by Mrs. B. B. McGregor, of New York. The weight of the fish was 100 pounds.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 3

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Storer's snake—Storeria occipitomaculata.—This species is quite similar, both in size and coloration, to the last, but may be distinguished by having only fifteen rows of scales on its back and sides. It also has a salmon [illegible] spot back of its head and a small spot of the same [illegible] just behind the corner of the mouth. It is a rather [illegible] in Michigan and has been met with only occasionally by collectors in sections that I have visited. This little snake has, like the last, a wide range, being found from Maine to Wisconsin and south to Georgia and Texas. I know nothing about the breeding habits of this snake, but judge that its ways are similar in this respect to the [illegible] as [illegible]s, which is known to be ovoviviparous.

Fox-snake; pilot-snake; pilot—Coluber vulpinus (B. & G.).—A large snake; said to reach the length of five and six feet. Tail one-fifth its length, tapering and ending in a hard straight spine. I know nothing of the species and embrace it as a Michigan snake on the authority of W. H. Smith, M. D., who lists it in his catalog in Science News, Vol. I, No. 23; and Dr. M. Miles, Geological Report, 1861, who says: "The only specimens of this species collected are from the vicinity of Saginaw Bay, where it is found in abundance. Although perfectly harmless it has the unfounded reputation, in that locality, of being venomous and is therefore much dreaded." Dr. Smith lists it under the common name of Fox's blacksnake, although I believe it is not generally considered a blacksnake. This is a spotted serpent and is considered by some a variety of c. guttatus, the next species. It is known as the pilot, generally, although I have never been able to learn how or why this name was adopted. Numerous stories, none of which I believe, associate it with the rattler, and it is said to kill all members of this family with which it meets.

Professor O. P. Hay, in describing this snake in his work on the reptiles of Indiana, says: "Dorsal scales twenty-five rows. The ground color above varies from gray to brown and reddish, many of the scales having a broad edge of cream color. There is a dorsal series of broad blotches of a brown or chocolate color, and these are edged with black. These blotches, about sixty from head to tail, are from three to six scales long."

The fox snake is said to be very pugnacious and will bite and show fight, but, of course, is harmless aside from its power to scratch the skin. It is, like the other serpents of Michigan, undoubtedly beneficial to the agriculturist.

NOTES

In regard to the birth of those little rattlesnakes at Lincoln Park, Chicago, permit me to say this is nothing new to me. I have lived for upward of forty years where rattlesnakes were very numerous—the small, dark-spotted, prairie rattlers. I have killed hundreds of them, as many as forty-two in a single day and from the same den—a hole in a gravelly hill, covered with briers and hazel bushes—near a wild prairie. I have captured many alive, for amusement and in order to better study their habits and peculiarities. I have captured them as early as March, on warm days, when they ventured out of the den for a little sunshine, and have kept them during the whole Summer, but never knew a rattlesnake to lay an egg either in captivity or otherwise. I have known them to have young, when at liberty and in captivity. The young are generally from eight to ten inches in length when first born. They have no rattle, but resemble the young of the common water-snake, which is hatched from eggs. It is a well-known fact that on the approach of danger the mother snake utters a hissing sound somewhat like that of a goose, and then the young may be seen coming from all directions and glide into the mouth of their mother. Rattlesnakes are no exception. This method of protection is practised by snakes that lay eggs and those which do not. I have kept rattlesnakes for a whole Summer which tasted no food during that time, and others which would swallow live frogs, toads, mice and insects. Though I have seen them drop their young many times when at liberty, the last time I witnessed this event was six years ago. A man attended the Central Ohio Fair and gave daily exhibitions of handling rattlesnakes. He had upward of fifty, varying in length from eighteen inches to four feet, confined in crates. The fair closed Saturday, and the next day I visited his tent, and while I remained a large black rattlesnake gave birth to fourteen young ones, each about nine inches long, which the man removed as delivered and placed them in paper boxes where the sun shone on them. This man gave me a very interesting account of his experience with rattlesnakes, and offered me one dollar apiece for all I could catch; but the season was almost past.

Mechanicsburg, O. S. M. HARPER.

At New Orleans, on the night of February 3, a fight took place between a huge bear and the big lion Nero, which was not a part of the program. It occurred after the evening's performance, when the brutes were fed, and the king of the forest fully sustained his claim to the title. The two beasts were in a cage with only a partition separating them. Big chunks of meat were thrown in to them. The bear was given the smaller share and finished his meal first. Then he glanced sullenly through the [illegible] and made a sudden lunge to get at him. [illegible] gave [illegible] and soon the two animals were [illegible] death struggle. It lasted, however, [illegible] two brutes swayed backward and [illegible] when suddenly Nero disengaged [illegible]'s embrace and with a powerful blow of his huge paw came squarely down on the bear's back, breaking the spinal column as if it had been a twig. The bear fell over dead and his conqueror walked sedately back to where he had been eating. Lying down he calmly resumed his meal, at the same time keeping one eye on the carcass of his enemy.

On February 3, at Fort Worth, Tex., a motion for an injunction to restrain Col. Boone and his associates from fighting the lion Parnell and the grizzly bear Siskiyou was argued, and the injunction was made perpetual. The judge on the bench said the exhibtors took all risks, and that if there was any fighting done by the animals the exhibitors would answer for contempt of court. The interested parties have spent hundreds of dollars advertising the fight in Fort Worth and adjacent towns.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 3

(Illustrated)

BY A. K. DELANEY

The Puget Sound

The magnitude of this great estuary of the Pacific is in keeping with the scale of vastness upon which Nature has erected almost everything throughout the Northwest. From Olympia, the capital of Washington, situated at the southern end of the Sound round the curve to the lighthouse at Cape Fluttery, where the strait of Juan de Fuca opens into the Pacific, is two hundred and five miles by the direct route taken by the steamers. From this main channel scores of arms and bays, nearly all navigable for deep sea vessels, indent the land and islands rise in all directions above the surface of the water. The shores of both mainland and islands are generally bold, usually rising quite abruptly to about three hundred feet above the level of the Sound, and are universally clad with evergreens. Along these shores, amid extremely picturesque and inviting scenery, are located many thriving cities and villages, the principal of which are Seattle, Tacoma and Port Townsend. The growth of these places, like that of many another western town, has been simply phenomenal.

When I first saw these cities, about the middle of April, 1887, the broad slopes that rise from the water's edge to the level of the tablelands above and where now stand pretentious business houses and palatial residences were great acreages of stumps and charred and fallen timber, telling the old story of the destruction of the primeval forest before the march of coming civilization. The lurid flames of burning log-piles have given way to the white glare of the electric lights, and instead of the voice of the lusty ox-driver, "haw Buck and gee Bright," is now heard the fierce hum of the electric motor graphically described by the heathen Chinee as "no pushee, no pullee, go allee samee."

The struggle for ascendency between Tacoma and Seattle reminds one of the old-time rivalry between St. Paul and Minneapolis, and it is difficult to predict which finally will take the lead. That both are destined to be large and wealthy cities is a foregone conclusion. From a population of 3,500 in 1880 Seattle had arisen to 35,000 in 1889, and at the latter date Tacoma, from a population of 2,500 in 1885, had reached 25,000. Neither has much the advantage of the other as to tidewater facilities, for the harbor of either is sufficiently spacious to ride the navies of the world. Each has within easy reach immense forests from which to draw timber supplies, and neither seems, as yet, to surpass the other in this industry, as the annual lumber cut of each, for 1889, aggregated 250,000,000 feet.

In natural resources Seattle has the Franklin Coal Mines, owned and operated by the Oregon Improvement Company, but against this single advantage the younger city advances the power and capital of the Northern Pacific Railway, which is apparently doing its level best for Tacoma. Against the sixteen brickyards of Tacoma, with an annual output of 32,000,000 bricks, Seattle trotted out her sixteen banks with an aggregate capital of $14,000,000. For the year 1889 Seattle claimed that 275 new business houses had been established within her limits, and Tacoma responded with 1,300 new structures, business and residential, for the same period, aggregating a cost of $6,000,000. Each was afflicted with that epidemic peculiar to western towns, the "real estate boom," and the transactions of each in this direction for the year 1889 were considerably over $14,000,000. If a person, wearing in the least degree the appearance of a tenderfoot from the East, inquires at Tacoma about Seattle he is informed that there is a small town of that name down the Sound, and if the same person chances to drop the word Tacoma at Seattle he is promptly and vigorously informed that Tacoma is nowhere. This rivalry has been extended to natural objects and the "City of Destiny," as Tacoma has dubbed herself, has sought to appropriate the magnificent peak that is the culminating point of the Cascade range by rechristening it "Tacoma" and dignifying the principal hotel of the city by that name; but Seattle instantly demurred and claimed the peak as all its own, and sought to perfect its title and at the same time perpetuate the mountain's original name by calling one of its chief hostelries the "Ranier" (pronounced, a la Seattle, Rong-ya). As to this claim of ownership both cities are doomed to disappointment, for no American viewing this peak from either the balcony of the Tacoma House or from the Normal School building at Seattle will consent to localize its name and fame. As one of the grandest and most impressive natural objects on the continent, it must ever be America's only. As one looks toward the south and east, from either city, the Cascade Range stands boldly out against the sky and from its midst this giant mountain rises 15,000 feet, its cone capped with shining snow. The fact that it stands out so completely without a rival no doubt adds to its majesty. To my mind it far surpasses either Mount Fairweather or Crillon, as seen from either Glacier Bay or the Pacific Main, and has no peer on the coast except St. Elias, which is too far removed from the confines of civilization to ever meet the gaze of many white men.

The Washington Monument at the Federal Capital and Mount Ranier of the Cascades are the only objects I have ever encountered upon which I never weary of looking and from which I have ever found it difficult to withdraw my gaze—the one the most magnificent structure of art in the East, the other the most majestic work of Nature in the West.

While the two more pretentious cities of the Upper Sound are struggling for supremacy, Port Townsend—located at the gates of the estuary—is steadily making progress, unaided by railway connections, having quadrupled its population in four years. It is delightfully situated and has one of the very best harbors on the entire coast, and holding the key to the Sound needs only railway communication to assure its rapid and permanent prosperity.

Indeed it is difficult to overestimate the future greatness of the state of Washington. That it is destined to be the Empire State of the Pacific Coast, outstripping both Oregon and California, needs no prophetic vision to foresee. It possesses enough of fertile soil to produce cereals for a dense population, to say nothing of export. Aside from its enormous timber supply it has iron, coal and the precious metals. Its climate, as a whole, is very equable and in some regions extremely delightful. To these must be added the incalculable advantages of the great estuary of Puget Sound, which at this time has become the terminal of four transcontinental lines of railway instead of one. The Union Pacific, which controls the Oregon Short Line, has terminal facilities at Tacoma, Seattle and Olympia. The Manitoba, or Great Northern, reaches from the Mississippi to the tidewaters of the Sound, and a line to New Westminster has been constructed, which opened connection with the Canadian Pacific.

The Puget Sound is some hundreds of miles nearer to China and Japan than San Francisco, and Portland is handicaped by the bar at the mouth of the Columbia River, which at times is impassable and must always be more or less of an obstruction to navigation, so that it seems inevitable that the main current of Asiatic trade must find its way into the Puget Sound, there to be grasped by the great transcontinental railway lines and borne by them to the East. The possibilities in this direction were demonstrated during 1889 by the Canadian Pacific, which transported a cargo of tea from Japan, via its own steamer from Yokahama to New Westminster and thence over its own railway to New York City, in twenty-two days. Fed by this ever-growing Asiatic trade, reinforced by an enormous coastwise commerce and drawing from the incomparably great natural resources of the interior of Washington, it is not difficult to foresee that, before the coming generation shall have reached the meridian of life, the Puget Sound will be the seat of many thriving cities and its shores and islands adorned with myriad handsome villas.

On the morning of April 20, 1887, after I had passed several interesting days along the Sound, the steamer Olympian—whose fame had reached us at Portland—came steaming up Commencement Arm, and a few minutes later was hauling up to the Tacoma dock. On her hurricane deck, just in front of the pilot house, stood a man about forty-five years old, five feet ten inches in height, with a close, well-knit frame, shoulders broad and a trifle stooping, face ruddy and bronzed from exposure to wind and weather, and clean shaven, except for a heavy, black, bristling mustache, his hands crammed deep into the side pockets of a heavy, blue, pilot-cloth overcoat reaching nearly to his ankles, and a black, slouched hat drawn well down over his eyes. Such was my first sight of Capt. James Carroll, the most skillful and notable navigator of the Pacific Coast, and master of the ship that was to take me to Sitka.

Captain Carroll is one of the characters of the coast, and is probably as widely known as any man between Mexico and Bering Strait. A dash of the gentleman, interwoven with the iron of an "old salt," and as he has made his way from the forecastle to the master's cabin it goes without saying that he is a seaman from the soles of his feet up and game to the death. He will hold his ship twenty-four hours if there is any sport on foot, and will stand in his oilskin coat and tarpaulin for hours in the midst of a drizzling rain to witness a slugging match, and the same afternoon he will appear in the ship's saloon at the five-o'clock dinner clad in the finest of raiment of faultless fit with a big, solitaire diamond gleaming from a shirt front of immaculate whiteness; but when the elements are unchained and tempest and danger are to be faced Capt. Carroll is always "on deck." In some things, no doubt, he resembles the mythical character of the Rockies known as "the hard citizen from the headwaters of Bitter Creek," but the stranded mariner or deadbroke miner, if half-way worthy, never draws in vain on Capt. Carroll. With equal sang froid he can puff his Havana from the ship's deck in the long twilight of an Alaskan evening, or descend alone into the hold of a burning ship and extinguish the flames with his own hands, or cling to the taffrail of a sinking steamer until the last human being is safe in the lifeboats, both exploits standing to his credit, the former on the Idaho and the latter at the wreck of the Great Republic. In less than an hour after I first met this singular compound of humanity my life was in his hands, as we went bounding over the waters of Puget Sound, headed for Alaska.

The Olympian is a magnificent steamer, one of Villard's early pets, and merits the fame she bears on this coast as she is splendidly equipped, and forges ahead like a trotting horse. As the Puget Sound Sound is entirely landlocked travel over it is like river navigation, and we slashed along at a splendid pace until a short halt was made at Seattle. During the forenoon the sky had been overcast, but shortly after pulling out from Seattle the clouds began to scatter and the sun came out. As the clouds lifted the Olympian Belt of the Coast Range appeared to the westward, square abreast of us, heavily blanketed with snow, and a few minutes later from the northward Mount Baker advanced his huge, ragged and clumsy pyramid in front of the curtain of receding clouds. Ranier was the last to put in an appearance, dead over the ship's stern, one hundred miles away, its broad base seemingly touching the water's edge and its lofty cone piercing the sky.

The afternoon was well advanced when we reached Port Townsend, the jumping-off place from the United States, where we delayed only long enough to clear the ship for Alaska, and an hour later we were well out on the southern end of the Gulf of Georgia, which there widens out into a large, broad estuary. There I got my first real sniff of the "salt, salt, sea air." A fresh breeze from the Pacific came sweeping up from the southwest through the strait of Juan de Fuca, which set the whitecaps in motion and the ship to dancing. It was exhilarating in the extreme, but when the shadows of evening began to fall and the ship swept past the island of San Juan, the last American land—given to us by Bismarck under an arbitration with Great Britain—and we crossed the channel toward Vancouver's Island, for the first time the sense of exile and expatriation overtook me; the ship was in British waters and my native land was fast receding from view. I walked aft and watched a beacon light, fitfully gleaming from the American shore, until it was lost in the receding distance and the coming darkness. Involuntarily Byron's lines of Childe Harold sprang to my lips:

Adieu, adieu! My native shore
Fades o'er the waters blue;
The night-winds sigh, the breakers roar
And shrieks the wild sea-mew.

Yon sun, that sets upon the sea,
We follow in his flight;
Farewell a while, to him—and thee—
My native land—Good Night.

A few short hours and he will rise
To give the morrow birth,
And I shall hail the main and skies,
But not my native earth.

Deserted is my good old hall,
Its hearth is desolate;
Wild weeds are gathering on its wall;
My dog howls at the gate.

For pleasures past I do not grieve,
Nor perils gathering near,
My greatest grief is that I leave
Few things that claim a tear.

Perchance my dog will whine in vain,
Till fed by stranger hands;
But long ere I come back again
He'd tear me where he stands.

And now I'm in the world alone
Upon the wide, wide sea:
But why should I for others groan
When none will sigh for me?

With thee, my bark, I'll swiftly go
Athwart the foaming brine;
Nor care what land thou bear'st me to
So not again to mine.

Welcome, welcome, ye dark blue waves!
And when you fail my sight,
Welcome, ye mountains and ye caves!
My native land—Good Night!

NOTES

Much interest has been excited in New York and New Jersey respecting the preservation of the wonderful Palisades of the Hudson, one of the most striking scenic beauties of the far-famed and historic stream. The Palisades rise from the westerly shore of the Hudson, but a short distance north of New York City, in New Jersey, and extend northerly into New York for many miles. Huge stone quarries are operated at the Palisades, but a feeling has begun to prevail, to the effect that such spoliation should cease, and that the grand rocky rampart should be preserved in its scenic magnificence for future generations. Propositions have been made that the two states should convert the sections within their lines into great public parks, to be improved from time to time as appropriations from the public funds could be secured, and that plan has elicited considerable discussion and comment from the press. Governor Werts, of New Jersey, however, in his late annual message to the legislature of that state, takes a very decided stand for the preservation of that part of the Palisades located in his state. He recommends "the enactment of a law providing for the appointment of a commission of three persons, to serve without compensation, empowered to negotiate and agree for the purchase by the state of any land or lands, whenever, in their opinion, it shall be necessary to purchase the same in order to preserve to the public any feature or object of natural scenery, or to secure such lands for any public use or purpose, and with the concurrence of the Governor (and other state officers, if thought best) to consummate such purchase; or, if unable to agree with the owners for such purchase, and such lands are desired for any public use or purpose, then, with the approval of said state officers, to institute proceedings for taking such land by condemnation." The inhabitants of both states, who love Nature and desire to preserve the beautiful scenery upon the banks of the "American Rhine," undoubtedly will use their influence to further any plan to forward that desirable consummation.

"AMONG THE OZARKS"

The land of big red apples, is an attractive and interesting book, handsomely illustrated with views of South Missouri scenery, including the famous Olden fruit farm of 3,000 acres in Howell County. It pertains to fruit raising in that great fruit belt of America, the southern slope of the Ozarks, and will prove of great value, not only to fruit growers, but to every farmer and home-seeker, looking for a farm and a home. TUESDAY

A heavy fall of rain and sleet and some snow prevented any running on Monday. The conditions were not favorable for good work, as the snow and sleet had melted during the night and this with the rainfall made the grounds very wet and soft, making it heavy running for the dogs.

ALL-AGE SETTER STAKES

Rodfield—Lillian Russell.—P. T. Madison's black, white and tan dog Rodfield, by Antonio—Nellie Hope, handled by John T. Mayfield, and Jackson-Denmark Kennel's black, white and tan bitch Lillian Russell, by Philip Gladstone—Lou G, handled by Thomas Bond, were put down at 8:28. Mr. Madison hesitated about starting Rodfield and was furious to see his condition and did not hesitate to express his conviction that the dog had received injury purposely. Blood was issuing from one side of his mouth, and it seemed that some sharp instrument had been used which lacerated his tongue; and half way back and a little underneath, back toward the root of the tongue, it looked bloodshot. His box was locked and there was no chance for such a hurt from the inside. Rodfield worked well during the day, but it was with difficulty he could take water when back in the evening. Soon after starting Rodfield pointed, moved ahead about twenty yards and located a bevy. Lillian backed. On the scattered birds each secured a point on single birds. Rod next pointed a stinkbird and Lillian backed. Sent on, Rod pointed, but no bird could be raised. Going to a pasture-field Lillian made a wide cast to right. A bevy was seen to rise and Lillian was dropped to wing. Rod backed four yards away. The birds were followed, but not found. The adjoining field was now hunted, when, in a plum thicket, Lillian pointed; backed by Rodfield. Mr. Bond failed to raise birds ahead of her. Sent on, she soon ran into the bevy down wind. To a point of Rod's a little further on (Lillian backing) nothing was raised. In the same field a bevy of birds rose just over the hill where both dogs were; cause unknown. This was all the point work down. Rodfield was far superior in his style of work. Both were good in pace and range. The brace was ordered up at 9:06.

Flirt C—Camille II.—N. B. Nesbitt's black and white bitch Flirt C, by Czar—Zoe L, handled by owner, and D. G. Rowland's black, white and tan bitch Camille II, by Roderigo—Topsy Avent, handled by Horace Smith, were cast off at 9:08. The character of the work of these dogs was ordinary. Camille was in better shape than at Newton and went, perhaps, a little better, and while she did not point she was over ground on which there was a large bevy scattered. Flirt pointed, and two or three birds were raised, but just ahead, thirty yards perhaps, ten or fifteen more flushed wild. On singles she made two points. The pace of Flirt is only fair, and general character of work ordinary.

Blue Kate—Gleam's Sport.—N. B. Nesbitt's black, white and tan bitch Blue Kate, by Blue Mark—Callie, handled by owner, and Manchester Kennel's orange and white dog Gleam's Sport, by Vanguard—Georgia Belle, handled by A. P. Gilliam, were put down at 9:48 and given a good trial until 10:41. There were few birds found and little point work done for the grounds passed over. Sport did not run his usual trial, not going so well and pottering over scent to determine it. After a bevy had been ridden up the dogs were sent to find. Sport found first, when several birds rose; afterward Kate found one; both steady. The next and only work done was a point on a single after roading. Several scattered birds raised afterward. During the running of these dogs birds seemed hard to get up Blue Kate was best in pace and range.

Topsy's Rod—Dan's Lady.—Avent & Thayer's black, white and tan dog Topsy's Rod, by Roderigo—Topsy Avent, handled by J. M. Avent, and Theo. Goodman's black, white and tan bitch, by Dan Gladstone—Lily Burges, handled by J. H. Johnson, went down at 10:45 and were taken up at 11:40, having a good trial of one hour lacking five minutes. After a short run Rod was found on point, but it was a false one. Moving on, he soon flushed a bevy in sedgegrass; Lady being in the bottom below. Lady found and pointed a bevy soon afterward, but the birds were not followed. Circling around, she soon pointed another about forty yards from place of first. This bevy was not followed. Rod, at one side of the thicket, had pointed and left it; a bird or two rising afterward with the bevy. Sent on, Lady was soon across a ravine and over a hill, where she pointed another, Rod backing. The dogs a third time were sent on without following the flushed birds. There was a sharp run before the next bevy was found, but Lady had it stanchly in scrub oak bottom. Following this bevy Rod flushed, and then pointed a single; Lady getting one also. Rod, at edge of ravine, pointed and moved on; a bird was raised near afterward. Rod was prompt in backing, but during most of the competition he was headstrong and disobedient, hard to keep in the course, and paying little attention to a whistle that was used so much that the competing handler requested the judges to have it stopped. Rod seems to have lost his Derby form except in manner of going. Dan's Lady ran an excellent trial. Starting a little slow she gradually increased her pace until it was all that could be asked; her pointing was accurate and stanch with fine pace and range, and she was easily handled; she also hunted out her ground well.

SECOND SERIES

Minnie T—Auld Clootie.—The first two brace were selected from dogs that had run on Saturday. This brace started well, but Minnie soon proved her superiority in speed, range, point work and searching qualities [illegible] ran in better form than in first trial, which [illegible] creased her position in the stake. She fou[illegible] was steady to wing. Clootie during the run made [illegible] false points, which work was in marked contra[illegible] in the first trial. Both dogs at the conclusion [illegible] were found on point, or backing each other; no bir[illegible] the vicinity of them. They ran from 1:08 to 1:11.

Allene—Gleam's Pink.—This brace ran from 1:45 to [illegible] They went in good form, maintaining pace and [illegible] well. The bevy work was all done by Pink, [illegible] ng in the stake was not brilliant it [illegible] ished twice on the scattered birds of [illegible] by Pink. Later, in the woods, she [illegible] roading and located birds. To a subsequent point nothing was raised. Pink had a similar experience. Each dog backed the other promptly. After a short run Pink pointed his second bevy and was beautifully backed by Allene. On the scattered birds each got a point, and Allene a flush as well. Allene was most stylish in work, but she now seems to need a good deal of coaching in point aud shows indecision in deciding on scent.

Rodfield—Blue Ridge Mark.—We had now worked around to that part of the grounds with heavy cover, but this brace went well through it, and, as both dogs work well to the gun, there was no difficulty in keeping track of them. Mark was first to point, and, as a large number of larks raised around him, they were the supposed cause. Five minutes later both dogs were found pointing a bevy, and their positions were such as would not determine which made it first. On the scattered birds Rodfield was the only one to get a point, a good one. Sent on, by a nice cast to the right he pointed a bevy. Five minutes later the brace was ordered up. Rod was more easy and graceful in movement; in fact, few dogs move so lightly. Mark hardly sustained the form shown in first trial, yet few dogs run with the regularity he does. Tney ran from 2:43 until 3:14.

Dan's Lady—Lillian Russell.—More false points were made in this competition than in any during the trials, but they were made where birds were known to be plentiful. Lillian opened up at a point where a bevy had been found every time it was hunted, except in this instance; no bird were raised. One hundred yards away and seventy-five yards apart both were on a point at once. Nothing was found to Lilllan's. Dan's Lady had to be ordered on, and after roading into the woods two or three birds were put up and quite a bevy raised to their flight. Lillian next pointed a rabbit. She followed this by a bevy point in an almost bare field, Dan's Lady backing in fine style. Both steady to flush. Sent on to find the scattered birds, Lady found, Lilllan backing. Lillian later made a false point. The next bevy was raised by horsemen in a wood. Following, each secured a point. Dan's Lady, in this trial, did not sustain herself. Lillian ran fairly, but judging the work of both in the first and second series, Lady stood best in the final award. They ran from 3:21 until 4:10. This ended the second series as made up, but deferring to the wish of one of the judges Topaz was ordered down, and with her Joe Bowers.

Topaz—Joe Bowers.—At 4:22 they started, Topaz with best speed and range, which she maintained. She soon found a bevy; and, sent on, soon found the birds again. Then she came to her weakest work—that on single birds. She flushed twice, her only opportunities for points. Her next point was along a road, and two birds were raised. After this, both dogs moving, Topaz in the lead, a big bevy rose. In ravine beyond a point was claimed for Topaz. I saw no bird raised. A few minutes later the brace was ordered up; time, 4:39.

A short consultation among the judges showed they agreed on dogs to be placed in first and second places, so the running was concluded. After consultation in the evening the awards were agreed upon except as to fourth and fifth, Mr. Mundy dissenting but agreeing that the other two judges should decide the awards for fourth and fifth places.

Delhi, the winner of the Pointer Derby, is of good form, of medium size, and forty-three pounds' weight as he ran. He is by Rip [illegible] out of Queen II. He appeared [illegible] winning first. At the Eastern [illegible] He is winner here of the Derby and [illegible] unquestionably the best dog in [illegible] and range, searches well, always [illegible] thoroughly broken, and his [illegible] proven under trying circum- [illegible] ughout both stakes were remarkable for their uniformity. He is a credit to his breeder, handler and sire—the sterling Rip Rap. Tamarack Jr, second, is of medium size, a busy dog at all times, hunts industriously at all times with fair judgment, is generally stanch, but not always stylish in point work, and is rather easily controlled. Hempstead Don, third, works without style in any part of his work; at times he seems a little timid and over cautious in single point work, requiring, at times, encouragement to go on; his pace is fair and range generally good. Rex Fast, fourth, at times has fair range and speed but is not regular in it, going out at times well and at other times inclined to work around handler; he is not yet thoroughly stanch, at times unsteady, requiring the constant attention of handler. Love's Kent, fifth, is a dog of moderate range, hunting best with another dog, and but for his first trial might have been placed over Rex Fast, being a stancher dog in point work. The stake was not strong, else the fourth and fifth dogs would not have been placed.

Tony's Gale, winner of the Setter Derby, is a puppy of fine size, with an abundance of speed and range. He is stanch in point work, but does not always show good style; is easily controlled, hunts well to the gun and is a most promising dog; he is owned by Messrs. Fox and Seiler, of Harrisburg, Pa. "Dick" Fox is well known by a large circle of acquaintances and will certainly receive their congratulations. Tony's Gale is by Antonio—Nellie G. Tony's Boy, second, by Antonio—Laundress, is well known from his previous winnings; he is owned by that sterling man and sportsman, Norvin T. Harris, and his winnings are not at an end by any means. He hardly seemed up to his usual form. He, too, has all the pace and range that should be wanted by anyone, is easily controlled, having an excellent disposition; he is stanch in point work and fairly stylish. He starts again at the Southern trials, and is a puppy likely to receive first honors in any trials, as he did in the Eastern. Lady Mildred, third, was entered by the Blue Ridge Kennel, but is owned by Mr. Hobart Ames, of Boston, to whom she will be sent after the Southern trials. Mr. Ames is to be congratulated on owning such a handsome and good bitch, and he certainly will never regret the purchase. Of lovely appearance and disposition, stanch, fast enough for any sportsman, easily controlled, and, when running as she did in her first competition here, a dangerous competitor in any trials; she is an attractive and merry worker, positive and accurate. The Lady is also by Antonio out of Can Can, which makes him sire of first, second and third prize winners. Cynosure, fourth, owned by Norvin Harris, having been in use just previous to the trials, had not had the necessary work of preparation, showing it plainly in her work, especially in her pace and range; she is a well-known good one. Lady Clare, fifth, owned by the Jackson-Denmark Kennel, is a lemon and white bitch, with good pace, fair range, quick in point work—a little inaccurate at times. Some of her work was exceedingly good.

Nesbitt, the handler of Jingo, surprised the "boys" with Jingo, in placing him second in the All-Age Pointer Stakes, as he was supposed to be "only a shooting dog." No better work was shown in the stake, or any stake, than his in his second run; with plenty of speed and range, he excelled in working out his ground. All his work was clean and of winning kind. Under the guidance of J. B. Stoddard Tick Boy, third, has improved much since his last appearance. Yet there is room for more, especially in stanchness. Tick "is a-coming," and next year should prove a strong competitor. Strideaway was down to fourth place, not a bad one in such company, but the strong competition, together with his not running in usual form, "slayed" him. He spent too much time running in to handler, which is unusual for him, as he has done little of it before. The company was hot, and under the circumstances not a bad place. Tamarack Jr, fifth, was mentioned in the Derby, to which reference is now made.

The All-Age Setter Stakes winner, Rodfield, is owned by P. T. Madison of Indianapolis, Ind., and is by Antonio—Nellie Hope. He has started four times in field trials and been a winner three times, being placed in the U. S. Derby at Bicknell, Ind., November, 1893, first in the U. S. All-Age Stakes Bicknell, Ind., November, 1894, and first here. Rodfield is a dog of handsome form, built on speed lines, and is very graceful in movement, no dog of his day running with more ease; his disposition is of the best, obedient and easily controlled, and while he has all the pace and range that could be wished for, he uses it to the best advantage, searching his ground intelligently with that desirable quality "hunting to the gun," and without loss of time incurred by running in to his handler. Added to this he has great style in all his work, particularly in his point work, and no dog since Gladstone's day shows such variety and always pleasing. He much resembles him in parts of his form, particularly in head and expression, and his point-work is of similar character. To show that the wins of Rodfield were well earned it is only necessary to state that in the All-Age Stakes at Bicknell, eighteen starters, there were eleven dogs that had been placed at trials; and in the present competition ten out of the eighteen starters. A total of twenty-one out of thirty-six. No dog has ever won in America in such fields of starters. Mayfield broke Redfield and has handled him in all his trials. It was no disgrace to be beaten by Rodfield, and Blue Ridge Mark was close on his trail. He is a sterling dog of the character of Gath's Mark in trying to do his best whenever down. In this stake he seemed a little heavy in flesh, causing him to go a little labored in his second trial; his work was of the character (good) so often described. Minnie T, third, is a most attractive mover and hunter, doing her work accurately and clearly; she has good pace and range, at times hunting out her ground remarkably fast. I fancy that many who saw her run would like to own her. If not, her owner and handler, "Billy" Titus, would like to know why. Gleam's Pink, fourth, outworked his kennel mate, Sport, who generally has the call on him, but not so in this case. Pink's work while not of the brilliant kind was good and clean, improving as he ran. He is owned by the Manchester Kennel Company and is much thought of. Dan's Lady, fifth, is owned by Theo. Goodman of Terre Haute, Ind., who has great confidence in her. That it is not misplaced is evident from the race she made in her first trial, outworking Topsy's Rod at all points; a run not exceeded by anything in the stake, and had she continued it her place would have been well to the front.

The club gave a banquet to the farmers who owned the land over which their trials were held, as well as to others who had interested themselees in their success. Sportsmen present and the handlers were invited, a pleasant evening was spent, and good feeling prevailed. Among those present were P. T. Madison, Walter Hurd, E. H. Osthaus, Mayor Jordan, E. F. Rose, W. A. Whlte, A. M. Young, David Cottrell, J. J. Williams, Dr. Brothers, J. R. Snider, Goodwin Crump, James Evans, J. H. Johnson, D. E. Rose, N. T. Nesbitt, C. E. Buckle, J. T. Mayfield, Dr. R. T. Mead, G. V. Richards, A. P. Gilliam, St. Marc Mundy, R. P. McCargo, J. M. Freeman, Maj. Purcell, J. Myers, Horace Smith, B. Waters, J M. Taylor, Thos. Bond, W. W. Titus, J. M. Avent and Mr. Bailey. A number of impromptu speeches were made, much to the enjoyment of all present.

WHICH IS BEST?

Louisville, Ky.

Editor American Field:—In reading your valuable paper of January 19 I found an article headed "Which is Best? A Trial Proposed," and signed Plover. I have not the pleasure of being acquainted with the gentleman that I know of, yet when I commenced the article I was quite taken with the same, but I had not proceeded very far before I discovered it was a one-sided affair, and that Strideaway was the only dog of the three which it was intended to benefit. I should not have replied to the article if Plover had not given what he claims to be quotations from the sporting papers, which I cannot verify for I have not kept all the papers on file, but if he wished to do justice to all, why did he not quote all they say? I beg to refer him to the American Field of February 25, 1893, in regard to the heat for absolute winner of All-Age Stakes:

"Lad of Rush—Novelist.—At 3:18 the dogs started and much interest was manifested, and the race was closely watched from start to finish. Lad was soon on a good bevy point. Following the birds he found a single. Novelist was out of sight and did not obey the whistle. Lad was ordered held up; a wrong proceeding. He was not held long, but only because Novelist came in sight. Novelist now pointed twice on singles and then false pointed. She followed with a flush of bevy. Lad, in high grass, pointed a bevy. On the scattered birds Novelist pointed four times, Lad three. To another point of Lad no bird could be raised. Further on, Novelist flushed a single. The dogs were now separated. Lad under control, continued the course; Novelist for a while out of control. Lad found a bevy and pointed stanchly. He was again wrongfully held up. Mr. Avent was soon on hand with Novelist, she going into a bottom to the right when the dogs were ordered in another direction. Some whistling brought her around. The dogs were now on the course together again, when Lad pointed a rabbit. Passing to woods near by, Lad made an excusable flush of a bevy as he was going cross wind; the leaves were dry and horsemen near. He afterward flushed a single. The dogs were now ordered up, and, after consultation of judges, Novelist was given first. Perhaps no award at a field trial ever gave so much surprise and caused so much talk. It is impossible to figure out how such a conclusion was reached. The point work on birds does not justify it, and the general class of the work of Lad was higher. He kept the course at all times, was obedient, and was inferior only in speed and range, and not much behind in this. The award was unaccountable from any standpoint. Lad seemed in hard luck. In the Absolute Derby there was much question in the decision against him, but he had won the All-Age Absolute, I think, fairly."

I also call his attention to what Mr. B. Waters, of Forest and Stream, said in that paper of February 23, 1893: "Final Heat of the Derby.—Lad of Rush and Lillian Russell started at 2:09 to contest for the Derby Absolute victory. Lad was keen to go and he ranged wide and fast. He opened the work with a good point on a bevy, and was steady to shot and wing. On the scattered birds Lill made two points, one of which was on a wounded bird; made one flush up wind and two down wind. The handlers were rushing their dogs. Each dog made a point to which nothing was found. Lad pointed a bevy of which he did not have the wind direct. The birds were running. Lad lost the scent, took a cast the wrong way and lost the birds. He made an awkward job of it, but no doubt would have pointed the birds again if given more time. He had been on the point quite a while before starting on to locate. Lad flushed a bird in open. Lill pointed; nothing found. Lill pointed a bevy and Lad backed. On scattered birds in heavy sedge Lad pointed a single, and Lill backed. The dogs were then hurried on in high grass and made flush after flush, and what the dogs did not flush the handlers did. It was poor work. Lad at last pointed, then roaded to flush, Next each flushed a single. On scattered birds of another bevy marked down in sedge Lill made a point and flush. The judges ordered the dogs up at 3:21, consulted a few minutes, and sent the dogs on. Lill flushed twice. Lad pointed a bird and jumped at it as it flushed. Lill in sedge pointed a single. Up at 3:42. Lad was much the wider ranger. He remained out at his work, carried his head better on birds, and beat his ground with better judgment. Lill was speedy, but she did not range with the judgment of Lad, nor did she remain out at her work so well as Lad. The work of both was quite faulty, yet it was, taken in its entirety, in Lad's favor. Lill won the heat and was thereby absolute winner of the Derby.

"Novelist and Lad of Rush began at 3:18 one of the most interesting heats, if not the most interesting, of the trials. It was one of the heats also in which the judges held the distinguished position of being alone in their official views as set forth by their decision. After carefully considering wherein the short-haired dog was inferior to the long-haired dog in this competition, I am still unable to comprehend the grounds of the decision. The heat began with a good bevy point by Lad in sedge near the edge of woods, Novelist at the time being absent, as she was many other times in the heat. The scattered birds were followed. Lad pointed a single. He was then held up till Novelist was found, on the hypothesis, the judge said, that Novelist might be on a point. It did not occur to them that she also might be hunting for birds, that it was her own fault if she did not work to the gun, that Lad was not in the competition to play to her convenience, and that he had a right to keep on working on birds he had found. Why one dog which was doing something in sight should be held up on the assumption that his competitor, which was out of sight, was also doing something of the same kind can only be explained on the ground that the rudiments of the competition were not understood. Mr. Avent claimed at the time that there was no competition. However Novelist was seen on the other side of the woods roaming cheerfully, and it was then announced that there was a competition. Had Novelist found a bevy and pointed while Lad was held up, what would it be then? Novelist made two points on singles. She next pointed, and nothing was found. She next pointed a single. She false pointed next, and next flushed a bevy in sedge. In open sedge and in the same sedge under the same conditions, Lad pointed a bevy. Novelist flushed twice and pointed twice on singles; next she pointed scattered birds. Lad got two good points on singles,one in open sedge, one in woods. Novelist pointed a bird. Lad pointed; nothing found. Novelist, going up wind, flushed a single. Lad pointed a bevy. The handlers and dogs were now brought together, they having been widely separated on account of Novelist's willfulness in selecting her own course, and the necessity thus occasioned of her handler following her. Lad pointed a lark. Next, he pointed a rabbit. Next, going across wind, he flushed a bevy. Novelist pointed a bird in open sedge. At the same time Lad pointed. His handler did not beat out far enough ahead; he sent Lad on and the latter unhesitatingly flushed two birds. Next he made a point to which nothing was found. The weak place in his work was within five minutes of the end. Up at 4:32. The judges held a consultation of some minutes' duration. It seemed as if they did not arrive at a decision with unanimous certainty, but this was only judging from appearances. Lad was the better ranger in that he worked his ground out well, took as wide a range as the character of the ground required and worked voluntarily to the gun. He backed well, pointed with quickness and certainty, and did more work on birds than his competitor. Novelist was headstrong, broke away several times from the course, thus causing wide separation of the handlers, and her class of work was inferior to Lad's, although she did some good work on single birds. The decision was not well received. This ended the trials."

I also beg to call his attention to what the Turf, Field and Farm says in that paper of March 3, 1893, through its correspondent, Mr. St. Marc Mundy: "Absolute Derby.—Lad of Rush, winner of the pointer, and Lillian Russell, winner of the setter Derby, were put down at 2:09, immediately after lunch, to run off the Derby Absolute. After drawing a large territory blank, Lad pointed a bevy in an old fence row, Lillian backing and both steady to wing. Following the scattered birds, Lillian pointed a bird that Gilliam flushed and wounded, she making another point on it a short distance further on. She also made three flushes. Lad made a false point afterward in the open. He was then lost in some sedge, and when found by one of the judges was pointing on footscent. The wind was blowing across and in trying to locate the birds he lost the scent and made a short cast back to recover it, but his handler coming up walked into the birds and flushed them before he could locate the bevy. Following the birds, Lad made a flush down wind in some heavy sedgegrass, then pointed, but nothing could be found. Ordered on, Lillian then pointed a bevy in some woods, Lad backing, and both steady to wing and shot. Following the scattered birds in some heavy grass along a branch, Lad pointed one and was steady to shot. The handlers then commenced to crowd their dogs, and the result was some very poor work by both, each making a number of flushes. Finally they were sent on, and following some birds that had been seen to alight, Lillian flushed one in a thicket. The dogs were then ordered up, but after the judges had consulted together for some time without reaching any agreement the dogs were put down again, and on some scattered birds in a marshy piece of ground Lillian pointed two singles and made a flush, Lad at the same time pointing a single. Lillian had an opportunity to point a small bevy along a fence at the edge of some woods, also several singles, she passing within a few feet and having the wind in her favor, but failed to notice any of these birds, they being flushed immediately after by some of the horsemen. As she is known to have a good nose under ordinary circumstances, her failure to notice these birds would look like the pointer had run her scenting powers out of her. While she had possibly pointed more single birds than Lad, yet his work, as a whole, was of a higher order, while he covered fully three times as much ground in the heat as she did. They were finally ordered up at 3:42, and after conferring together for some time the decision was finally made in favor of the setter, Lillian Russell, a decision that surprised all who followed the heat closely, for nearly everyone present considered, and so expressed themselves, that Lad of Rush had outworked and outclassed Lillian Russell and should have been awarded the title of absolute winner of the Derby. It was an unfortunate decision, and one in which the judges themselves did not agree, as was very evident.

"All-Age Absolute.—A few minutes later Novelist and Lad of Rush were put down to compete for the All-Age Absolute. They started at 3:18 p. m. Lad soon after made a nice point on a bevy in the open, and following the scattered birds he pointed a single in the edge of some woods. He was then held up a few minutes until Novelist could be found, she having bolted and gone off on a self-hunt. When brought back she had the wind in her favor and quickly made three points on the singles, Lad backing each time; and both were steady to wing. Ordered on, she made a false point in some hedgegrass. Afterward, while crossing a marshy bottom, she flushed a bevy, Lad, a short distance off, pointing another bevy and was steady to shot. Following some of the scattered birds, Novelist pointed a single; and a few feet farther on she pointed a new bevy, Lad backing. Sent on, Lad quickly pointed a single. Being taken out of marshy sedge bottom and following some of the birds, each pointed one at the end of a small piece of woods and were steady to wing. Lad then pointed, but Blankenbaker failed to flush. Continuing around the edge of the timber, Novelist roaded a bird to flush up wind. Sent on, Novelist again went off on a self-hunt, and after Avent, one of the judges and a reporter had hunted for ten minutes she came back; Lad meanwhile finding and pointing a new bevy in some weeds and briers. When brought together again and sent on, Lad pointed a rabbit in some grass. Passing into some woods, Lad was called in by his handler and had not taken six steps in the new direction before several birds flushed wild ahead; he stopping to wing, and the main bevy flushing wild from side to side immediately after. Remaining steady, but turning his head a little and pointing two birds that had remained, which were afterward flushed. Sent on, Lad again points a short distance off on the side of the hill. Blankenbaker failing to walk far enough ahead to put up the birds, he orders Lad on, and he roads down hill a short distance, three birds flushing wild, and stops to wing. Novelist was inclined to go off on self-hunts and was hard to keep in the general course, while Lad was under perfect control at all times during the heat and had equally as much speed and range. A recapitulation of the work done on birds shows Novelist's record to be: One bevy point, five single bird points, one bevy flush, one single bird flush and one false point. While Lad's record is: Three bevy points, four points on singles, a false point, and a partial flush and point of a bevy. The dogs were ordered up at 4:32, having run an hour and fourteen minutes. The judges consulted together for some time, and finally sprang a complete surprise upon all present by deciding against Lad of Rush and naming Novelist the winner of the All-Age Absolute."

Let us give all the facts or none. In regard to what Plover says about pedigree I would respectfully refer him to what the editor of the AMERICAN FIELD says in March or April, 1893. Here it is:

"We publish in this issue a portrait of the phenomenal young pointer dog Lad of Rush from a painting by Edward H. Osthaus; and we also publish a portrait of the dog's owner, J. L. Adams, and of his trainer and handler, L. W. Blankenbaker. Lad of Rush was born March 16, 1891, and was bred by J. H. Cathcart, Winnsboro, N. C. He was started four times in the field trials and was placed each time as follows: First in U. S. F. T. Club's Pointer Derby at Elizabethtown, Ky., November 8, 1892; second in C. F. T. Club's Pointer Derby at Lexington, N. C., December 6, 1892; first in C. F. T. Club's Pointer All-Age Stakes at Lexington, N. C., December 9, 1892; first in U. S. F. T. Club's Pointer All-Age at New Albany, Miss., February 16, 1893. There are many who think he should have won also the Absolute in the Derby and in the All-Age Stakes of the United States Field Trial Club, and such was the opinion of the reporter of the AMERICAN FIELD. Lad of Rush's remarkable field form is not to be wondered at after examining his pedigree closely; and we publish it for the reason that it is such an extraordinary one, and is really a lesson in pointer breeding, showing what can be done by judicious mating. The pedigree is such a remarkable combination of noted dogs, the very cream of pointer blood, one might suppose it to be faked if he did not know to the contrary."

In regard to Plover having decided to breed his bitch to Strideaway, that is his privilege, and I for one certainly will not question his rights. In regard to his wanting to see a race between Strideaway, Kent Elgin and Lad of Rush, he could not wish to see it more than I would; but alas! poor Kent Elgin is dead, and no one could or can sympathize with his owner more than I do, for he has lost a great dog. Perhaps Plover will have a different opinion of Strideaway since the last trials at West Point, Miss. However, his proposition is a liberal one to see a trial. I have just returned from the trials at West Point, Miss., and have not had time to answer his article before. Now I propose to get up a trial of ten dogs, each party to pay $100 entrance fee, to be run between March 1 and 15, not later, on the United States Field Trial Club's grounds at West Point, Miss. (with the club's consent), under their rules, for two hours or longer; $700 to go to the winner, $200 to second and $100 to third. Judges to be selected by owners of dogs entered. This will be an interesting event, and then the public can tell who has the best dog. I will enter Lad of Rush and bar no dog, pointer or setter, male or female, young or old, not even the great Strideaway, if I am an unfortunate in the land of five-cent cotton.

Now let's hear quickly from those willing to enter this competition. My dog is in training in Mississippi, where I shall keep him until it can be decided if the trial can be arranged.

J. L. ADAMS.

WOOSTER, OHIO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD;—Being interested slightly in the breeding of high-class pointers, I have paid quite a little attention to the matter, and weigh carefully all matter and evidence I can gather from experience and other sources.

The controversy now on as to the best dog in the trio, or rather quartet, of winners, viz., Rip Rap, Kent Elgin, Strideaway and Lad of Rush, does not interest me as much as to how to get a duplicate or a better one than either of them. If like would beget like I could easily have my desires fulfilled. But my experience in breeding for the last thirty years enables me to say that this rarely ever happens, at least not for me. I have carefully studied the breeding of all the dogs mentioned and, like Plover, have formed an opinion, but, unlike him, my opinion is based upon actual observation and experience in the field with all but one of some of these and some of their ancesters. While I agree with him as to breeding in some respects, I must differ with him in others. He says Strideaway's pedigree in the first, second and third generations has not an indifferent dog in it and the dogs were all famous winners. As I owned Strideaway's grandam this is news to me. Again, he says in Kent Elgin's pedigree the progenitors fell off to less conspicuous dogs in the second and third generations. This may be in some respects, but is not Bang Bang's record equal to Trinket's Bang's in the second generation, and is not his sire's, Price's Bang's, record far superior to Croxteth's in the third? He marks Trinket (1) and Vera Bang (0). As Trinket had a show record I suppose he marked her accordingly. Now if he had known Vera Bang he certainly would have reversed his estimate.

For his and the public's benefit I want to say that I have seen all the dogs in question, except Rip Rap, in the trials; have been breeding and handling pointers and setters for thirty years, and in all my experience have never seen a pointer the equal of Vera Bang. All the combinations that go to make a great dog she had; she was simply the Alix among pointers. As Pearl's Dot was full of trial blood, and [illegible] the question arises in my mind, fro[illegible] good qualities in these winners com[illegible] tainly gets the credit, which in ma[illegible] never saw Pearl's Dot in the field. [illegible] Strideaway favors her in any way [illegible] action and on point and back was like his dam, out and out. Strideaway gets away quicker than Kent Elgin and has more tail action, but goes with his head lower, is a little inclined to get his nose on the ground, likes to come in and see his handler a little better than Kent did, don't range as widely nor has he as much style on point; nor as good a nose. These are my observations, and from them many would infer that I would consider Kent Elgin superior to Strideaway, and I guess I do, not only from what I know and have seen, but also from the best information I can get from competent judges.

My reason for interesting myself in this matter was because I wanted to breed something that would be a pleasure to own, having been disappointed so often trying to get a high-class pointer. I made up my mind to try another tack. Like Plover, I compared my notes and took into consideration four dogs (instead of three), the representative pointer winners of the day, Rip Rap, Kent Elgin, Strideaway and Lad of Rush. In summing up I found that I could not, as a matter of course, breed to Kent Elgin because my bitch is a litter sister to him. Strideaway had nothing to recommend him but his winnings, having no produce to show that he would or could reproduce himself. Lad of Rush the same. So I turned my attention toward Rip Rap, whose record as a winner is second to no living pointer and as a sire of winners is equaled only by his own sire. With a bitch equal in all respects to her illustrious brother, why should I not get what I have been hankering after these many years?

Having the material now on hand I expect to breed further, but hardly with any possibility of bettering what I now have. In the near future I intend breeding a bitch puppy I now have to a dog of the purest Drake—Sefton blood in America out of a bitch by Osborne Ale out of Belle of Naso, by Naso of Kippen. By this breeding I get seven crosses to Price's Bang and four to Garth's Drake; through Bang and Nimble Ninepence four to the great Hamlet. All these are the largest field trial winners of the past. Should my experiment prove worthy of note I shall certainly let it be known.

BREEDING ENGLISH SETTERS

SEDALIA, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In the death of Roderigo this country has lost its greatest English setter stud dog, and breeders will be looking around to find something to breed their best bitches to. Is there anyone who can say now what dog will take his place? There are many dogs that have made fine records and are in the stud, but where is the one that can be depended upon to breed to as could Roderigo?

In reading the accounts of the field trials for the past several years (that is the only way I have ever been able to attend them) I would see in the first series So-and-So's dog by Roderigo. I would watch for this same dog in the second series, and could generally find him and trace him on to the end, and if he was not winner, it was generally some dog whose sire had the same name.

A few years ago I wanted a bitch and went to the advertising columns of the AMERICAN FIELD. In looking them over I found puppies offered for sale by Roderigo. I answered the advertisement, and after several letters and telegrams I received my bitch. I was very proud of her; she was by Roderigo. When she was two years old I put her in the hands of a trainer; he kept her three weeks and on returning her said, "She is worth her weight in gold, and if you don't say she is the best thing you ever saw of her age don't pay me a cent." He had worked her hard every day, except Sundays, for three weeks, and I expected to see her looking gaunt, but she looked fully as well as when she left me. I took her out the same afternoon to try her. She went like the wind, with high head, first on one side and then the other, going to every place where I would have gone to find a covey had I been hunting without a dog; having passed through a field and a brush patch without finding I came to a cornfield, and going up a ravine in this field, which gave the ground a convex shape, I had a splendid opportunity to watch her movements, as I could see for three hundred yards on all sides. When near the head of this grassy gully, I saw her, while going like a racehorse, suddenly throw her head to the left and go straight north. I was sure she had winded a covey that must be feeding in the corn near the head of the ravine, and was sure she would run into and flush them, she was going so fast. I hurried on to try to overtake and caution her, but it was no use, for, after she had gone some thirty yards she began to crouch slightly, and in another ten steps she was as still as a post. Ah! there they are! And there was she, some thirty yards ahead and above me. Here was my ideal; here was what I had been dreaming of ever since I first began to read the AMERICAN FIELD. I saw what I had been picturing in my mind for years, viz., a high-class field dog. Stepping up behind her, the birds flushed some twenty yards ahead, and I killed one. The bitch never moved. Reloading my gun I told her to "go fetch" (I had taught her to retrieve before sending her to the trainer). She was off like a shot and came back at a lope with the bird hanging from her mouth, carrying by the head.

I am not writing this to advertise my dogs. I have none to sell now, and whenever I have I will go at it right and pay for it. My object is to show, what I believe to be true, that there are dogs living to-day by that great Roderigo of which the public knows nothing, and which have just as much in them as some that have already won fame in the public trials.

There is a dog here, owned by my friend Mr. C. B. Rodes, that I believe the peer of any dog [illegible] sired; he is by Roderigo out of Fannette (2[illegible] Sportsman. I have a bitch seven months [illegible] raised to breed to this dog; she is by Nob[illegible] Noble—Lucy Dean) out of a Roderigo bitch. [illegible] make Roderigo grandsire of the puppies on both [illegible] Some men may think this is too close inbreeding, [illegible] experience and observation advise it, and I expect [illegible] thing extra.

[illegible] has won fame as a breeder of Irish water [illegible], and he has the material to do so [illegible]

THE SOUTHERN F. T. CLUB'S TRIALS

(Special Telegram.)

NEW ALBANY, MISS., February 4, 1895.

The Southern trials opened late this morning, the day being bright but cold. There was a heavy freeze and big frost during the night. The Derby, for pointers and setters, had fourteen starters, but outside of about five dogs the running was very ordinary. The judges were John King of Jackson, Tenn., T. M. Brumby, secretary of the club, and Dr. M. T. Rogers of this place. The latter two gentlemen were filling the places of Mr. Williams and Mr. Wilson, who were absent. The trials for the day were not well conducted in manner of hunting ground or control of handlers. Avent & Thayer's Cynosure and P. Lorillard's Poloma ran first, Poloma doing all the point work and finding two bevies, except a single by Cynosure; she also excelled in speed and range. Blue Ridge Kennel's Tom Beggs and Major Renfroe's Joe Cummings ran next, the latter in improved form and excelling at all points. Delhi's running was not of the best form, but best to this; he excelled Bedford & Bryson's bitch Ida in range and point work. Avent & Thayer's bitch Clementina and the Jackson-Denmark Kennel's bitch Lady Clare ran in ordinary form and should not be considered longer. Fox & Seiler's Tony Gale was better than Lorillard's Shade in range, pace and hunting out ground, finding all the bevies and doing the point work. Tony Boy, owned by Norvin T. Harris, and Capt. Pat Henry's Mark ran in good territory. Tony Boy found the birds and did the point work exclusively. Mark made a poor showing. As between the Blue Ridge bitch Lady Mildred and Charlottesville Kennel's dog Tippo there was no comparison, Lady Mildred finding the birds. Tippo did little point work, but he was headstrong and unsteady. This finished the first series and the work for the day. Attendance small and birds seem scarce.

NEW ALBANY, MISS., February 5.

The Derby, after tedious running, was finished about the middle of this afternoon. In the forenoon the winners were a foregone conclusion. The day was a cold and cloudy one, and a hard frost during the night lasted until the afternoon. Eight of the fourteen starters were continued in the second series. Two or three could have have been left out. Tony Boy ran in fine form throughout the trial, with Tony's Gale a close second. Delhi was the contending dog for the honors, the balance readily beaten out. The awards were: Tony Boy, first; Tony's Gale, second; Delhi, third. Correct decisions.

The All-Age Stakes with seventeen starters were begun, and two braces finished. They are down to run as follows: Bedford & Bryson's Tremont with Dr. Duke's Acolyte; Kidwell & Stoddard's Tick Boy with Manchester Kennel Co.'s Gleam's Sport; P. Lorillard Jr.'s Ightfield Rosalie with F. R. Hitchcock's Tory Topaz; Jackson-Denmark Kennel's Lillian Russell with Major Purcell's Lady Margaret; W. W. Titus' Minnie T with Avent & Thayer's Topsy's Rod; Major Purcell's Cid with Blue Ridge Kennel's Allene; Manchester Kennel Co.'s Gleam's Pink with Blue Ridge Kennel's Blue Ridge Mark; Major Purcell's St Blaise with Norvin T. Harris' Tony Boy; Dudley Schofield's Joe Bowers, a bye. The trials should be concluded by Thursday evening.

BULL TERRIER CHALLENGE.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Once more, with your kind permission, I wish to encroach upon your valuable space. At last I have the pleasure of hearing from Dr. R. S. Huidekoper in reply to my letter of January 12. It was I who sent Dr. Huidekoper the marked copy of the AMERICAN FIELD to make assurance doubly sure that he would see my challenge therein contained. In his reply in the last issue of your paper he shirks the issue very much after the methods adopted by our champion (actor) pugilist. The Doctor suggests that I subscribe $25 for a silver cup for the best bull terrier dog at the coming New York show. Now mind you, Mr. Editor, I challenged his dog Cardona. The Doctor says nothing about his dog, whether it is better than mine or not, but he does say if my dog Duke of Rochester wins in the open class at New York, then I would have the privilege of competing with the dog that won in the challenge class. This is rubbish and a remarkable condescension on the Doctor's part. Has it not occurred to Dr. Huidekoper that so far as I know neither of us has any assurance whether we can win there with our dogs in their respective classes? Suppose neither dog should win, then the relative merits of those two dogs would be just as they are to-day, and were I to subscribe $25 for purpose as suggested I would be about as gullible as the proverbial Rube at a country circus. Oh, no, the Doctor made a covert and unsportsmanlike attack on my dog in his stud card and I am here to defend my dog. I claimed in my letter of January 12 that Duke of Rochester was a better dog than Cardona, and was then, as I now am, willing to test the merits of the twain for a minor consideration—$25. If the Doctor does not think $25 enough I will go a little better; any part of $100 will suit me, the bet to be under same conditions as mentioned in mine of January [illegible] But the Doctor says he does not [illegible] Well, if Cardona beats the Duke, [illegible] the equivalent in a cup, a collar [illegible] uggestions are in order, maybe [illegible] ed a good bull terrier might fill [illegible] hould not win, I will have no [illegible] taking the shekels. I am not [illegible] nan the average dog fancier.

Dr. Huidekoper invited this by his covert attack on my dog through his stud card, now let him emulate the disposition of the dog of his choice and inform me in a straightforward, manly way if he is willing to back up his convictions for any part of $100.

Dr. Huidekoper refers in his letter to the bull terrier Streatham Monarch. If I recollect rightly this dog was shown at New York, last year, in the challenge class, and alone. This, however, has no bearing on the matter under discussion, and I presume if Streatham Monarch wants vindication his owner is perfectly able to see to it. I will, however, say, in justice to that grand dog, that he was and is now, if in condition, the best bull terrier living to-day, bar one, and that one is not Cardona. In making this statement I want to go on record as being a little broader in my views than some bull terrier fanciers I have in my mind, at present, where another good dog is concerned.

We have little time for further controversy on this subject before the New York show, so if Dr. Huidekoper wishes to accept my challenge he can do so by telegraphing to my address, 3 Gregory Street, Rochester, N. Y.; and any reputable man in the fancy will suit me as stakeholder, and I will send on money upon acceptance. I inclose the cause of this dispute, viz., Dr. Huidekoper's stud card.

W. J. HIGGINSON.

THE GORDON SETTER TRIALS

ST. LOUIS, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In last week's AMERICAN FIELD I read with wonder and surprise the letter from Jas. B. Blossom, explaining to me and your many readers why his and other Gordons were beaten by Mac's Paul, knowing that Mr. Pearle, Mr. Billings and Mr. Sperry—in fact all those that saw Paul and his handler, Mr. Streigel—were more than pleased with the work done. Now Mr. Blossom owns up to the truth, that the dogs that ran at Assonet, Mass., last November did not know what a quail was: the question in my mind is what would such men as Mr. Titus, Mr. Richards, Mr. Avent, Mr. Mayfield and others say if pointer or English setter men should enter for field trial honors dogs that did not know anything about quail. Any breeder that would do such a thing would become a laughing stock for the balance of the doggy world. I shall not speak of the merits or demerits of any of the dogs that ran.

Mr. Blossom forgets himself when he tells the breeders that his dogs did not know anything about quails. He overlooks the past, when he says in his letter that Mont was in Minnesota on prairie chickens and in October on quails in Indiana. A schoolboy would know better in making a legal excuse why he was at the foot of his class. How about Minnie T?

Why does the President of the Gordon Setter Club insist on Gordon setter trials away down in Massachusetts, when he knows and says that they have no Gordons in the East that know anything about quails? I wrote to the AMERICAN FIELD some three or four years ago to tell the Gordon men in the East that the Gordon setter men would be in the West, and that the eastern breeders would have to come west. At that time the West was ignored by the East, but according to Mr. Blossom's letter it is coming to pass. The eastern Gordon men have seen their folly. Experience keeps a dear school. Let us always write about other people's dogs, and keep silent about our own.

One word about dogs that the owner claims know nothing about qualls. I claim that if a dog is put down in fair hunting season and there are birds he will find them, if the stock is there; it does not make any difference whether he has seen quails, prairie chickens or snipe. Of course he would not do such good work as the dog that had been handled by a good handler on game. I have in my mind's eye a dog that had never seen a quail, and yet when he was put down on birds with dogs that had had three seasons on quails this same dog found more bevies than they. I will not say who owns the dog, nor give its name, but an old handler in Illinois can say as I say.

Let me once more ask Mr. Blossom, when Mr. Pearle says Paul was the best trained dog and did the best work of all that were entered in the stake, and in fact was the best Gordon that he ever saw, what is the use of his writing that his dogs did not know anything about hunting or field trials? Let them send their dogs to the West, where you can knock qualls down with your walking stick.

POINTER CLUB'S MEETING

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A special meeting of the board of governors of the Pointer Club of America was held, pursuant to a call from Messrs. Wise, Lewis and Webster, on January 28 at 3 p. m., at 44 Broad Street, New York. President Wise presided.

The Secretary offered a resolution to have the board rescind its action regarding the request made by the board to the Westminster Kennel Club, requesting the privilege of selecting a judge to award the specials offered by the Pointer Club. It was carried.

It was then resolved to have the American Field Pointer Cup offered for competition at the Westminster Kennel Club's show of 1895.

A motion was then made to have the two specials which were offered by the board at a previous meeting to the Westminster Kennel Club withdrawn, owing to a probability of their not being competed for. As a substitute the following specials were voted by the board to the Westminster Kennel Club show: $10 for the best heavyweight pointer dog; $10 for the best heavywelght pointer bitch; $10 for the best lightweight pointer dog; $10 for the best lightwelght pointer bitch. To be competed for by the members of the Pointer Club only.

Mr. Lewis moved that the annual meeting of the club be held during the Westminster Kennel Club's show, and Thursday, February 21, at 3 p. m., were chosen as the day and hour.

The Secretary then announced the number of nominations for the Grand Annual Sweepstakes for 1895, and motion was made that notice be printed that they would be competed for at the Westminster Kennel Club's show.

The request of the Mascoutah Kennel Club for specials was acted upon, and the following donations made: $10 to the best pointer dog exhibited and owned by a member of the Pointer Club of America; $10 to the best pointer bitch exhibited and owned by a member of the Pointer Club of America.

On the motion of Mr. Lewis, the club adjourned.

NOTES

As superintendent of the Cincinnati dog show it seems to devolve upon me to reply to Mr. Harry Hall's card. There are always two sides to every question and I will show the other side as briefly as possible. Our last (not A. K. C.) show was in 1890. Since that time I have been asked a thousand times, when will we have a dog show here? The last regular A. K. C. show was given in 1890 by the Cincinnati Kennel Club (of which I am secretary) and cost $2,800. Our receipts were $2,000, and, as I helped to pay up the deficit of $800, I know what I am talking about. A few weeks ago Mr. George Ewald, secretary of the Cincinnati Poultry and Pigeon Association, came to me and said: "Can't you get up a dog show in connection with our poultry show?" Knowing how hungry Cincinnati was for a show I said: "Yes, and I'll get 300 dogs here" (we had over 300). I said: "What prize money will you put up?" He replied: "The best we can do is the regular percentage plan, same as on chickens." I went to work and in dead earnest, and if I do say-it (and many others will say the same) I got up the best dog show ever given in this city. Why did I work day and night for three weeks? Solely for the dog interest, not asking or receiving one penny of pay for doing the work of ten good men. Twice I worked till 3 a. m., and twice all night long. I consider my time, at a panic basis, as worth ten dollars a day, and I had to neglect my regular business for weeks to get up this show. A kick now from a man for a matter of a few cents, is rather tough, to put it mildly. Every exhibitor here in Cincinnati should feel happy and satisfied to have had a chance to put his dogs in a show, even if he did not get a penny in wins. The AMERICAN FIELD certainly knows that it is a precedent established for many years, and a well-known rule of all poultry shows, that they pay 50 per cent. to first and 30 per cent. of balance to second, retaining the small balance for expenses of benching and caring for exhibits; they also do not furnish an exhibitor's ticket unless entry money amounts to $2, and retain ten per cent. commission on all sales. I got them to issue exhibitors' tickets to all dog exhibitors and not to collect the ten per cent. commission on sales—and many dog sales were made at our show, fully fifteen in all. Premium list read "50 per cent. of total entry in each class to first prize," and then had a period after this sentence, which closed that deal. It then read "30 per cent. to second prize," but did not say of total entry fee. Mr. Hall came in my store and "kicked." I said to him, "first money has been paid to first prize winner; the man has gone, and how could the show pay you a percentage of his win that he has got?" To make itovery plain to some of these amateurs the premium list might have read "30 per cent. of balance to second prize," but ordinary common sense would, as it did read, make it plain enough to any reasonable man. This show cost $2,000, and receipts were $2,003.20, and if Mr. Hall, the only "kicker" we have had, will call on Mr. George Ewald he will be presented with this excess. I put the entry at a low figure, $2 for first dog and $1 for others, so as to make it easy. For this small consideration the Cincinnati Poultry Association benched, fed and cared for each dog, paid out 50 per cent. to first prize, 30 per cent. of balance to second prize, and retained the large (?) balance for first-class care of dogs and have paid all prizes. I slept twenty-five hours in eight days (by actual calculation) for the good of the dog interests alone, and now to have a "kick," naturally makes me feel a bit sore. Should I be called upon again to perform the same duties I shall expect a proper reward in good American dollars, or I don't play. Life is far too short for "kickers." I've been to many a dog show, got beat too, and yet did not "kick." The Cincinnati Poultry Association are not applying for membership in the A. K. C. The Cincinnati Kennel Club, of which I am secretary, is in good standing, and if a show is given next Fall, the Cincinnati Kennel Club will give it with regular prizes hung up and under A. K. C. rules. I shall soon call a meeting of the club when we expect to add new life to it by many new members, among them several of the leading members of the Cincinnati Poultry Association—this result due to the very successful show just given. We do not want any kickers, however, but reasonable and sensible men who love dogs more than they do a second win of ninety cents. Men who if beaten will put up, look smiling, and come up in good shape for the second round. This is the other side.

Cincinnati. AL. G. EBERHART, Supt.

[We are fully aware, probably no one more so, of the immense amount of work Mr. Eberhart took upon himself in order that Cincinnati might have a show of dogs, and knowing how hard he had labored we felt rather indignant at the poultry association's manner of treating second prize winners by informing them after they had won that 30 per cent. meant 15 per cent.—and by settling on that basis the association only paid out in prizes 65 per cent. of the entrance money, whereas at dog shows generally it is just the other way, viz., the amount of money paid out in prizes exceeds the amount received as entrance money. Whether Mr. Hall's second prize was worth ninety cents or nine dollars makes no difference. Mr. Eberhart stands up loyally for the poultry association, but his contention that 30 per cent. meant 15 per cent. is, of course, unsupportable. There is no reason, however, for Mr. Eberhart to feel aggrieved. as he is not held responsible for the action of the poultry association.—ED.]

THE resignation of Mr. P. T. Madison, secretary-treasurer of the United States Field Trial Club, is a serious one to the interests of a club to which he has long been so faithful: this, with the action of the club at its annual meeting at Chicago about a year ago, and events recently transpiring, involves its very existence. The placing of handlers on the board of governors, the acceptance of the apology of one of the principal ones, which seems to have been forgotten by the writer, in the trial at West Point, Miss., together with the solicitation of men to become members that southern people could control the actions of the club, are factors in its rapid disintegration. So much so is this the case, that it is doubtful if another trial is held by this organization. Its descent from its position at the head of field trial organizations to its present condition is without parallel. In justice to its members not present in the last ten days this brief statement is made now. Far-seeing members predicted that when handlers were elected on the board of governors, where they would be liable to be called on at any time to adjudicate upon the affairs of the club and the actions of their brother handlers, a mistake had been made; but at subsequent meetings it was not corrected, and the situation became aggravated. The handlers themselves have not viewed the action of the club as correct, and many of them have refused to become members when solicited, wisely giving as a reason that they did not think that they should be in any position where their voices should in the least govern the actions of the club. No reflection in this article is intended, in any way, to reflect upon the large majority of them, but, on the contrary, to approve of their course; for they deserve, and are treated with, the utmost courtesy to all, for they are men of character and property, and their business is recognized as a respectable, confidential and honorable one. But a step too far was made by one, when he solicited a prominent gentleman and kennel owner to become a member of the club, stating as a reason that the southern members should, or could, control the actions of the club. To the credit of an honorable southerner he refused, for the reason given why he should join. When this fact became known, with other incidents of the meeting at West Point, Mr. Madison promptly tendered his resignation, saying to friends afterward that he would not remain an officer in any club where sectional feeling was invoked for purpose of rule. Mr. Madison's resignation was followed by that of many others, some of whom were elected members during the week. The interests of the public owners, kennels and handlers will not suffer even if the disbandment of the club should occur. A new club will be formed at once, covering similar ground, and it will profit by the experience of all that have existed before, in providing advanced rules for its government and attractive features for its trials, some of which will be of a social nature. A list of names of prominent sportsmen in every part of our land has been prepared, who should consider it an honor to be associated with each other in the movement and who are expected to give their influence unhesitatingly to the formation of a new club. Many who retired from active participation in such matters years ago will be expected to give their influence, and all should feel honored in being called upon to effect an organization that will be honorable and just to all. A meeting for organization will probably be called at Chicago during the dog show, in March when dates for trials and other matters will be definitely settled.

New Albany, Miss. J. M. TAYLOR.

THE last day of the old year I made a flying trip to Denver and met Mr. E. T. Weiant, the genial secretary of the Western Kennel Club, who royally entertained me for the day and took me to his home and showed me some canine beauties in the shape of St. Bernard puppies. They were out of his prize bitch Pratt's Belle (Sir Bedivere-Judith), which swept the show benches last Spring, and as their sire was my Champion Melrose, I was of course very much interested; and the more I looked the more interested I became. Finally I wound up by becoming the owner of the puppies and their dam, and also Princess Penelope, by Aristocrat, a grand young bitch. The puppies just about suit me, and their dam is looking much better than she was last Spring and weighed one hundred and seventy pounds after weaning the litter. I also bought from Mr. C. T. Wentworth the young rough bitch Lady Alton II, which won at Denver last Spring in the puppy class. Mr. Wentworth has some very nice dogs. Mr. Weiant kindly drove me out to Mr. Withington's place, where I saw fully a hundred highly bred dogs all in pink of condition, and I must say I never before saw so many dogs in one man's hands and all in such fine form. I wound up a busy day by running over to Mr. F. H. Fisher's fine home to see my old friend and favorite Saladin, which I sold to Mr. Fisher a year ago. I never saw him looking so well, and was more than pleased to find him in such good hands. I came home with a lot of good dogs and a very pleasant recollection of Denver, Denver dogs, and the gentlemen fanciers of the city, and I fully hope they may have the rousing big show they deserve next Spring.

AN interesting operation which took place quite recently at the veterinary hospital of the Ohio State University is related by the Toledo Blade: "A well-known gentleman, owner of a very valuable setter, had brought the dog to the hospital for treatment, stating that he believed the dog had swallowed a bone some time previous and he was fearful of losing the animal. The animal was closely watched for several days and his actions showed that there was likely something the matter with the dog's stomach, but whether there was some foreign substance therein could only be determined by a direct examination of that organ. Dr. Paul Fisher and Dr. D. S. White, surgeons of the hospital, resolved to perform the operation of laparotomy, or in other words, to open the abdominal cavity and examine the stomach. The dog was starved for thirty hours, when the operation was performed before the senior class of some half dozen students of the veterinary school by Drs. Fisher and White. First the dog was given several hypodermic injections of morphine, and when well under the influence was placed on the dissecting table. The abdominal cavity was opened, the stomach exposed and carefully removed and examined to determine whether it contained any foreign substance. Nothing of the kind was discovered, but the basis of the dog's trouble was found to be centered in the nerves of the organ, and its diagnosis very similar to the diagnosis had there been a foreign substance. The operation was a signal success. The stomach was replaced, the cavity closed and stitched and the dog allowed to come from under the influence of the anesthetic." He was carefully tended and the treatment indicated by the nervous trouble of the stomach was followed and he appears to have recovered his health.

REFERRING to Harry C. Hopkins' note last week, I want to state a few facts. As to the dog,s age (born August 30, 1891), he was registered and his age is a matter of public record beyond dispute. As to the "four days" he had the dog, I had time to take a week off for a quail hunt down in the Shenandoah Valley, and the dog was shipped to Mr. Hopkins several days before I started on this trip and arrived here the same day that I did on my return. Pretty long four days. As to express charges, I still have the receipted bill. And last but most important as the dog's field quality. Mr. Hopkins states the dog was worthless in his estimation. This same dog was owned during the 1893 season by a professional trainer as his "show" dog and exhibited by him in the field to his friends and patrons as a sample of a first-class bird-dog properly trained. During the months of August, September and October of 1894 he was used by a local trainer near this city to train his young dogs with, he being so perfect in his field work and absolutely stanch as to make him a good pattern to copy from, being experienced on grouse, quail and woodcocks. A neighbor who had frequently been afield with me said I had made a mistake to let that dog go, as he considered him one of the best I had ever owned. I was then shooting over The Corsair and Ightfield Domino. Having a surplus of good dogs was why I sold one. Facts are stubborn things to down and the best text to follow in print.

THE officers of the Mascoutah Kennel Club are not idle these days, and we are notified of some additions to the premium list in the way of both classes and specials. Both Skye and Irish terriers are to have two challenge classes instead of one, and the Irishmen get a puppy class and a novice class also; and in the novice classes for mastiffs, St. Bernards and Great Danes a third prize (the club's silver medal, has been added. Specials that have been added since the premium list was published are: A silver medal for best Skye terrier; same for best exhibit of four cockers any other color than black; $10 for best smooth St. Bernard bitch owned in Cook County, Ill., and never having won a prize; the Greyhound Club's medals for best dog and bitch; a silver cup for best English setter owned by a member of the Mascoutah Kennel Club; another for the best collie under two years of age bred by a member of the club; $10 for the best bred (!) black and tan dachshund in the open classes; a silver cup for best fox terrier under two years of age and bred in America; $5 for best bull terrier sired by Belleby King; $5 for best bull terrier sired by Croydon Dutch; the Bulldog Club's silver medals for best dog, best bitch, and best American-bred dog or bitch (for members only). It is also announced that poodles will be transferred from Mr. T. F. Rackham's list to Mr. John Davidson's. Exhibitors should bear in mind that entries close on Saturday of next week.

IT looks as if Ben Lewis intends to maintain his reputation as the boss handler, for he informs us he will exhibit and handle a fine string of dogs at New York, Detroit, Chicago and probably Denver shows for the following gentlemen: Messrs. E. A. Burdette, W. O. Lindley, Chas. Wilson and Dr. Oliver, of Chicago; Dr. Jno. R. Daniels of Cleveland; Mr. C. C. Hendee, Milwaukee; Mr. Dutton and Mr. C. E. Davies, of Boston; Mr. Geo. W. Lovell, of Middleboro, Mass.; Mr. W. B. Foster, of Brockton, Mass.; F. H. Perry, of Des Moines, Ia.; Mr. W. W. Brown of Springfield, Vt.; F. A. Oatman and H. Le Roy Jones of New York; Noel Money of Oakland, N. J.; Mr. Stewart Diffenderfer, of Baltimore; Dr. J. Ferris Belt, of Wilmington; H. H. Nelson, of Long Island City; J. E. Bartleson, of Thurlow, Pa.; Dr. S. G. Dixon, F. F. Fleer, Jno. Duncan, Dr. A. Dickson Barr, C. A. Shinn, Wm. Wright and James Foster, of Philadelphia. Some of the dogs are well known on the bench, and some will tread the sawdust at the New York show for the first time in this country.

DR. A. T. REGENSBERGER of San Francisco owns the largest St. Bernard dog on the Pacific Coast; it is not yet three years old; when in condition, weighs nearly two hundred pounds, stands thirty-four and a half inches at the shoulder, is erect on its feet and has immense bone. This dog has already won two first prizes as a puppy on the bench, but through an accident lost the sight of one eye, which will keep him from further competition, although his owner will no doubt exhibit him at the coming shows, as he feels justly proud of him. There is quite a demand for his services on the coast for breeding. He is in the care of the Presidio Kennel, who [illegible] Smith's Gundred, one of the best [illegible] Coast and a granddaughter of the gr[illegible] doubt the union of Gundred with [illegible] puppies above the average. I hav[illegible] puppies (two dogs and one bitch), [illegible] out of Lady II Glendyne, which I have reason to feel proud of.

As I have read the numerous complaints made by people who have bought dogs and have been swindled out of their money, I thought perhaps I might offer a suggestion, which, if followed, would prove a great help in the sale of good dogs, but might prove a drawback if only poor ones were to be disposed of by description. My suggestion is that every breeder provide himself with a hand camera (not smaller than 4 by 5) and photograph every dog offered for sale. After the outfit has been procured and the man who operates it has got an insight into the mysteries of the art the expense of making the pictures will be small. The photographs of the dogs offered could be mailed to prospective purchasers, and in case a sale was not effected they could be returned to the breeder. In this way the expense of the exchange would be only the postage, and the chances are a sale would be made and both buyer and seller satisfied.

Coldwater, Mich. KODAK.

OUR little city being on the main line of travel from most northern and western points to southern Georgia and Florida, it very often happens that sportsmen on their way south stop here for a few hours, or a day or two. If they have their dogs with them it is customary to take them out of the cars and crates to give the poor animals necessary air and exercise. If this should meet the eye of a sportsman who has lost a setter here or in this section of the state, I can recover his dog for him. A negro found the dog wandering around the outskirts of town near the railroad depot, looking gaunt and famished, and he took possession of it. I am satisfied, from the dog's appearance and the collar he had on, that he is well-bred and was lost as I have suggested. If the owner will communicate with me and give a description of dog and collar, I can get the dog by giving the darky a little remuneration for his care of it.

AN advertisement from the City of the Straits Kennel Club calls attention to the closing of entries for the Detroit show on February 11 (next Monday) and to the number of special prizes secured by the club. Mention of these latter was made when we received the premium list in our issue of January 19; they include a silver cup (value $60), another valued at $20, a silver cigar box (value $16.50), a silver cup, a silver trophy and a silver inkstand (values not given), some cash specials of $10 and $5, and some merchandise prizes. A complete list of them, printed on a slip of red paper, was inserted in the premium lists sent out, but anyone not having received same should write the secretary without loss of time.

MR. A. M. YOUNG, the promoter, if we remember rightly, of the special sweepstakes for American-bred wirehaired fox terriers (to be judged at the New York show), notifies us of a rearrangement of the prize moneys; or rather of the added money, for the percentages of entrance fees remain the same. Instead of $20 and 50 per cent. the winner is to get $25 and 50 per cent.; the second dog will get $17 50 (raised from $15) and 35 per cent.; the third will get $7 50 (cut down from $10) and 15 per cent.; and the fourth prize of $5 is done away with. This revision of prizes concerns each class, and there is offered a special of $10 for the best in the two classes.

UPON re-reading a late number of the AMERICAN FIELD I noticed in a brief review of the dogs owned by Mr. Frank Anderson of Chicago that the writer, a Mr. Elliott, credits the greyhounds Master Rich and Miss Rare with being "the winner and runner-up respectively of the American Derby in 1885." The writer evidently is not posted on such matters. There was no American Derby in 1885 for greyhounds, and these dogs were not whelped at that time. Master Rich won the Great Bend Derby in 1888, but Miss Rare did not run up, a dog named Locks securing second honors.

MAY I be permitted to indorse Mr. P. T. Madison's condemnation of the "challenge business." It is simply a cover for blatant advertising of man and dog. When first brought into play it, no doubt, impressed the public generally, but it is now an old dodge worn threadbare and it does not deceive anyone. None of these challenges ever come to anything, and it always disgusts me when I find them taking the place of good reading matter in the columns of our sporting journals, and I know my sentiments are shared by others.

Des Moines, Ia. W. N. K.

WE wish to correct an error of your reporters as to the breeding of Tony's Gale as it appeared in the U. S. F. T. Club's Setter Derby. His breeding should read by Antonio—Nellie G, instead of Antonio—Can Can; and his breeder, Theo. Goodman, of Terre Haute, Ind, instead of ourselves. Too much credit cannot be given Mr. J. H. Johnson, of Carlisle, Ind., for the manner in which this puppy was developed, as it was not placed in Mr. Johnson's hands until late last August, having had no previous training whatever.

MR. P. T. MADISON, secretary of the United States Field Trial Club, hits the nail on the head in his condemnation of this "challenge business." We are all sick and tired of it; it means nothing more nor less than free advertisement. Come, gentlemen, quit it. It is low, undignified, and not becoming a gentleman.

IN his report of the All-Age Pointer Stakes of the U. S. F. T. Club, run at West Point last week, I note your reporter omits the name of the dam of my pointer Jingo, from which I fear the majority of your readers would conclude that his dam's name was unknown. He and Delhi have the same dam, Queen II.

PLEASE insert the inclosed sales in your most valuable paper. I could have sold a great many more puppies than I had for sale, and all through the small advertisement I had in the AMERICAN FIELD; had letters from most all parts of the country. Your paper certainly is the greatest paper in this country to advertise dogs for sale in.

Maineville, O. W. F. Foss.

AMONG the handlers at the Chicago show will be found Mr. A. G. Eberhart, who, we hear, is getting together a good round lot of dogs, which, with the representatives of his own kennel, will keep him busy; it is tolerably safe to say there will be a good sprinkling of prize winners among them.

HAVING had some business transactions with Mr. E. H. Moore I wish to bear testimony to the treatment that I, an entire stranger to him, received at his hands. I found his word better than some men's bond. It is a pleasure to meet men of Mr. Moore's caliber.

REFERRING to the AMERICAN FIELD of January 25, I beg to call attention to my error in the date of birth of my cocker bitch's, Reham Dolly's, litter, under heading of "Whelps." It should have been November 29, instead of November 9.

EXHIBITION and auction sale of paintings by the late J. M. Tracy. All sportsmen know Tracy's paintings. No American painter excelled or even equaled him in depicting animated sporting sketches, or in faithful pictures of dogs, horses and other animals. Prints of Mr. Tracy's pictures are very plentiful, but the coming sale is the largest collection of his original works ever shown together. About 150 of his best and most characteristic paintings will be on exhibition from Monday, February 18, until Thursday, February 21, at J. B. Norman's auction rooms, 238 Fifth Avenue, New York, and the sale will take place on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, February 20 and 21.

A Prominent Breeder's Opinion

WEST NEWTON, MASS., January, 1895.

Kindly send me a duplicate supply of Excelsior Dog Cakes. Your Excelsior Dog Cakes are the best I have used and I find that the daintiest feeders of my dogs (which are collies) take readily to them. I have never knowu them to be in such excellent coat and condition. Yours truly,

DECLINE OF COURSING IN AUSTRALIA

Two-and-twenty years ago there was instituted in the colony of Victoria the first coursing club. Unlike most organizations of the kind, its birth was not by any means humble, or composed of small beginnings; quite the contrary. For many years the early colonists had used greyhounds for hunting the kangaroo, and something assimilating to coursing had been in vogue, with the wallaby—a smaller species of marsupial—as the quarry. Meanwhile the English hare had also taken kindly to the climate, and was multiplying everywhere by leaps and bounds. With many old-country coursers on the spot, and dozens of native Australians ready and willing to ally themselves with practical sportsmen, the material for a coursing club on a big scale was ready to hand. The best men in the colony, in fact, socially speaking, threw themselves heartily into the enterprise, and the then Governor, Sir George Bowen, willingly accepted the position of patron. The first and only president the club ever had, also its best friend during its twenty-odd years' existence, was Mr. now Sir William John Clarke, Bart., one of the leading landed proprietors in Victoria. One of the vice-presidents was Mr. William M'Culloch, "dyed in the wool," as a courser, in his youth, in Galloway, and well known in English coursing circles, and above all, the secretary was Mr. Thomas Haydon, of Carshalton, son of a veteran Surrey follower of the leash. Launched on its career so auspiciously, the principal consideration of land for coursing was a trifling matter, seeing that the President placed his vast Sunbury estate, about a score miles from Melbourne, at the disposal of the club. Add to this, the most fashionable blood of England, Ireland and Scotland was at once imported, at a period, too, when money was a secondary item, and when everybody and everything was flourishing. The auction marts, naturally, had a lively time, in which connection it need not be matter for surprise that there were venders of greyhounds with easy consciences in the trifling art of manufacturing pedigrees. Furthermore, old-country trainers were induced to try their luck in the new land, and subsequently the late Mr. George Warwick went all the way from England for a season's judging.

Well, the inaugural meeting of the Victoria Coursing Club was held in the month of May, 1873, and ran into four days, the card being composed of the Sunbury Stakes, for thirty-two all ages, and the West Bourke Plate, for puppies, of similar dimensions, with pieces of plate added. The function, it need scarcely be said, was a decided novelty, more perhaps from the fact that hares were to be coursed for the first time in the colony. The newspapers awoke to the occasion, and special reports were prepared each day and an extract from the opening day's report may be of interest: "A special train was provided for the members of the club and the public who wished to take part in the sport, and as the time of starting drew near the Spencer street station presented a very curious and interesting appearance. In every direstion were to be seen men leading highly bred and carefully prepared greyhounds, clad in all the coxcombry of dog clothing. These animals were subjected to a deal of criticism by the persons present, the proper thing, apparently, being to run the hand slowly along a dog's back, and say he was very fit. The dogs must have been in good condition, for it was very rarely that anyone ventured to give an unfavorable judgment." And then the laborious character of the new pastime was not to the liking, apparently, of the colonial scribe, for he significantly observes: "From the first it was easy to see that those who considered coursing a pleasant, easy pastime were greatly out in their calculations. Instead of the short velvet sward of the English downs, the ground to be gone over was flat-lying country, thickly sprinkled with crab holes, that were full of water, the little knolls being thickly covered with long grass." The chronicler, however, omitted mention of the stones, rocks and tree stumps, either of which was sufficient to maim or kill a greyhound. Such was the inauguration of the principal coursing club on the vast Australian continent, and it is interesting to recall the circumstance that the runner-up for the all-aged event was Mr. Haydon's imported dog Pell Mell, by Cauld Kail—Meg, by Bonus—Belle of Eamont, formerly known as Whinfell, and bred in the neighborhood of Penrith. Mr. Haydon also imported, from the same kennel as Pell Mell, Protector, by Patent—Restless Belle, by Patrician—Romping Girl. Returning to the Victoria Club, however, that same season a Waterloo Cup, of thirty-two nominations at £12 10s. each, a Purse and a Plate, were successfully brought off. Rival clubs, in a lesser degree, were started all over that and the neighboring colonies of South Australia and New South Wales, and shortly the game was taken up in New Zealand and Tasmania.

Years rolled on, the Waterloo Cup was increased to a "sixty-four," and the entry money increased to 25 sovereigns, thus putting the stake on a par with England, and among imported winners and runners-up may be enumerated: Royal Water, by Cauld Kail—Rosewater, bought by Mr. W. M'Culloch for 150 sovereigns after dividing the St. Mungo Cup at the Mid-Annandale Meeting; Sandy, runner-up to Royal Water, and the winner the following year, by Master McGrath out of the Denton Hall bitch Medal; Capri, by Canute—Little Star, to whom Maid of Oborne, by Misterton—Coomassie, ran second; and Melfort, by Bedfellow—Aunt Martha, for whom Mr. Robert Chirnside gave 400 sovereigns. Harking back, however, to the Victoria Coursing Club and its fortunes, an unpleasant split in the membership, resolving itself into "sides," in 1876, ended in the formation of a rival institution, under the title of the Australian Club, with Mr. Haydon as secretary. The struggle was bitter, and though the ill-feeling and antagonism cooled down so far as to admit of the two clubs working hand in hand, an undoubtedly heavy blow was struck at coursing, and, one by one, the influential members dropped out of the ranks of both clubs, which, adding losses through death, culminated in the dissolution of the younger rival, after a large sum of money had been spent in laying out the Werribee estate, near Melbourne.

Mr. John Munday, a Kentish man, has, for nearly twenty years, been the secretary of the Victoria Club. Much of his characteristic energy was devoted to initiating the inclosed system of coursing. Apart from the rocky ground in the open, there was always an uncertainty about the supply of hares, as there is very little covert for driving, compared with the old-country coursing; indeed, it may safely be said that, at almost every open meeting, Puss had to be walked up to. It will scarcely be credited that one Waterloo meeting, in the old style, lasted from Monday morning until Saturday night. The members of the club entered enthusiastically into the scheme, and the expense of laying out entirely new ground, also belonging to Sir William Clarke, was mainly borne by debentures. The change from the open country to an inclosure was viewed with every mark of approval by the majority of the members, while, as to the old-fashioned sportsman, who, after a heavy day's tramp in the open, to paraphrase Robert Burns:

"Thought na on the lang Scots miles,
The stumps, the crabs, the creeks, the styles,
That lay between him and his hame"—

he was placed in a decided minority, and must perforce adapt himself to the new order of things, or retire from the sport. But there was reason in his growl, seeing that thereafter greyhounds were bred mainly for speed to the hare. The new ground was opened in July, 1881, with the Waterloo Cup, and, as matters had been hastily and crudely formulated, the initial result was the reverse of satisfactory. The hares having been turned down only a few days before, the trials were, as a consequence, anything but tests of merit. The following year, however, and subsequently, nothing could have been more satisfactory, and the "Oval," as it is called, 800 yards by 400 yards, with hares bred on the ground, has been generally conceded to excel anything at Plumpton, Gosforth, or Haydock. And now, through force of circumstances, this splendidly appointed coursing ground will be closed to coursing, the old club, after a long and brilliant career, having at last to bow to the inevitable. What changes time brings about! Here was a coursing club with, in the heyday of its prosperty, a membership 400 strong, holding half a dozen meetings in the season, including the Waterloo Cup, adding plate valued at nearly £500 to its stakes, and turning away nominations for the greatest prize of the year. And this last year of its existence the difficulty was to find sixty-four subscribers for the Waterloo Cup at £3 10s. only! Ichabod!—Skiddaw, in our English cotemporary, The Field.

A LETTER from Mr. S. W. Vidler tells of entries that have been made for the Altcar Produce Stakes; he has sold four saplings (imp. Trales—Miss Lottie) on the condition that all are entered, which is not a bad idea, and will himself enter the remainder (4) of the litter. He writes: "So the entire litter (four dogs and four bitches) will be entered; would it not be an extraordinary thing if they all went to slips? Vladimir, my Miller's Rab—Comedy dog that ran with Sorrento, I have had the misfortune to lose. He collided with his sister, Valetta, and dislocated his spine. I worked hard with him, but he suffered so intensely I had to destroy him. A post mortem revealed the cause, and he could never have moved a limb again. I can't get New Year's Day puppies, but Miss Lottie is due to whelp on February 14, and then I guess I'll have some "Valentines" for 1896. By the way, I am feeding a Chicago product—the Chicago dog biscuit from the Dent Co.—and my dogs never looked better. I intend training on it in future." We have heard of more than one courser who is well pleased with these biscults, which are advertised in our columns, and we shall not be surprised if they grow in popularity at a rapid rate. Greyhound owners will make no mistake if they give them a trial.

WE hear Mr. Lowe has some nice saplings out of poor old Partera and White Lips, the latter's by King Lear, a dog that is not known to the coursing world, but a fast son of Lord Neversettle—Partera that unfortunately had a foot crushed when a couple of years old. Some of these youngsters ought to run.

ANYONE who has not received entry forms for the Altcar Club's Produce Stakes can obtain them by addressing the secretary, Mr. T. W. Bartels, 625-628 Cooper Block, Denver, who will be only too pleased to forward them promptly.

THERE are in America a son of Greentick and a son of Bit of Fashion; if a daughter of one dog were bred to the other it would approximate the famous nick that produced Fullerton, Simonian, Young, Fullerton, etc.

RIFLES FOR BIG GAME

SALEM, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Your correspondents A. B. W., of Salt Lake City, and Wapiti, of Las Cruces, New Mexico, seem to be "all at sea" as to what constitutes the shocking power or killing force of rifle bails when used on big game.

I am afraid that A. B. W. will find the 500-grain ball illustrated in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 5, a very disappointing bail in shocking and killing force when tried on game, except on raking shots, where about all depends on penetration. This ball when compared with the 300-grain ball adapted to the .45-90 Winchester, even if used with the full charge of powder (which cannot be done), will give a much higher trajectory, about 300 feet less velocity per second, and a little more penetration, say one-third more; but the shocking or killing power of this ball on game will be found less than the 300-grain bail, except, as stated above, on raking shots. And even were it a foot long and weighed a pound, it would still possess no advantage over the 300-grain ball, provided its speed was not increased.

Penetration, of course, is necessary, and I believe the rifle spoken of is not lacking in this requisite. But of greater importance are speed and striking surface. Speed of ball has much more to do with its killing power than many good hunters suppose; and this is true, too, without regard to penetration. A light ball fired at a very high velocity will flatten more, has a quicker and more powerful rotary motion, which gives it tearing or rending power, than is possessed by the long, heavy ball moving at a lower rate of speed. Diameter of ball or striking surface is given in two ways. First, by the actual diameter of ball as given by the molds, and second by expansion of the ball on striking game. Solid bails made soft enough to expand to any extent on live flesh are, as a rule, not reliable in guns using very large charges of powder. But by using a moderately hard ball with a hole in forward end (usually called an express ball), we get an expansion about double the diameter of the solid bail, or a striking surface of about four times that of the solid ball. Express bails will be found amply sufficient on all game, provided they are properly constructed and used with heavy charges of powder. Still, a ball that would be just right for deer would not be the exact thing to attack a grizzly with, as it would splinter too much and lack in penetration.

The best form of ball, to my notion, for all big game shooting is one of .50-caliber, with only a moderately deep hole, say two-fifths the length of ball, and about five thirty-seconds of an inch in diameter. Then if the ball is of the proper hardness it will not fly to pieces on flesh, but will fold back toward its butt, tearing a fearful hole as it goes. Should it strike bone it will splinter, but will still have weight enough in its solid butt to continue its mashing power.

A. B. W. will, I think, find the killing power of his 500-grain ball much improved if he will cut off two-fifths of an inch of its butt, and make a hole, as above, in the front end of it, use good powder and all he can load of it. Or, what would be better, send to the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., and get, say, one hundred express balls, .45-300, also one hundred "Gould hollow balls," .45-330, and give them a fair trial on game, with all the powder he can load in the shell. Then if he can shoot six or seven shots through the body of a bighorn at 100 yards without knocking him down I will promise to go out there and hold the sheep by the tail while he cuts its throat with a "barlow."

SUPPORTS HIS STATEMENTS BY AFFIDAVIT

WEST BAY CITY, MICH.

Whereas, On the third day of November, 1894, the AMERICAN FIELD published an article written by me, entitled "Rifle Shooting that I Have Done," and whereas, there appears in the January 12, 1895, issue of said AMERICAN FIELD a humorous sketch dated at Jackson, Tenn., signed John D. King, which said sketch is evidently designed to cast doubt and ridicule upon my said article of November 3, now I, William Thomson, of West Bay City, Mich., do solemnly swear that each and every one of the statements contained in my article are in all particulars absolutely true, and that I refrained from mentioning many other remarkable rifle shots made by me, simply because I knew that gentlemen of Mr. King's evident disposition would not believe them.

NOTES

JUST as I had about recovered from the alarming effect produced by the Almonian tales, a modern Ananias in the person of Mr. John D. King enters the arena with sublime heroism that commands the most wholesome wonder, if not envy. That rifle shot miracle of his, known as "One Eyed Dick," should be embalmed and exhibited throughout the world, while our friend Mr. King deserves a medal of large proportions and of valuable material. A man who, like our friend Mr. King, can write such a sweat-producing narrative as that describing the feats of "One Eyed Dick," and survive his accomplishment, deserves a prominent position on the pages of history. The feats described remind me very much of an account given me recently by an old enthusiast of the rifle, who declared he frequently fired repeated shots from a rifle when out simply for sport, and that he used but the one bullet for all his firing, and yet fired a bullet with every cartridge. When pressed for an explanation he said that he used a bullet slightly smaller in diameter than the diameter of the bore, and would have all cartridges blank, save the first one first. He would adjust the rifle, perpendicularly, with such mathematical precision that the bullet fired from the first cartridge would descend with unerring accuracy into the barrel to be discharged again and again. After I had mopped the perspiration from my brow, I ventured to mildly inquire how he succeeded in inserting a fresh blank cartridge and replacing the rifle in exactly the same position and also whether or not the bullet used had any respect for atmospheric influences, in answer to which my interesting narrator mildly informed me that that had often occured to him, but he could never satisfactorily explain it! Verily there are some mighty wonders among the rifle shots of America.

TRAP SHOOTING IN THE SOUTH

DAY

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Another year has come and gone, the other season is about to open, and in a few months the guns which have served us so well in the field will be carefully put away to for trap shooting and to the favored few, to the [illegible] guns which are growing more and more in popular[illegible] are becoming better known.

[illegible] tournaments which occurred during '94 in [illegible] and Memphis meetings, which com[illegible] any tournaments given in all America [illegible] attendance and amount of money of[illegible] were the tournaments given under the [illegible] facturers' and Dealers' Association; [illegible] mitted no shooting events of what[illegible] roughly enjoyed than those, as the shooting is diversified and eminently popular, while the management, under Mr. Elmer Shaner, comes so near absolute perfection in every essential particular that very few complaints are heard, and those for the most part from some bred-in-the-bone kickers which form the exception proving the rule. Mr. Shaner is a typical manager of tournaments; his whole make-up renders him particularly adapted to the work. Of even temperament, pleasing address, temperate in habits and speech, he is always found when most needed and never obtrudes. He is industrious and painstaking to a fault, and whenever a trap or trapper works amiss he is there at once, right in the pit, ready to remedy the evil in such a prompt, quiet, easy way as to cause no delay and never by any chance any friction. He is not of the blatant kind of fellows who go roaring about creating confusion by their incessant prattle of empty nonsense, but on the contrary, a quiet, easy-going, hard worker when needed; and above all, when not in harness, wise enough not to bore everyone with details of what ought to have been done but never was accomplished. Then, there is another man whose name is "Jack" Parker, who also makes friends as he goes along, by the straightforward manner in which he has managed many tournaments, so that Messrs. Shaner and Parker have made a success of a trying and very difficult task. When I say this I think I echo the sentiments of 95 per cent. of the shooting men of my section who, of all men on earth, are the quickest at detecting an impostor; or, on the other hand, fully appreciating a gentleman in whatever capacity he may be serving. I may have gone out of my way a bit in speaking of these men, but really I have heard so many compliments paid them that it would be unfair, when half a chance offers, not to say a kind word in their behalf; and I flatter myself that the great shooting contingent will not criticise this brief and quite inadequate notice, coming as it does spontaneously and with the very best of intentions.

There were, of course, many smaller and equally enjoyable shoots. Notable among those are always those given at Lynchburg by a coterie of gentlemen sportsmen who simply grace the ranks by their presence and who, in any walk of life where the standard of honor in the only gauge, are ever foremost in showing to the world the true chivalrous, old Virginia style which made their forefathers typical and glorious American sportsmen. I think it is safe to predict that the Lynchburg Gun Club will come out in greater force this coming season, as renewed interest is being manifested down there in trap shooting generally.

The Kentucky Gun Club of Louisville gave no regular tournament outside of the one held by the Interstate Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association, exceptiug a state affair at live birds for the championship of Kentucky, which was mentioned in these columns. I think the Louisville men, being blessed with so much shooting of the highest order among themselves, care but little for the promiscuous gathering of men from afar, too many of whom are drawn thither merely for the money they may win. The Kentucky Gun Club, with its large membership of genuine sportsmen and trap shots (two widely different sets of men), is in point of general equipments equal to any club of which I know. There is shooting on those grounds twice or more times a week all the year round, at both live pigeons and targets, and the scores continually being made there show the material that celebrated club is composed of. Outside of a few famous places in America it is difficult to get up a lot of pigeons at a moment's notice, but in Louisville one can at almost any time indulge in this splendid sport and find running mates there too who will jog along at so lively a pace that one has to grip the old gun pretty straight to keep up, for old "Jim," the purveyor, prides himself on the quality of his pigeons, while Charlie Mills attends very skillfully to the targets and many other details.

There is one thing certain, added money will always attract a large body of shooters, and to say that a system of handicap which more nearly places all men on a footing than that at present in vogue will deter many from attending large tournaments is a very one-sided way of placing the proposition, because, inasmuch as there are at least fifty second-class men to one of first flight, even if the tip-topper stays away, there will be dozens of inferior shots ready and all the more willing to take his place: hence it is quite evident that a tournament which a few professionals may avoid will attract a very large number of men who are certainly quite as worthy of consideration. No system, however, of handicap should operate so as to permanently bar, on the plea of superior talent alone, any man who shoots his best and who is not a common trickster, for it is obviously unwise and equally unfair to penalize any man solely by reason of his superior talent. The incentive to excel is throttled the instant perfection is ruled out; but, on the other hand, to stand a group of men of all shooting calibers on the same plane, demand of each one an equal entrance fee and make no allowance for different grades of skill, is simply a farce and exists only when shooting at the trap, which isn't a bit complimentary to the brain department of the fraternity, although it may speak volumes for their pluck. It is the writer's honest opinion that any club that in the future gives a tournament at which more men can win, by properly handicapping each and every one, will be considered a public benefactor alongside with the club that bars crooks and schemers who are no more to be classed as sportsman than is an organ grinder to be considered a musician. So long, however, as clubs derive the bulk of the money hung up as prizes from the quantity of targets thrown, it is hard to say what system of fair handicap can be used, as it is imperative to throw a great many targets in order to accumulate a fund therefrom large enough to attract men from afar; and any system which slows up shooting naturally curtails the profits accruing to the club. Memphis has started out boldly in this direction. It only remains to be seen what device will obtain there and how it succeeds. Knoxville has, of late years, disregarded handicaps, placed all on a level, made the matches of universal length—long at that—and lets the best men win. No one can deny the magnitude of her tournaments, the perfection of their working order, the aggregation of talent she draws, nor the absolute fairness and impartiality in every detail; and last, but not least, the liberality of the purses given, which, after all, are the drawing card, though none the less deserving of praise and commendation. The Knoxville Gun Club has earned a reputation and a degree of fame that may well be envied by any gun club in America, for it invariably does all it promises or better; therefore, so long as such methods continue we may always expect to meet a great proportion of America's best shots there as long as the motto is, "Fair field and no favor," and nobody barred.

The large gatherings reported yearly at Monte Carlo, Monaco, the Gun and Hurlingham clubs, and at our own Grand American Handicap, could never materialize were everyone required to shoot at the same rise. It would be absurd to expect it. And yet in a game purely of skill and not partly one of chance, (as all short pigeon matches must be occasionally) we find 75 per cent. men struggling against others who on their very worst days can beat easily 10 per cent. better and so on all the way down.

The task of getting up a tournament on a large scale is fortunately for the most part one of love and pride by a select few of the club members, whereas, if the brain work and actual labor were paid as a cold cash transaction the expense would be so great that it would bankrupt any club, and would yet fail to fully recompense the leading spirits and hard workers. These men and hundreds of others work night and day to successfully bring about a good shoot, and all the thanks they get is: "Very well done, old man; hope to see you next year;" or many times unfavorable comment as to why more members of the home club did not participate, when it is well known that the majority of them would have stood no earthly chance of creaking anywhere near even, and that most men of sound mind are not given to chipping in, as a perpetual thing, for the benefit of a lot of superior shots who attend shoots as a regular business.

But there are some men whose winnings are never begrudged by the festive though deluded "contributor." Men who mind their business, make themselves agreeable, shoot their best, and are never so busy scheming but what they can listen patiently and talk agreeably to the merest tyro, going into details with him and sinking their personality for the time in the endeavor to teach him something. Take Harvey McMurchy for instance. Let him shoot never so well and carry off ever so many prizes, no one resents it. On the contrary the field is with him, for he is known as a fair, honest, brilliant shot, and furthermore, a genuine sportsman who, afield or at the score, can give a great account of himself, and who moreover is never so busy with somebody else's affairs that he cannot attend to his own [illegible] business. The result is that such [illegible] and pleasure by men who listen [illegible] eful, pleasant manner tells them. [illegible] o envies him the stakes he draws [illegible] n. His business is to shoot and so [illegible] well as a target shooter as Rolla [illegible], and of far more consequence to [illegible] ndpoint, is his serene tem[illegible] m at all times and under all circumstances to make new friends for himself, while his old ones remain true to him to the end. Such men are rare. As a target shot we have not his equal; as a pleasant, easy going fellow, none can excel him, and while he certainly does win, yet he does it fairly and by rolling up big scores and winning high averages, rendering himself valuable to his employers and yet not making himself disliked by his competitors, which, all in all, is a very hard road to travel, as the steering must be of a natural gait else the rudder, if of artificial construction, will at times disregard the ropes and land the ship high and dry on the rocks of failure and destruction. Any man can be smooth, square and obliging even, so long as he wins. That's easy. In fact a good winner would be worse than a cur if he were otherwise. But it takes a man of angelic temperament to be docile and serene when losing. There is where the innate good nature of Rolla crops out and for which he is more to be envied than for all else.

I mention these two men as conclusive and positive proof that a man's superior shooting qualities alone do not in any way build up a wall around him and isolate him from the good will of all other contestants; while on the other hand the most masterly shot may sink into utter insignificance as a shooter by arousing feelings of disgust and antipathy that so completely overshadow his marksmanship that his skill fades into oblivion, while his disagreable traits loom up so conspicuously that these alone bring him to mind and consequent abhorrence. Whatever such a man may win, however small it may be from the aggregate number of contestants is more keenly felt by each than had he taken ten times the sum from every single individual. Such is mankind! For although it is a queer dispensation of Providence which allows men to be blindfolded and shoot against others who are vastly their superiors on dollar for dollar, yard for yard, shot for shot and bird for bird footing, yet those men are in no wise lacking in other reasoning powers, and while they are willing to magnanimously pay for their fun, yet they draw the line at that and do not relish contributing to the fund which goes to men they hate.

I have an idea that San Antonio, Tex., will draw a large gathering of sportsmen at the next annual tournament. There is no reason why those shoots should not be largely attended, as the management, so far as I have seen, has always been beyond criticism. Perhaps the added money is not sufficient to attract men from a great distance, still within her own bounds Texas can give a good tournament and I believe will this coming season.

In the way of guns the 12-bore has about driven all others out of the field, even where larger gauges are allowed to stand at the same rise. Texas is an exception to this rule, as there many use 20-bores and even smaller calibers, and what is more to the point, roll up good scores with them. What these men might do with properly built guns of larger gauge is rather a conundrum. Black powder and hammer guns have both gone the same way. They died hard, and although displaced by more modern substitutes, yet in the minds of the older men they are bound to be held in grateful remembrance for the good they both did in days gone by—days when activity of body and strength of limb carried us over fields that now appear so much rougher and fences that are so much harder to climb. But other youngsters with nimble feet, dextrous hands and flashing eyes are coming along, and to them are we bound to give place, however reluctantly, for the best natured fellow in the world, although ready to divide his last dollar with a comrade, is still envious of youth that once was his, and which so many of us have squandered by overdoing a good thing and utterly neglecting the simplest of nature's laws as regards wanton exposure to wet and cold and excessive fatigue. Well, I know there is no use preaching caution to the boys, for I once scorned all such advice, and now nothing is left me but to rue it. So go ahead. Rheumatism is a dead sure shot. It may be slow in coming, but it gets there just the same and will stay right with you, and there's the rub.

The North and East may beat the South in population, manufacturing enterprises, etc., and the wild and woolly West may discount us on lots of things, but remember, gentlemen of all sections, that the South has in Knoxville and Memphis two gun clubs that extend all a cordial invitation to join them, and where one will find a rendezvous for men from all parts; and moreover, about as many, if not actually more, of them than any other place: so come along. A gentleman in the South has a passport to any point That's all he needs, and the better he shoots the more they admire him. What more can you ask?

GAUCHO.

MR. BROWN TO DR. CARVER

BURTON, TEX.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Replying to Dr. Carver's article published in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 2, will say that while I may be deficient in brain power, I am still a gentleman, and not deficient in courtesy. Now to Dr. Carver's challenge. In the first place I do not use a 12-gauge gun; in the second place I cannot leave my business at present to go to Chicago; but here is what I will do for the Doctor: I will shoot him three matches, $100 a side, 50 birds each match, American Shooting Association rules, he allowing me to use a 10 gauge gun, providing the Doctor will shoot the three matches at Burton, Tex., and will allow me five misses in each match as no birds. As to expenses, I will say that should I be so fortunate as to win the three matches I will refund him $50; if I win two out of the three I will refund him $25. To show the Doctor that I am in earnest I have deposited $100 with H. Knittel of this place. If the Doctor accepts we can arrange as to dates.

E. BROWN.

I hereby certify that Mr. E. Brown, of Burton, Tex., has this day deposited with me one hundred dollars as a forfeit in above matches.

Burton, Tex. H. KNITTEL.

NOTES

SOME weeks ago a subscriber to the AMERICAN FIELD wrote a communication which was published, to the effect that if correspondents of the AMERICAN FIELD would give a brief account of guns used by contestants, together with the kind and quality of powder and shot, the description of matches or tournaments would be of much more interest to many readers than they are at present. In connection with the above I beg leave to add my plea in favor of the writer's simple request, for it seems to me the accounts would be lengthened out very little by the addition of something like the following after each shooter's name: "Francotte No. 12; E. C., 3½ drams, and 1⅛ No. 7;" or, if they wish to make it a little more complete they might say after mentioning the shooter's name: "Smith 7½ lbs. No. 12; 3½ drams E. C.: 1 express, 1 blackedge, 1 cardboard; 1⅛ oz. Tatham's No. 7 and card wad." Such a description would assist would-be purchasers in the selection of the most popular and in all probability the best makes of guns, powders, shells, wads, etc.

Washington, D. C. FRANK G. MIDDLETON.

A MATCH at 50 live birds per man for $50 a side has been made between Oswald Von Lengerke and Dr. Frothingham, both of Chicago. The date set for the race is Friday, February 15, at Watson's shooting park, Burnside. The birds are to be a selected lot, such as will test the skill of each man. In his last public match—that with Mr. Smith of Evanston—Dr. Frothingham scored 92 out of 100, and he is said to be in equally as good form now as then. Mr. Von Lengerke has had very little practice of late, consequently should he be defeated it will not be a great surprise to his more intimate shooting friends; neither would they be astonished to see him win, for he is naturally a very good trap shot and with a little practice before the match may "pull himself together" and shoot the race of his life. Should the weather be severely cold or disagreeably stormy, the race will be postponed until some future date, as neither man cares to expose or punish himself unnecessarily.

MR. J. K. PALMER, who recently won the amateur pigeon shooting championship of the Larchmont Yacht Club has presented a valuable silver cup to the club to be shot for. The conditions are at 25 birds and an optional entrance fee of $25 or $12 50, with handicap allowances as follows: Twenty-eight-yard men, one miss as no bird; twenty-seven-yard men, two misses as no birds; twenty-six-yard men, three misses as no birds. The prizes will be as follows, after the club deducts the usual ten per cent. of the entrance fees: Forty per cent. of the entrance money and cup to the winner; thirty per cent. to second; twenty per cent. to third. The contest will be decided on the shooting grounds of the Larchmont Yacht Club today, February 9, commencing as soon after 11 o'clock a. m. as possible.

THE committee on constitution and by-laws, appointed at the meeting held on January 24, at New York, to regulate trap shooting, met on February 1 at 313 Broadway, New York. Present: J. A. H. Dressel, chairman; B. C. Everingham, L. H. Shortmeir and Edward Banks. A telegram from W. H. Wolstencroft stated that sickness prevented his attendance. A draft of a constitution was prepared and the meeting adjourned to Friday, February 8. It is intended to have both the proposed constitution and by-laws ready for publication in the sportsman's papers fully five weeks prior to date of next meeting, April 3, in order that all clubs and kindred organizations may have plenty of time to act on them before the meeting is held.

THE Leonard Smokeless Powder Company, with offices in New York City and Nashville, Tenn., and which is a Tennessee corporation, made an assignment on January 31 to Benjamin S. Harmon. The company was organized a year ago last August, with a capital stock of $10,000,000. A few months ago the company was reorganized, Mr. C. F. Meek being chosen president in place of Mr. J. H. Brown, and Mr. W. H. Macnabb was reëlected treasurer. Mr. Macnabb, in an interview, said the liabilities were nominal, all the obligations, except a few hundred dollars, being due to the stockholders. The work since the organization of the company has been mostly experimental, and consequently very costly.

THE Rome (N. Y.) Gun Club will hold a tournament on February 15 and 16. Both live birds and inanimate targets will be used and all purses will be divided into four moneys, 40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent. In the live bird events the participants will be handicapped in distance according to their known ability as live bird shots. The club has a spacious club house and as fine grounds as are to be found in the state. The management will spare no pains to make the occasion pleasant for all who attend and the shoot a grand success in every particular. American Shooting Association rules will govern all program events.

A MATCH for $500 a side has been arranged to take place in Tacoma on February 17 between "Stevens," of this city and Eddie Barlow of Port Orchard. Each man is to shoot at 100 live pigeons, American Shooting Association rules to govern. This race will be the biggest shot on the coast for a great many years, and is creating much interest among Pacific coast sportsmen. "Steveus," it will be remembered, has shot several races, both in Chicago and this city, while Barlow is the gentlemen who quite recently backed himself to kill 82 out of 100 selected pigeons, but failed.

Seattle, Wash. C. F. GRAFF.

IT is said that Edgar G. Murphy Jr., and Geo. Work, both members of the Westminster Kennel Club, of New York, have arranged for three matches at live birds on consecutive days, the conditions being 200 birds each match for $2,500 on the first two matches and $5,000 on the third match. If money makes a man shoot as 'tis said to "make the mare go," these races ought to be corkers from start to finish. Should either man win all three races he will have cigar money for a week or two, sure.

A SPECIAL dispatch to the Times, of Chattanooga, Tenn., reports the death of Capt. A. H. Bogardus, the ex-champion live bird shot of the world, at Austell, Ga., on February 3. This is possible, though hardly probable, as we had a personal letter from him last week, and he was at that time at his home in Lincoln, Ill. If a man by the name of Bogardus died at Austell, Ga., on the date named above it must have been some other than Capt. A. H. Bogardus, the veteran trap shot.

CAPT. A. W. MONEY, using Lieut. A. W. Du Bray's Whitworth steel barrel Parker gun, a few days since, in a strong wind and on a fast lot of good birds, did some remarkably fine work, everything considered. His score was 23 out of 25, and it being the first time Mr Money had ever shot the gun, not only proves that Capt. Money is a good all-round, everyday shooter, but also that the gun is a splendid killer. Mr. Du Bray says, "she isn't for sale at any price."

THE Yantacaw (N. J.) Gun Club will hold a handicap shoot on February 22 for two cups, first and second prizes. The shooting committee of this club, Messrs. R. K. Cooke, E. R. De Wolf and G. R. Deakin, has prepared an interesting program for the season, and the organization is preparing for a season of active work at the traps. The club membership is already large and is composed of material of the right kind to soon place the club in the front ranks of such organizations.

MR. W. L. COLVILLE, who for years has been traveling salesman for the Baker Gun and Forging Company, writes us that he will sever his connection with that company on March 1, 1895. Mr. Colville is an ardent sportsman, a man of excellent business qualifications and a thorough gentleman, and the AMERICAN FIELD hopes to soon hear of his engagement with some other good gun manufacturer.

IN the second race at 100 live pigeons each between Mr. W. G. Clark, of Altoona, Pa., and Mr. W. M. C. Jones, of Pittsburg, Pa., shot in the last named city on January 30, Mr. Clark outshot his man easily, killing 95 to his opponent's 81. The birds were a very good lot but were left out in the cold until they were chilled through, which made them slow. The match was for $200 a side.

WE hear that the secretary of the S. P. C. A. at Colorado Springs recently brought an action and obtained a conviction against a member of the Country Club for cruelty while pigeon shooting at the club's traps. The bird in question was killed instantly, but the verdict was against the shooter. The case was taken to the County Court on Saturday last by an appeal.

IN a sweepstake shoot at live birds, at Pittsburg, Pa., recently, Mr. W. G. Clark of Altoona, won first money all alone, missing his first bird and then killing 49 straight. The match was at 50 birds per man, $40 entrance, and first money amounted to $157.50. In the same contest Mr. W. S. King and Mr. H. B. Mohler divided second money ($94) on 46 each.

WE are pleased to acknowledge a friendly and very pleasant call on Tuesday morning of this week, from Mr. W. Fred Quimby (the only Fred) of New York City. Mr. Quimby is spending the week with his trade in Chicago, and, judging from several remarks dropped in his conversation with us, he is getting his full share of business.

THE Pekin (Ill.) Gun Club will hold its annual Spring tournament during the last week in May, the exact dates yet to be determined upon. The club expects to have the tournament last three days, and thinks May 29, 30 and 31 will be the days that will finally be selected.

THE first shoot of the season of 1895 of the New Jersey State League, will be held on the grounds of the Boiling Springs Gun Club at Rutherford, N. J., on February 16. In addition to the league team contest there will be an all-day shoot.

THE Arkansas State Sportsmen's Association will hold its fifth annual tournament at Hot Springs, Ark., on April 8, 9 and 10, programs for which will be ready for distribution on March 1.

IT is reported that a big shooting tournament is being arranged to take place soon at Toronto, Can.

TRAP AT DENMARK

BURLINGTON.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I herewith inclose you the scores made at the shoot held at Denmark, Ia., recently. The shoot was held at Brockway Park. The weather was quite cold, and there was about fourteen inches of snow on the ground, which assisted in making the shooting quite difficult. There were ten contestants, as follows: Scott and Ebner, of Burlington; Paul, of Mediapolis; A. Kammerer, C. Kammerer and B. C. Brewer, of Ft. Madison; R. Lange, of Weaver; and Brockway and Burton, of Denmark.

Owing to the lateness of the hour when the contest was finished, and the distance most of the contestants had to travel to reach home, the ties were not shot off. R. Lange, of Weaver, won the American Field Trophy, scoring 43 out of a possible 50; Brockway, Burton, Ebner and A. Kammerer tied for second place, scoring 41 each; Paul and Scott tied for third place on 39 each, and Minard won fourth alone on 38. The scores in detail follow:

THE CHENOA SHOOT

Chenoa, Ill.

Editor American Field:—Arriving at this town the writer was very much surprised to see the many new brick buildings it contains, which give it the appearance of a town just rebuilt after a fire, or a place of less than a year's growth. But this is not intended as a write-up of the town, but of the shooting tournament held here, so I will get down to business.

The shooters were loaded into a wagon and hustled out to Mr. Miller's farm, where we found target traps and pigeon boxes set awaiting our arrival. Some good live birds were in the coops and a good lot of targets had been provided.

The weather the first day was splendid, but on the last day it was "all sorts," rain, cloudy, windy, the wind late in the evening being almost strong enough to blow the live birds out of bounds. The visitors present were from Piper City, Pontiac and Peoria.

The first day Mr. Linnell, of Pontiac, and Mr. Le Duck captured the lion's share of the prizes. but on the second day there came from Peoria those two rival shooters, Messrs. Irwin and Walpert. The "Tramp" was in luck in some of the races, and Walpert was especially "in it" when the live birds were trapped. The live bird events were all "miss and outs," and Walpert got the largest share of the winnings. Several miss and out events were shot on targets, Irwin winning all that he entered in. In the 20-bird target race, unknown angles, "Tramp" and Miller tied on 18 for first money, the others following with 17, 16 and 15. Some good shooting was done on the doubles, considering the wind. Professionals were barred from this shoot, hence there were none of that class present.

The feature of the day was a 20 live bird race for $25 a side, between Mr. Gus Walpert of Green Bay, and Mr. Linnell of Pontiac. Mr. Irwin of Peoria, was chosen referee and stakeholder. Walpert cut down his first bird, but only winged it. Linnell's first got away apparently unhurt, and was not challenged, though stopping inside the boundary, and when the next bird was shot went out of bounds. They were not shooting strictly American Shooting Association rules, but known traps, and the referee called dead when the bird hit or settled on the ground inside the boundary. The outcome was that Walpert won, though by a scratch. They tied on 16 out of the 20, and shot at 5 more, each getting 4. They then settled the match by shooting miss and out, and Walpert killed and Linnell lost his first bird.

The scores:

Walpert....12201211202220222011-16 | Linnell.....10222201112212022021-16
Tie: Walpert 4, Linnell 4. Miss and out: Walpert 1, Linnell 0.

BOILING SPRINGS GUN CLUB VS. PASSAIC CITY GUN CLUB

The second match of a series of five arranged some time ago between the Boiling Springs Gun Club of Rutherford, N. J., and the Passaic City Gun Club, was shot on the grounds of the last named club on January 26, the teams being composed of twelve men each and each man shot at 25 single Empire targets. Neaf Apgar performed the thankless task of referee and as anyone who knows him might expect, gave entire satisfaction. The scores made were not large, either individually or collectively, yet the teams were so closely matched that the race was quite interesting, the Boiling Springs team finishing four birds ahead of the Passaics. The scores in detail were as follows:

MAPLEWOOD GUN CLUB SCORES

Maplewood, N. J.

Editor American Field:—The first monthly contest for the 1895 silver cup was shot off on January 26. The weather was decidedly against target shooting, but six of the boys turned out to enjoy the sport; but Warren Smith, where was he? This is the first regular shoot he has ever missed, and none present could account for his absence. A new addition to the shooting fraternity, Mr. Abott, did exceedingly well for the style of shooting and the fact that this is his first effort at trap shooting. This contest represents the championship of the club for the year and the cup is contested for on the fourth Saturday of each month. Each shooter is graded according to his known ability, and the one making the greatest number of points in the year wins the cup and championship. The number attached to each name in the club shoot represents his handicap, viz.: Jackson 16. By breaking 17 he gains one point, or a possible 9 in 25. Reeves 10, or a possible 15 in 25. The same rule applies to each shooter. The scores:

TRAP AT KANSAS CITY

Kansas City, Mo.

Editor American Field:—I inclose herewith the scores made by two gun clubs of this city, which have shot since my last report to the American Field.

Dr. Carver also did some practice work preparatory to the match he was to have shot with Mr. Kleinman. His work was very pretty, although he only killed 66 out of his last 75. The birds on that morning, however, were very hard, and there was a strong wind sweeping across the traps.

The Kansas City Gun Club shot on Thursday afternoon, January 17. The club has changed the number of birds to the man in its club contests to 15, instead of 10. as heretofore. The scores follow:

READ—HARDIN

Omaha, Neb.

Editor American Field:—Inclosed please find scores made in the recent Read—Hardin match, which was shot here; 100 birds per man for $100 a side, loser to pay for birds. The shooting commenced at 11 a. m., with prospects of a fine day, but when 25 birds had been shot by each man a strong wind commenced to blow from the north, blowing sand and fine particles of snow across the traps and into the shooters' faces. The birds were a very good lot, and with the strong wind to help them were made extra good.

Mr. Read shot his 12-gauge Fach Princeps Greener gun, weight 7¼ pounds, using U. M. C. green Trap 2¾-inch shells, 48 grains of E. C. powder and 1¼ ounces of Raymond No. 7 and Omaha No. 6 shot, 28 yards rise.

Mr. Hardin shot his old standby 10-gauge Lefever gun, weight 9 pounds, using U. M. C. Smokeless 2⅞-inch shells, with 54 grains E. C. powder and 1¼ ounces Omaha Nos. 7 and 8 shot, 30 yards rise. Omaha shot is ½ size smaller than Raymond shot. Attendance 375. About $1,000 changed hands on the result. Referee, G. F. Brucker, of Omaha; scorer, B. Kennedy, of Omaha; trap puller, G. H. McCord, of Norfolk. The scores:

Young Sportsman

Essexville, Mich.—Find inclosed scores of a live pigeon shoot participated in by members of the Bay City Gun Club on January 19. The birds were both old and young, and of every color. A shooter would in one round get a young bird which would have to be started with the flushing lines and it would start slowly toward the score only to be stopped with the first barrel, and the very next round he would get a white bird that would start as quick as the trap was opened and which it would take both barrels to stop. The shoot took place on the ice, opposite the new club house, in Essexville, and the ice being covered with snow made it very hard shooting, particularly on white birds. Following are the scores:

Event No. 1.—20 live birds, $10 entrance, one money, low man to pay for birds.

Cotter and Merrill divided the money. McDonald paid for the birds.

Event No. 2.—10 live birds, $10 entrance, one money, low man to pay for birds: McDonald 10, Merrill 7, Cotter 6. McDonald won first money. Cotter paid for birds.

Event No. 3,—10 live birds. $10 entrance, same conditions.

McDonald............02*121222*—7	Cotter..... ....22222212—8

McDonald and Merrill shot a miss and out to see who should pay pay for the birds in the last event, with the following result: McDonald 6, Merrill 5.

Cotter shot a 12-gauge Parker hammerless and American Wood powder; McDonald shot a 12-gauge Parker hammerless and Schultze powder; Merrill shot a 12 gauge Remington and Du Pont's Smokeless powder.

GAME AND SHOOTING

REDHEAD, Chicago.—(1) What would be the effect of using an extra strong primer (say U. M. C. No. 3 long) in a cartridge loaded with black powder? (2) Would it increase recoil? (3) Would it decrease penetration? (4) How would it affect the charge as to quickness? (5) Would it make it as quick as nitro powder if FFFG black powder was used? (6) Would it increase the bursting strain? (7) Would any advantage be gained in using such a primer with black powder, or would it be a disadvantage, and how? Ans.—(1) It would add strength to the charge used. (2) Yes. (3) Not materially, but would have a tendency to make a more open pattern. (4) It would probably make no difference. (5) Fine black powder of itself is about of the same quickness as the nitros, and we do not think the No. 3 primer would add anything in this direction. (6) Not perceptibly. (7) The only advantage gained would be in getting more force, while the disadvantages would be in getting more recoil and a more open pattern.

G. R. S., Louisville, Colo.—Some time since my son loaned his 12-gauge 9-pound Smith gun to a friend to shot at the trap. This man used for his load 3½ drams black powder, one cardboard wad and two ¼-inch blackedge wads on powder and 1¼ ounces of shot in a 3-inch Trap shell, load rammed quite hard, and while using this load the gun jarred off and at one time flew open. I took the gun and when I fired one barrel at a pigeon the safety slide jumped back so that I could not use the second barrel. Now what I want to know is, did the first load cause the load in the second barrel to explode, or did the first load jar the hammer of the second barrel down thus causing the explosion? Ans.—The firing of the first barrel undoubtedly jarred down the hammer of the second barrel, as it would be hardly possible for the second shell to explode from any other cause.

H. H. S., San Francisco, Cal.—I am desirous of procuring a dozen pairs of Virginia quails to forward to the colony of New Zealand. Where can I get them? What will they cost per pair placed on board steamer at San Francisco, and what should the birds be fed while in transit, which will probably be four weeks? Ans.—Write to Chas. Payne, Wichita, Kan., who can probably supply you with the birds and give you the information desired as to cost and feeding.

D. R. R., Knox, Pa.—(1) Were prairie chickens ever liberated in this state for propagating purposes, and if so with what success? (2) What time of the year would be best to liberate them? Ans.—(1) We do not know that they ever have been, but presume they have at some time. (2) We should think Spring the better season.

SWIFT, London, Ont.—How many pellets to the ounce are there in the following sizes of Tatham's chilled shot: Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 7½, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12? Ans.—The figures given relate to each number above in rotation, except 7½, which count we have not got, and are as follows: 73, 88, 109, 136, 172, 223, 299, 409, 585, 868, 1,380, 2,385.

C. J. W., Piqua, O.—Can you give me the address of Austin Corbin, the gentleman who owns a large game preserve in New Hampshire? Ans.—We cannot, but think a letter addressed to Austin Corbin, New York City, would reach him.

Information Wanted

IN answer to the inquiry of Mr. V. E King of Saginaw, Mich. regarding migrating tendencies of quails, I will say that I have for a number of years been interested in the habits of birds and animals, and I find that neither birds nor animals migrate East or West of their own accord, but are often driven to do so by the encroachments of civilization. For instance, quails taken anywhere on the latitude of 45° and placed in or near the same latitude will not migrate, nor will quails taken from a high latitude and placed on a lower latitude show the same tendencies to migrate. Birds do not migrate from any cause except to escape the inclemencies of weather. Thus, birds taken from any of the Western states and planted anywhere in the Eastern states on or near the same latitude will prosper and stay, but should birds be taken, if only two or three degrees, south of a certain place, they will migrate on the first approach of cold weather.

Camden, N. J. CHAS. W. JONES.

IN answer to Mountaineer and with due deference to the opinions of others who have written upon the subject, I wish to say that, all things being equal, a 10-gauge gun will outshoot a 12-gauge, an 8-gauge will outshoot a 10-gauge, and a 4-gauge will beat them all in killing circle. Mountaineer should decide for himself as to the gauge gun for him to use, for physical ability is a strong factor, as a 10-gauge must be of proportionate weight to have the advantage mentioned over the 12 gauge, and while the 12-gauge should use 1⅛ ounces of shot, the 10-gauge ought to shoot 1¼ ounces. True, some use in the 12-gauge 1¼ ounces of shot, but a test made with a counted charge gave more in the circle and better penetration in 10-gauge and 12-gauge guns using respectively 1⅛ and 1¼ ounces of shot. With the 10-gauge the 1¼ ounces was superior every time.

Cazenovia, N. Y. WILL. H. CRUTTENDEN.

WILL some shooter that is thoroughly posted kindly answer the following questions through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD: (1) Which will do the best shooting in pattern and penetration, an 8¼-pound 10-gauge or an 8½-pound 12-gauge shotgun with 1¼ ounces shot? (2) Will not the 12-gauge stand more powder than the 10 gauge? (3) Using the same quantity of powder, which would recoil most? (4) Would the same apply to a 7½-pound 12-gauge and a 7½-pound 14-gauge?

Bonfield, Ill. F. A. C.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—High class comedy-drama is the attraction at the Schiller next week, the bill being Edwin Milton Royle's delightful play, "Friends." Royle, who early in his career was acknowledged a brilliant dramatist, wrote this interesting comedy which has brought him to the front rank among the dramatic stars of the stage to-day. In its leading character, that of John Paden Jr., a modern poet, he has won distinction as an actor and a strikingly effective and finished dramatic artist. There is no greater favorite with the public than Edwin Milton Royle. He is supported by a strong New York company, organized expressly for the production of "Friends," which when last here made a great hit and added to a popularity that has steadily increased since its first production two seasons ago. "Friends" may justly be said to have realized a phenomenal success from the very first.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be plsced under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscelianeous.". For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under "Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. If you want rhetoric and syntax, better try Boston. New York is a little slow about most things, but has produced a striped circus tiger and an investigating committee. Kentucky has an international reputation in the line of horses, women and whisky, but when it comes to MEATS and general FOOD PRODUCTS there is no question about it—

We are the People Right Here in Chicago

We have the most expert chemists on earth in this line; we can not only preserve meats alone and in combination, so as to keep indefinitely, but still have them palatable and nutritious, without any loss of bone or muscle-making animal salts.

Without a single exception every dog man who has seen

DENT'S DOG BISCUIT

Has pronounced it the most wholesome and nutritious dog food ever placed on the market. It is so palatable that your dogs eat it readily. For conditioning dogs for bench shows or hard field work, for insuring a vigorous growth and good straight, clean bones in young dogs, for a general kennel food, it is unequaled. It will not disturb the stomach or bowels; keeps the breath pure and the teeth clean and handsome.

YOU SHOULD TRY IT.

PRICE: 25 lbs., $2; 50 lbs., $3.50; 100 lbs., $6.

Special price to breeders. If your dealer won't furnish it, write to us.

DENT'S DOG MEDICINES

They are the only preparation on the market embodying the latest ideas of modern scientific investigation, and they effect cures where everything else has failed. Nicely prepared and easily administered.

If your puppy's stomach is full of worms its growth and development will be retarded, its system undermined and his chances of becoming a winner reduced.

Remember two things: First, that worms annually kill more puppies than all other diseases combined. Second, that Dent's Vermifuge is sure death to worms and absolutely harmless to the dog. It does not require any physicking and produces no violent convulsive action of the bowels. Get rid of the worms early, and you will be surprised to see how much better the puppies do. Price 50 cents.

DENT'S DISTEMPERINE

The anti distemper specific. A marvelous resistant to septic disorders. It will not only effectually ward off an attack of distemper if given in time, but where the disease exists it will control the fever and all unfavorable symptoms in the shortest time and without disturbing the bowels or stomach. It is receiving the indorsement of the most prominent breeders.

Dent's Pepsinated Condition Pills

The great alterative and tonic for run-down, debilitated constitution, indigestion, constipation, foul breath, harsh, dry coat, gagging cough, vomiting of green mucus, weak eyes, variable appetite and general unthriftiness. They exert a marvelous alterative and tonic action upon all the organs of the body, increase the secretions of the stomach and intestinal juices and thus promote the appetite, aid digestion and prevent souring of the food, regulate the liver and kidneys, control the bowels and effectually tone up every tissue and organ of the body. If you want your dog bright, animated and full of life, with a clear eye, a cool nose, a handsome, glossy coat and a sweet breath, use them. Price per box 50 cents.

Ben Lewis, Lansdowne, Pa. (the prince of handlers), always has his dogs in condition. Write and ask him how he likes Dent's Pills. Another prominent breeder says: "They will make a dog eat if he has strength enough to move his jaws."

THE ART OF SHOOTING.

LONDON, FOURTH EDITION, 1892. PRICE $3.00.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average if not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which gives pleasure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of whose followers I am indebted for many pleasant days.

A CRITICAL SITUATION

The eyes of the sportsmen throughout the United States are directed toward Illinois, focusing with apprehension on its chief city, Chicago, and pleadingly upon its capital, Springfield.

From every section of our great sisterhood of states we hear the note of alarm sounded by our sportsmen: "Protect our game! On to Springfield!" From out of the deepest recesses of our great marts, rising above the never-ceasing hum of traffic in the world's commerce, we hear the clarion notes, clear, distinct and not to be misunderstood: "We will contest to the highest court of the United States our right, under the constitution, to sell and transport game legally killed."

The issue is so sharply defined that, alas, it bodes little good for our game, for, if doctors disagree, and the Illinois legislature stands at this moment in that relation, the patient (our game) will surely suffer. The air is full of dissension (what a blessing it would be if it were equally full of game), and not only are game dealers being charged with a greedy desire to annihilate the game of the country, but many sportsmen, high in office in sportsmen's clubs, are being charged with killing more game in season than they need for sport even, and taking it to the cold storage warehouses for use during the year, tapping their game deposits the same as a man taps his little pile of bills in his safety deposit box, or as the imbiber taps his cellar jug in a prohibition state. Such is the sad spectacle presented to our view by the present break in harmony between the Illinois state game warden, the Illinois Sportsmen's Association, and the Produce Exchange and railroad interests.

The situation is so critical, and the future of our game hangs in the balance so sensitively, the AMERICAN FIELD is convinced that a compromise of conflicting interests is absolutely necessary and must be effected if the game of the country is to be properly protected and saved from further depletion. The logical way to arrive at just conclusions is to diagnose the cause of all this dissension and then prescribe a remedy.

The prime cause is the avowed intention of Illinois game dealers to sell game, which has been killed legally, at any time of the year.

Looking back to the period when cold storage houses were not a factor in commercial dealings, it was a difficult matter to keep game for any length of time in a salable condition, and often have we seen cartloads of putrid fowl sent to the dump. In those days the consignor was the loser, and the same cry was raised thirty years ago declaring it a shame and an outrage on the state that game should be so slaughtered and shipped in to rot. To-day it is different; necessity, the mother of invention, has conceived the cold storage house, and the game, instead of rotting and being dumped, is put away in the cold storage room there to remain indefinitely without a taint of decay, in consequence of which the consignees will receive game consignments up to the last hour of the open season for the sale of game. Having the game so in possession, accepted and obtained legally, the consignee will not surrender it to the dump or that other modern convenience, the garbage crematory, without a legal fight which, if carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, will take many years.

According to decisions of state supreme courts, a state has the right to prohibit the sale of game, also to prohibit, during its close season, the sale of game lawfully killed in another state. But will the enforcement of this right create a healthy moral sentiment in favor of such a law? We believe that equal justice prevents violations, for without the moral support of the public a law is not worth the paper it is written on. For nearly a quarter of a century laws have been enacted prohibiting the sale of game entirely in some states and for a set period in others. During all these years dealers have been arrested time and again for having game in possession or selling it out of season; but the decimation of game has gone steadily on until to-day many states afford no shooting whatever, and sportsmen are compelled, at great expense, to travel to far distant sections of the country in order to enjoy, what has now become almost a luxury, a day afield with dog and gun. Here, then, is a precedent which proves that prohibiting the sale of and confiscating game does not prevent the killing or depletion of it.

What, then, is the remedy? Prevent absolutely the killing of game for as long a period each year as would allow every game bird or fowl to nest and rear its brood to full maturity, during which time prevent absolutely the handling of a gun in the field, the sale of game and the transportation of game. This period should extend over nine months of the year. The remaining three months allow not only the killing, but the sale and transportation of game. The people at large want game only when it is mature, and if allowed to shoot it or buy it they will respect the law. Of course we have the self-styled gourmet and the game market violator the same as the violator in the field, and it should be made the duty of game wardens to prosecute this class of violators the same as any other under penalty of dismissal and forfeiture of salary.

If there is no market during the close season there will be no incentive for killing game for shipment. To secure this desirable condition it would be necessary for all the states to enact uniform laws regarding the sale months for game, thus killing the vocation of the market-hunter and violator.

But the question arises here, and one which the produce dealers are stoutly contending for, what shall be done with the game in cold storage when the open season ends? Shall this game be taken to the dump or the crematory? The produce men say they will spend every dollar they possess fighting this before they will submit. The remedy must be sought, however, for it would be suicidal to not settle it at once and forever. That a majority of the American people are in favor of the sale of game during a limited period, including the holidays, cannot be denied. Therefore we would suggest that the state issue a market hunting license, to cost not less than $25, and register its number and name of holder. Make it a criminal offense for any agent of any common carrier to receive for shipment any game without the consignor first showing his license; whereupon the agent shall enter the number and name in his shipping book and stamp the number on the crate, box, or tags. As the produce men are ready to pledge themselves, under oath, to uphold and assist in the enforcement of laws if allowed to sell game legally received, make it a duty, imposed by law and penalty, to inform the local game warden at once of the receipt of any game; the warden shall thereupon examine said consignment, and if he finds that said game was shot and legally shipped, he shall attach a tag to the package, permitting the sale or storage of it in a bonded cold-storage house. If said game was illegally killed then not only should the market shooter pay the penalty for his crime, but the agent of the common carrier as well, and the game be confiscated and turned over to a charitable institution. No shipments of game should be allowed until the sixth day after the season opens and end five days before the season closes. The game on hand should be placed in bond and delivered, after the close season has begun, to the owner only upon the written permit of the chief warden. In this way all game which had been received during the legal open season could be sold without allowing contraband game to come into market. This, it seems to us, would deprive no one of his rights, supposed or real, in property in game. Every hotel, restaurant or dining-car should be compelled to show openly its bonded tag, which should bear the date of issue and the amount of game taken out of bond on that permit. It is easy to see how fraud could be detected and heavy penalties should be imposed for evasions of any kind. If the bonded plan is not adopted, then a definite date must be set when the sale of game shall be prohibited absolutely, and the state should insist upon its right to regulate the disposition of game by the imposition of the severest penalties and the maintenance of paid game wardens to watch vigilantly every market and common carrier.

House Bill 56, which has caused all the trouble and was justly condemned, was a duplicate of the original draft of a proposed law by Chas. H. Blow, Illinois State Game Warden, and published in the AMERICAN FIELD of October 13 last, for the purpose of drawing out criticism. As soon as the legislature met this bill was introduced by Representative Berry, and became known as House Bill 56. No sooner was it introduced, however, than violent opposition manifested itself, which opposition necessitated many important changes.

The only game warden bill now before the legislature is the revised bill, known as Senate Bill 117 and House Bill 224.

Section 1 contains the very good feature of a uniform open date, September 1, for all game except quails, which opens October 1. October 15 would be a much better opening date for quails. The open season on all game, excepting wildfowl, closes January 1. Deer, Mongolian and English pheasants are protected until 1900. All devices for killing or approaching game, with other than a gun, are prohibited the entire year. Penalties are provided for violations.

Section 2 protects at all seasons of the year all song, plumage and insectivorous birds, with penalties provided for killing by any means. The two objections raised to this section are that scientists may only kill or capture any of the birds mentioned on payment of a scientific license fee, costing twenty dollars. If a provision was inserted that any scientist, upon presentation to the county clerk of a permit from the chief warden, certifying that the applicant is a student or attaché of some academy of science, we believe a license to secure specimens should be granted upon the payment of one-tenth the sum, two dollars, as there should be no bar to the pursuit of knowledge. The other objection is that the words "having in possession" are not included, which would necessitate the apprehension of a violator in the act of killing the bird. To insert this clause would make liable to fine anyone having in possession a pet robin, canary or other bird mentioned in the section. We would suggest, the addition of the words: if anyone is found with a gun, slingshot, net, or other device and one of the birds mentioned, it shall be prima facie evidence of guilt

Section 3 prohibits, under penalty, the destruction or molesting of any nests or eggs of any of the birds mentioned in Sections 1 and 2. A necessary section for the protection of game.

Section 4 is the one which bears most vitally upon the question of game preservation, and the wording of it requires the most careful thought and consideration, for by its operation the rights of sportsmen, dealers and carriers are affected. First, the words, "coming from the state of Illinois" must be eliminated. This would prevent the sale of game from other states at any period other than the open season for such game in Illinois. A provision should be inserted, also, prohibiting the transportation of game within the state during the close season, and instead of the sale of game being allowed from September 6 to December 26, inclusive, we think from October 6 to January 26 would be better, for the reason that game is hardly ever salable during the hot month of September, and dealers would have a month after the season closes to dispose of game consigned at the close of the open season. All game on hand January 1 should be put in bond under penalty for violation. Regarding other methods for the handling of game we have dilated fully in the introductory to this article.

Section 6 should state that, being within posted grounds with a gun, without permission from the owner, should be prima facie evidence of guilt.

Sections 7 and 8 provide for a license to hunt and for the establishment of a game fund, both of which are excellent features of the bill, the former providing a fund for the payment of wardens without an extra tax upon people who never hunt or fish.

The remaining sections of this bill have so [illegible] features that we think they will outweigh the [illegible] points and will tend greatly to the protection [illegible] Section 14 is very positive in its wording, and [illegible] does not prevent the shipment of game within the [illegible] it prohibits anyone from supplying foreign markets with

Illinois game, and if the market-hunter's license feature, mentioned above, were incorporated, the chief warden would have no trouble in keeping track of game during [illegible] and preventing its shipment. The propaganda [illegible] establishment of state game preserves [illegible] benefits from which should not be overlooked.

In enforcing this "game warden bill" the theory on which it is based must at no time be overlooked, and that is, "prevent the killing of game instead of trying to save it after it is dead." To be effective wardens must be out in the open fields and waters at all times of the year, and with good game wardens we believe the result would be an increased amount of game and more opportunities for sport with gun and dog.

We respectfully ask the Honorable Legislature of Illinois that, should it conclude to pass this bill (House 224, Senate 117) in preference to any other, the suggestions here given be carefully considered and, if sanctioned, incorporated before the final reading.

PRAIRIE CHICKEN SHOOTING, 1894

BY EMORY

(President of the Ananias Shooting Club)

Our party breakfasted early on the morning of August 20, took wagons at 7:30 o'clock, and had a morning's hunt near the village, returning for an early lunch. The bag was not large, but sufficiently so for the use of the table for the day, at least. From daylight until noon, the guns of local sportsmen could be heard at our car, hundreds of birds being killed within the sound of an ordinary fowling-piece, and almost within the city's lines.

A full and happy night's rest, of course, and Tuesday, the twenty-first, came.

Ladies are not, usually, early risers. Our lady friends were not inclined to be, while on this outing. Gentlemen are often lazy. Ours were. Not until eight o'clock did the party leave for a neighboring farm, whose owner had invited us to shoot on it. It was "posted," and had not been shot over; still, the birds were not more numerous than on lands adjacent thereto, save that the latter had been shot over the preceding day. This day, the largest bags were made by Messrs. Whitewell and Robertson. Messrs. Whitewell and Cooperton reside at the Mecca, and are thorough sportsmen. To these gentlemen is largely due credit for the observance of the game laws, both by citizens and strangers, in that part of Dakota. No birds are shot near the Mecca during the close season, and trapping, if done in the Winter, is but to very limited extent; it cannot, however, be wholly prevented by these gentlemen.

Wednesday, the twenty-second, was to have been a day of rest; but [illegible] there must be a matinee; that [illegible] afternoon to see, if not to partici[illegible] of [illegible]. The 16-gauge and 20-gauge [illegible]rs, [illegible] by the ladies, were examined, [illegible], then a ride of a few miles [illegible]rty [illegible]he not then hunted grounds. Wednesday's score was fifty-six grouse. Thursday's bag held forty-seven (of course, for but part of a day's shooting). Nearly all the birds shot on Wednesday and Thursday were distributed among citizens who do not shoot, but whose appetites crave the breasts of prairie chickens with bacon, more than bacon plain.

People at the Mecca seldom, if ever, pluck grouse. They skin them, and save for food only the breasts, thereby "throwing to the dogs" the very best part—the juices—of the bird. Last year, the writer, one of a party which comprised several members of the present party, sat up until after midnight to pluck a lot of grouse, had them nicely cooked to order in the morning at a hotel, ate some for breakfast, and took the remainder into the country to be eaten for supper, cold. But the good lady from Norway, of the farmhouse where the party camped, threw them away, skinned fresh birds, cooked in a frying pan the breasts only, and was amazed when told that it was "just awful" to waste the other parts of the birds, because it was only by the retention of the skin of the grouse that the fatty substance of the meat could be saved. Fried breasts, with skin removed, are of no good on earth; Texas beef has as agreeable a flavor.

He who has not experienced tent life on the banks of a trout stream or of a bass or mascalonge lakelet during mosquito days, or late in the Autumn in the forests where deer are sought and cold nights are invariably found, or who has not slept in a haystack or strawstack, or in a barn, or worse, on the floor of the gable story of a one-story farmhouse, the approach to which would be up a ladder made by nailing cleats to the studding of a partition wall, with opening in the ceiling above sufficient to admit only the form of a very small or single-story man, knows little of either the surprises or deprivations of an outing. The change from the so-called comforts of home is tolerable only for reason of its novelty, and endurable only for a short time.

During the late attempted "revolution" of our Southern brethren, partisan feeling, in some of our Northern states, was so bitter that Democrats were called "copperheads"—sympathizers with the South—by Republicans, and Republicans were counted as enemies to the constitution of the Union by Democrats. In many cases both were right. There was no half way with some; copperheads cried "peace," and abolition Republicans called the constitution a "covenant with hell and a league with the devil." Both were deterrents to an early and happy solution of our differences; but, fortunately, neither were dangerously numerous. Such bitter feeling existed that even neighbors who were otherwise warm in their friendship were aggressive enemies when war matters were being discussed. It was during these troublous days that the writer, then residing at Buffalo, N. Y., was first introduced to a haymow as a place for a night's slumber—one could not say rest. With others, some of whom were Democrats and others Republicans, a party of sportsmen from Ft. Wayne, Ind., he was to have a few days' shooting near Warsaw, in that state. Taking a way train late at night from Ft. Wayne, the party arrived at a cross-road some miles beyond Warsaw, and through the kindness of the conductor were let off, bag, baggage, men, and dogs, and from the train footed it a mile or more back from the railway to a farmhouse that we expected to make our headquarters. Rapping at the door of the one-story house only brought a response in the negative to our request that we might enter and be cared for. We were told that the house was full, but that we might sleep in the barn if we wished,—a permission we were compelled to accept as the ultimatum. Once stored away in the barn (it was nearly 2 o'clock, a. m.,) sleep may have been willing to come to our aid, but it didn't come, at least for a long while, to any of us. The barn was nearly filled with new-mown hay. Men and dogs alike hunted out the easy places on which to lie. The haymow was, unfortunately, of terrace shape, i. e., layers of hay with offsets, step like, clear to the top of the mow, making upward progress difficult, though possible. The writer ascended to the extreme top of the mow. Then tales of the local war were told; how a few Democrats at Warsaw had been maltreated by Republicans, and how certain Democrats from Ft. Wayne, in retaliation, had visited Warsaw and had cleaned out the offending Republicans; and, as we afterward learned, it was from fear only that the occupants of the house had refused us the hospitality, for pay, we had asked. Then came stories of large bags of game that had been made near by in former years by some of the members of the party; then of accidents and of narrow escapes; then a description of the territory we were to hunt on the following morning, and of the danger from being bitten by the numerous massasaugers in the marsh and rattlers in the stubbles, unless always having them in mind as probably crawling through the grasses, or coiled beneath the straw stubs, with heads raised, tongues hissing, and tails rattling, ready to strike with poisoned fangs. What more than such yarns could one desire as prelude (sometime after 2 o'clock, a. m.) to an early rise for a shooting trip? One who can sleep after listening to a blood-curdling snake story, and rest during that sleep, has nothing to fear from a snake bite. New-mown hay has a charming odor, no doubt. The writer so thought, once; but ever after that night, the very sight of new-mown hay has brought to life for him a host of imaginative fears; and thoughts of creeping, crawling, venomous reptiles, will cause the coldest of cold shivers to course up and down his vertebræ, until he seems not to have any portion of spinal column left. Still, some men can take snake stories as nightcaps, and sleep well. All of the party, save the writer, were thus insensible, and soon were quiet and slumbering. For a time the stillness was offensively painful; still the writer lightly dozed, so to speak, with visions of flying bats, frogs jumping here and there, and of creeping, crawling vermin. Then, in half nightmare, came real sounds, at first very indistinctly, but slowly gathering volume. At first he listened—dallied: "Is it a cricket?" "No." "Can it be a mouse?" "No." "It is a snake that has been pitched into the mow with the hay, winding stealthily toward him!" Horror untold! O! the fierce strain on one's nerve centers! Then the sting of its fangs! Then an instantaneous awakening; and with a sudden and violent movement of the body to the side, and away from the imaginative reptile, if imaginative, or real, if real, down, down, down, head over heels, heels over head, from terrace to terrace; onto his peacefully slumbering friends below, tumbled the delirious Emory. No matter about the surprise, nor the cuss words that came from those whose prayers, if they had been told, were not yet cold. Each and all were indignant. There was no more slumber for any member of the party that night, and Emory, the president of the Ananias Shooting Club, was declared to be the hoodoo of the party, and he was so treated ever after. That was the writer's initiation into outing life. It was a novelty, true; but to him one that was far from nice. People love the odor of new-mown hay—all but one. Not since that fall from the cockloft of that haymow to its pit below, caused, as in Adam's time, by the presence of a serpent, has Emory visited a perfumer's shop in search of Lubin's or Pinaud's "best," and caught sight of a label "New-mown Hay," but shocking visions have come to his mind of that outing night, when we were refused admittance to that one-story farmhouse, from the fear that we were enemies, Republicans or Democrats, Heaven only knowing which were feared the most.

The ladies of our party at the Mecca were bent on having an "experience"—a veritable outing—and an outline for a two days' novelty show was early arranged. The plan was to drive twenty miles into the country on Friday afternoon, select a place for camping, shoot in the early evening, take a night's rest in a strawstack, slumbering, if possible, shoot on the following day, and return to the town where our car was sidetracked early in the evening of that day. That outline was followed, hence our lady friends have something to talk about, when asked by their friends at home, "How did you like your outing? Tell us all about it." In answer to the inquiry, this is what Bessie, the historian of the outing party, has to say about it:

"Horses and wagons and drivers; lunches, provisions for camp; blankets, shawls, and other wraps, and mosquito nets; guns, cartridges, and dogs; ladies and gentlemen—sportsmen; and last of all, but not the least of all, et cetera. All these were arranged in the order of their following, and "forward" was the order of march at 2 o'clock post meridian, for the long sought "experience" of a night's camping in a strawstack twenty miles away.

"The country hereabouts, in common with a large part of North Dakota, is settled chiefly by non-English-speaking people, largely Scandinavians, Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians; principally the latter. We could scarcely hear a word spoken in English, in a day's ride. These people are sturdy, industrious, frugal, and usually a very orderly and law-abiding class of settlers. The climate is somewhat like that of Norway, save that, the altitude being greater, the air is dry, and the dampness incidental to seashores does not prevail in dry Dakota, a state nearly two thousand miles from the briny deep. Everything, vegetation as well as the air, is dry. Man is not an exception. Often, yes, very often, he is very dry. The water hereabouts, when there is any, is alkaline. Neither man, nor dog, nor horse could drink of it without increasing thirst; and the effect of its use was to almost destroy digestion, and not allay one's inward burning heat. Even wildfowl seldom alight in the ponds and lakes whose waters contain alkaline properties. For reason of the impurities of the water, the party had brought from St. Paul barrels of aqua pura, distilled from waters from the Mississippi, "the Father of Waters," with which to quench thirst as awful, almost, as that of the rich man who, St. Luke tells us, called unto the spirit of Abraham to have mercy on him, and send Lazarus, that he might dip his finger in water and cool his tongue.

"At the hour for starting, oh, how hot it was! A few miles out, the dogs became restless and wished to jump from the wagon. 'Let 'em out!' was the order of the

PRAIRIE CHICKEN SHOOTING, 1894—THE LADIES WIPING THE TEARS FROM THE PREACHER'S EYES

Preacher, who was in one wagon; and 'Over!' said Kiddersen to his dog Ponto, who was in another wagon; and from a third came the voice of Whitewell, 'For goodness' sake don't let the dogs out yet, it's too hot!' But the dogs, Whip and Faust, Smoky City and Ponto, Bill and Glow, and Fritz, did the vaulting act, and there and here and here and there they ran, anywhere, everywhere, without method or purpose, at heel to each other or bunched, save the young diamond dog of dogs, Whitewell's youthful Fritz. A mile further on, and a quarter-mile to the side of the wagons, that diamond daisy-darling, not yet eighteen months old, came to a rigid stand. 'Get out quick; he's got 'em!' said the venerable prelate. The other dogs were on the opposite side of the road, far away, and no time was lost by the Preacher, Kiddersen, and Joseph, in jumping from the wagons, loading their guns, and overcoming space with the fleetness of the wind, vying with each other, seemingly, to see which could 'get there' first! Robertson and Whitewell were not sprinters in a shooting race, and they retained seats with the ladies. The dogs saw the impromptu chase, and on they came, on they went, sometimes man ahead, sometimes dog ahead; it was nip and tuck! The Preacher led in the race, with Kiddersen a close second, and Joseph several lengths behind. Would the dogs back? No, why should they, when men were in such hurry? The Colonel's dog, Faust, had been trained by an expert for a field-trial winner, and was a success, so far as speed was concerned, and led the other canines in the race. In vaulting a fence, he started a jack-rabbit, and a moment later Robertson's Glow started another. Oh, how those bunnies did run! and how Faust and Glow and the other dogs did follow! Streaks of electric fire from a supercharged heaven could not have made better time! On went the jacks, stopping occasionally, standing on hindlegs with bodies erect, statue-like; heads high, and ears cocked, soldier sentry-like, face front, looking at their pursuers, and seemingly asking them to hasten their speed! Goodness gracious, what a race! No coursing contest given under the auspices of the American Coursing Club ever equaled it! A mile out and the bunnies took a turn, made a half-circuit, and came toward the noble dog Fritz, who still held the covey of grouse. That gem of dogs had been home trained by Whitewell, and seemed not to know how to run in or flush birds, hence, could not have been a field-trial winner. There he stood, also statue-like, one foot up, with head, nose, body, and tail so extended that a straightedge would be required to note a single curve, with eyes protruding from their sockets, mouth open, jaws chattering and lips shedding large drops of saliva, wondering when, if ever, those sportsmen, seemingly so fleet of foot, would arrive and relieve him from the terrible mental and physical strain. Onward came the bunnies, closely followed by the dogs, all approaching Fritz and the covey of grouse; and from the other extreme came the Preacher, followed at heel by Rob and Joe; while in the wagons, which followed over the open prairie in the race, stood Robertson, Whitewell, and the ladies, hallooing, yelling, and laughing at the ludicrousness of the race, telling the sprinters to 'Hie on!' and to 'Get there quick!' or the covey would rise and they would not get a shot. A moment later, and rabbits, dogs, and men were bunched together nearly as thickly as would be a bevy of quails—backs to backs, looking everywhere save at each other—the men talking cuss-words in loud voice to the dogs; the dogs and men all gazing heavenward, wondering where on earth so many grouse came from, and where in —— (the earth below, or below the earth) they were flying to; hundreds in number, pintail and pinnated grouse, while the dear little graycoats, the jacks, unlike the graycoats down South during the late civil war, had turned their bobs from the scene, and were soon out of sight. Meanwhile 'bang,' 'bang,' 'bang,' 'bang!' went the guns; but not a single bird fell to earth. The wagons came up, dogs followed to heel, men used hubs and axles as step-ladders, and climbed to the seats above.

"'Preacher, did you ever hold an office?' asked Kiddersen.

"'No; only Judge. Why do you ask that question, you lazy fraud?' was the response.

"'Because you made so good a run, I thought maybe you had had a good deal of practice as a political sprinter; that's all. But then I ought to have known better; a politician down South, where you live, must be a good shot if he wants to get an office the second time, or his life wouldn't last long enough to get elected; and I see you can't shoot just a little bit,' said Kidd.

"'Kiddersen, I'd lick you just now for saying that, but really I'm too tired. Don't say a word more Kidd, and when we get back to St. Paul I'll just fill you full of—no, not of shot—but full of club soda, I will; and you needn't pay a cent.'

"'Don't you think it best to take the dogs in and drive to the end of the journey, before getting out again, and make camp?' asked Blackwell, to which no reply came for some moments, as everyone was seemingly too tired to reply. Shortly, Robertson opened up.

"'Say, don't you think you could coax those tongues of yours to wag and answer that question, if we would give each of you a drink of aqua pura?' They all thought aqua pura didn't seem to be just the thing; they had 'taken water' enough during the last hour to satiate thirst for a whole day's outing.

"When some fifteen miles out, Robertson saw afar off an object upon a strawstack which resembled a prairie chicken. Then approaching nearer, others were discovered—three in all. 'Those are grouse,' said he. Another race for life—the life of a prairie chicken—that was all. Rob was to approach on one side, Joseph was to go on the far side, and the Preacher was to wait u[illegible] were in place, then approach the stack [illegible] could, flush the birds, and give Rob an[illegible] to shoot. He did not wait long, how[illegible] through the stubble, crawled on his f[illegible] knees, nearer, until he was in easy shooting range, and had, so to speak, bunched his birds, thinking he might get a potshot, and kill them with one barrel, and get the laugh on his friends. 'Bang!' went his gun, and 'bang!' went the second barrel; but no bird fell. The birds arose, scattered, and flew over the Preacher's head, and toward the wagon, preventing Robertson and Joseph from getting a shot.

"'Load up!' shouted Whitewell to the ladies, who were seated in the wagons, watching the birds as they approached. 'Bang!' was the reply of the 20-gauge Scott ejector held by Miss Bessie, and down came a bird; and 'Bang!' at nearly the same moment was voiced by a Westley Richards' six-pound 12-gauge in the hands of Joseph's good lady, and over rolled a second bird; while from the third wagon, Mrs. Kiddersen, seizing her husband's light Purdey, shot at the last bird of the trio, at long range, simply cutting a feather with the first barrel, but making an excellent kill with the second, thereby bringing to bag the birds the Preacher had missed, when he shot at them while they were sitting on the strawstack and effectually wiping the tears from his eyes, at the palpable miss he had made.

"'I guess Whitewell was sound in his head,' said the Preacher, as he crawled up into his wagon. 'We had better let birds alone, and go to the proposed camp. Somehow I can scarcely hit a strawstack. How I wish the Colonel was here—that captain of the Ananias Shooting Club—I would just like to shoot him a race, as I seem to belong in his class, for he, too, can't, they say, shoot a little bit. Say, do you think he did break a rib; or was he telling an Ananias yarn, being too lazy to follow the dogs and carry a gun?'

THE PROPOSED ILLINOIS LAW

The directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association met at the Sherman House, Chicago, Wednesday afternoon, February 6, to take final action on the question of submitting amendments to the game law now in force, and to confer with a committee from the Citizen's Game Protective Association, composed of the game dealers of Chicago, with a view to harmonious and united action in the interest of game protection generally. Of the directorate of the Illinois State Association there were present: W. L. Shepard, president, H. B. Meyers, secretary, R. B. Organ, chairman, R. S. Mott, L. M. Hamline, A. C. Patterson, Abner Price, C. S. Wilcox, and F. S. Baird and M. R. Bortree. The Citizen's Association was represented by Messrs. Geo. W. Barnett and Geo. S. Sloan.

President Shepard called the meeting to order, and stated that the directors had invited the South Water Street committee to be present for the purpose of discussing the game bills now before the legislature, and, if possible, agree upon some arrangements by which the interests of game protection would be best subserved; also to impart such information as they might possess bearing on the possibility of blackmail being practised under the present law, and also to find out how much, if any, money had been subscribed for the purpose of securing the passage of the so-called Blow bill.

Abner Price then moved that the amendments to the present law, as drafted by the law committee, be read for the benefit of the South Water Street committee, after which the association would be pleased to hear if South Water Street concurred or dissented.

Mr. Baird: Gentlemen, we want to avoid, if possible, an open contest at Springfield, and, further, if you will tell this association who has blackmailed any dealer we will spend money to bring the blackmailer to time.

Mr. Barnett: Blackmail is a harsh word and one I would rather not use, nor do I propose to discuss the practice. We came here to discuss the new law, and we think matters ought to be adjusted to the satisfaction of all. In years past a friendly spirit prevailed and we were as a unit for the protection of game in Illinois, and there is not a dealer on South Water Street but what will pledge himself to hold game sacred. South Water Street, and by that term I presume you mean the reputable dealers, even though it sounds rude, is with the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association to protect game—what more could be asked?

Mr. Organ: If Illinois has an open market, how is it going to protect game in other states?

Mr. Barnett: Understanding the question as I do I cannot agree with you, for the reason that if we asked our legislature to legislate for other states, or, in other words, pass laws in Illinois for the protection of game in Minnesota, Dakota, or any other state, we would be granted nothing; further, there are two views in regard to game, one of sport and one of commerce. While we will agree to bind ourselves to protect Illinois game absolutely, if that is your wish, do you want to go before the country as saying that Illinois shall be the great game preserve of the country for yourselves alone, as sportsmen? I think such action would be extremely selfish. Game killed legally is a legitimate article of commerce, and it is infringing on the rights of dealers t[illegible] prevent them from selling game killed legally in other st[illegible] all you want to to protect the game of Illinois m[illegible] laws as stringent as you could possibly wish for Illi[illegible] game, and we will act in concert with you in se[illegible] the laws are upheld and violators punished; but I [illegible] attempt to prevent our selling game legally killed and shipped from other states.

Mr. Hamline: How can it be proven that game came from Illinois or Dakota, if allowed to be sold at any time? Is it not a fact that the meat of a young prairie chicken is white and an old one dark? And, further, is it not a fact that [illegible] were sold before the season [illegible]

I agree with you as to the color of the meat in young and old prairie chickens; as to how it can be proven whether game came from Illinois or Dakota I wish to repeat that we will pledge ourselves, individually and severally, that if you want to prohibit absolutely the sale of Illinois game we will not violate the agreement, and I am of the firm belief that the word of any reputable game dealer on South Water Street is as good as that of any member of this association. It seems to me, gentlemen, you are acting very selfishly in this matter, if I may be allowed the remark. In the first place you all want the sale of game from Illinois prohibited absolutely, but you are willing to allow us to sell game killed in other states up to January 1, instead of February 1, as now provided. What will the sportsmen of other states say to this—won't they think it extremely selfish on your part? Why not stop shooting entirely, then no game will be sent in or sold. It seems to me, gentlemen, you are getting your thoughts into a very narrow channel, for certainly we should have the same right to ask that you be forbidden to shoot game as for you to ask that we be forbidden to sell game when legally killed. Now, gentlemen, be fair in this matter and we are with you.

Mr. Mott: Mr. Barnett, I would like to ask you if, fifteen years ago, you did not get the bulk of your game shipped from Southern Illinois, and if at the present time you are not compelled to look to other states for your supply?

Mr. Barnett: Ten years ago game was received from many states, but the receipts have grown less by degrees until the present time the game business in Chicago is practically dead.

Mr. Sloan: I will state here that as much game is being killed and shipped as ever, but not to Chicago, due to the unjust provisions regarding the having in possession game which had been received legally. Give Chicago, the greatest distributing market in the world, a chance to resume its one-time leadership in the sale of game as of other products, and we will do anything you wish to protect the game of Illinois. But your unjust laws have diverted this trade to other markets instead of protecting game. We believe we have the right to sell game legally killed. South Water Street held to its compact with the Illinois State Association, made several years ago, but the association broke faith and now South Water Street, so-called, not only wants its rights but demands them.

Mr. Mott: Is it not true that the best way to protect home game is to prevent outside game from coming in for sale? In England they decided long ago that the best way to protect home game is to prohibit importation of foreign game, for the reason that the two could not be told apart.

Mr. Baird: I see no reason for continuing this discussion much longer, for it seems to me all South Water Street is contending for is the right to sell imported game at all seasons of the year, but is willing to protect Illinois game. Such being the case why not let the present statutes stand with the exception of the clause pertaining to the sale of game, and enter into a compact by which the dealers shall have the right to sell such game?

Mr. Barnett and Mr. Sloan both stated that they were willing to enter into such an agreement, and for a moment the meeting resolved itself into an united and happy family, and members of the association congratulated each other upon the happy termination of the meeting, and wondered why so much breath had been spent in getting to the point at issue.

Mr. Barnett: Now, then, will the association agree to allow us to sell imported game legally received?

Mr. Baird: For the entire year?

Mr. Barnett: Until sold.

Several voices: "No! No!" "Only during the present open season for the sale of game." "Less the month of January."

Mr. Barnett: Well, gentlemen, it seems to me, then, settlement is as far off as ever, and I am forced to the conclusion that selfishness is the only motive this association can have when it tries to cut off the month of January.

Mr. Mott: And I am forced to say that any such insinuation is unqualifiedly false.

President Shepard rapped for order and stated that the surest way to prevent an agreement was a continuance of the latter order of debate.

Mr. Sloan: Gentlemen, it seems we cannot come to any agreement, and to prove our sincerity in our position I wish to present the following declaration of the most prominent and reputable dealers of the Citizens' Game Protective Association, composed of South Water Street game dealers, which defines our position exactly:

Mr. Sloan then handed the following to President Shepard, which was read by Secretary H. B. Meyers:

To Directors of the Illinois Sportsmen's Association:—We, the undersigned game dealers of Chicago, do solemnly declare, on our word of honor, that we are unalterably opposed to the traffic in game illegally killed in this or any other state, and will do all in our power to uphold a law just to all the people; and we further pledge ourselves to do all in our power to prohibit the buying, selling, handling or killing of any game during the season when such killing is by law prohibited, but when such game is killed and shipped legally from any state we claim the right as American citizens to buy, sell and handle it for the American people at large, who have rights in game as well as the sportsmen class. Give us a law which will allow us to sell game during the legal season, when all people want it, and you will not have stancher supporters of game protection anywhere. We indorse Game Warden Charles H. Blow's bill because it is just to all people alike, and is not class legislation like the existing law.

George S. Sloan, Wm. H. Taylor Co., D. R. Shivily, John B. Brosseau, Steffey Bros., Hables & Griffith, W. H. Loverman, Star Commission Co., F. Beckerman & Co. D. W. Pearch, H. W. Dobson, Chas. E. Newman & Son, Hough & Shearman Co., [illegible]h & Co., H. L. Cramer & Co., T. E. [illegible]wis, Jacobs & Aaron, Barteime & [illegible]cil & Co., Ohearn & Fitzgera'd, [illegible] Ender, Lacey & Sweeney, Merrill & [illegible]ve, B. Aaron & Son, Henry A. Sloan, [illegible] Leron & Co., Seifert & Mann, Parliaorge & Co., F. M. Smith, Bandow & [illegible]o., C. H. Weaver & Co, B. Arron & [illegible] & Keith, C. F. Love & Co., Parker [illegible] Houser & Klock, S. S. Borden, J. R. Lyons, C. W. Blatherwick & Co., Freidman & Co., Luhr & Son, Nemman & Hoffman, J. A. McCutcheon & Co., Harris & McConkey, Lefevre & Deisher, W. M. Watson Co., Sprague Com. Co., Lynch Bros., O. E. Whitcomb & Son, F. Wood & Co., Robert Slade & Co., Edwald Bros., H. B. Briggs, G. A. Linn & Son, T. D. Randall & Co., G. M. H. Wagner & Co., R. A Burnett & Co., Barber Trust Co., J. W. Kepler Co., Barrett Bros.

Mr. Mott cross-examined Mr. Barnett and Mr. Sloan, during which it was stated, without reserve, that the Citizens' Game Protective Association had subscribed $105 to help defray the expenses of publishing several thousand copies of the Blow bill and mailing them to all parts of the state to try and gain an expression of opinion for or against, and that this could in no way be construed as proving that the game warden was in the pay of South Water Street, as it was open and above board. It was also developed that Mr. Mott favored the sale of game for a limited period.

Mr. Sloan: Has the executive committee a bill ready to present to the legislature?

Mr. Mott: We only proposed to ask for amendments to improve the present law, which otherwise is as good as this association wants.

Mr. Sloan: Well, inasmuch as we cannot agree, we will have to leave it to the intelligence of the legislature to decide which is most just to all the people. We regret the necessity for this, and, thanking you for the invitation to be present, Mr. Barnett and myself will withdraw.

Mr. Baird: Very sorry, gentlemen, but we will have to fight you at Springfield.

Mr. Mott: And to the finish.

President Shepard: Messrs. Barnett and Sloan, in behalf of the directors here assembled, I thank you very much for the courteous manner in which you have discussed these to us important matters, and for the honor of your acceptance of our invitation to be present with us to-day. This matter of game preservation is a serious one with us and we had hopes of arriving at an amicable understanding, the failure of which I regret. Again we thank you.

Mr. Barnett: Let me assure you that South Water Street is as deeply interested in the preservation of game as your association, and you do not regret more than we this disagreement. We thank you for your attention.

Mr. Barnett and Mr. Sloan then withdrew.

Mr. Organ, chairman, then called a meeting of the directors. After a short discussion as to whether or not to allow members of the press to be present at this meeting it was decided not to exclude them, which action the press representatives applauded.

Chairman Organ stated briefly the object of the directors' meeting, which was to determine how best to defeat the so-called Blow bill (House Bill 56) and secure legislation favorable to amendments to the present law. It developed that most of the directors favored a committee be appointed to visit Sprinfield and present the case before the legislative committee on game and fish.

Mr. Baird: Senator Campbell has seen Senator Dwyer and Representative Hallock, chairman of the House and Senate committees on fish and game, and both committees will meet on Wednesday, February 13, at 2 o'clock p. m., at which time they will tender an audience to everyone interested in game—the sportsmen, dealers, railroad officials and farmers.

Mr. Meyers: I move, Mr. Chairman, that a committee be appointed to go to Springfield Wednesday and represent our side of the case.

Messrs. Mott, Baird, Meyers, Felton, Organ, Wilcox and Bortree were mentioned as such a committee.

Messrs. Baird and Bortree both declined, on the ground that they want to go as individual sportsmen, and to argue from that standpoint.

Mr. Mott thought, although Mr. Felton was not present then, that in view of the opinions expressed by Mr. Felton at the meeting on Monday, wherein he favored the sale of game during a limited period and also the interstate shipment during the legal open season, he would not represent the sense of the directors.

Mr. Wilcox declined to go on the ground that there were others whose arguments and influence would have tenfold the weight his would have. Mr. Organ did not agree with this view, stating that every sportsman ought to attend the Springfield conference and do the best he could.

It was finally moved and carried that the Executive Committee go to Springfield as the committee, to fight against South Water Street, so-called, and in favor of amendments to the present law.

This committee consists of W. L Shepard, Frank A. Johnson, R. B. Organ, L. M. Hamline, A. C. Patterson, C. S. Wilcox, Abner Price, H. B. Meyers, R. S. Mott and Chas. Kern.

Adjourned.

The secretary stated he had mailed circular letters to sportsmen all over the state calling upon them to use their personal influence with their representatives to defeat House Bill 56, and also circulars containing the legal opinions of Mr. Mott, and another signed by influential lawyers and citizens, showing up the weak points of House Bill 56 and how, if passed, it would wipe out every vestage of game through its fatal wording.

We asked why copies of said circulars had not been mailed us for publication, and we were reminded that proof slips of two had been given us the Monday evening previous, and two of the directors said we were not giving their side of the case a fair show. We replied that last October we published the first draft of the proposed game law, and asked for suggestions, and up to date not an officer of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association had seen fit or taken the time to attack said draft and kill it in its infancy by sending an article in for publication. Further, when we were given the advance proofs of the circulars mentioned above we were given them in confidence, with the admonition that the executive committee did not want the press to get hold of them before they had been mailed. We accepted the confidence and promised to publish them only when sent us officially. Secretary Meyers stated that the advance proof of circulars had been given us in confidence and the charge of unfairness was withdrawn. A "Chicago and the West" representative of a cotemporary, who was present at the informal meeting, stated that if it was news, whether in confidence or not, he would publish it. We replied: "That s where we differ."

The Friday after this meeting, February 8, the American Field was favored by receiving, officially, the following circular letters, referred to above as having been sent all over the state. Of course, as the game warden bill in the Senate is No. 117 and in the House No. 224, published in full in the American Field last week for the purpose of criticism, and the one Game Warden Blow fathers and is advocating, we would rather use the space occupied for more pertinent matter; but, inasmuch as the directors have spent quite a bit of money in printing and circulating these and much legal accumen has been expended also, and, inasmuch as they were sent us officially for publication, we herewith give them:

SPORTSMEN PROTEST

To the members of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association and to sportsmen generally:

Your attention is called to a new game bill recommended to the present legislature by Chas. H. Blow, our present game warden, and known as House Bill No. 56.

This bill must never become a law in this state.

We have caused this bill to be carefully examined by our attorneys, and their report to us shows that it is a document carefully prepared in the interests of the market-hunter and the commission merchants of Chicago who deal in game. We are informed that the game dealers have raised a fund to aid in its passage, and this alone is sufficient to condemn it. The principal objections to the bill are:

1. It permits the hunter to trespass on the lands of another without his consent. True, the law says that he cannot, but it omits the penalty contained in the present law, and with no penalty imposed the provision is worthless.

2 It gives the game warden power to arrest without warrant at pleasure, and does not provide for immediate trial, nor for any trial.

3. It says when game may be sold, but does not prohibit sale of game at any season of the year.

4. The present law prohibits the sale of game killed in Illinois, except water fowl. The proposed law omits this provision entirely. Shall the quails, prairie chickens, wild turkeys, etc., of this state be potted for the Chicago market?

5. The present law prevents the trapping, netting or snaring of quail, prairie chicken or grouse at any time. This bill allows it in the interest of the market-hunter and the game dealer.

6. The proposed law provides for the payment of large salaries to the game warden and eight deputies without making the payment of such salaries conditional upon a sufficient fund being realized from fines, etc. This imposes an additional buiden upon our taxpayers.

Our game must not be snared, trapped or netted and permitted to be sold on the Chicago market, nor our open season extended, and this bill must be killed as quickly and surely as its passage would kill all our game.

The situation is desperate. Chicago game dealers and their allies are at Springfield working for the passage of this bill.

Write at once a personal letter to the representative of your district, setting forth some of the objections to this bill and calling upon him to vote against it. Urge your friends who do not wish to see all our game butchered for the market to do the same and see that they do so. Please inform us at once if you have written this letter and to whom. Respectfully,

W. L. Shepard,
President Illinois State Sportsmen's Association.
H. B. Meyers,
Secretary Illinois State Sportsmen's Association,
148 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

To the Honorable the Governor and Members of the Legislature of the State of Illinois:

Gentlemen:—The undersigned, the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association, composed of the sportsmen's clubs and sportsmen of the State of Illinois, pledged as one of its fundamental principles to the protection of game birds and song birds in this state, do hereby protest against the passage of the bill known as the "Game Warden Bill," recently introduced by Game Warden Blow. This bill, previous to its introduction in the legislature, was submitted to the executive committee of this association in the absence of the law committee, and this committee, believing that the bill had been drawn in the interest of game protection and was being advocated by persons interested in game protection, did not give it the close scrutiny which they would otherwise have done, and after a casual perusal of the same approved of it. But about the time it was being introduced into the House the attention of the president of the association was called to the fact that the bill was a bad one in many respects and ought not to become a law in its present form. Whereupon a copy of the same was submitted to the attorneys of the association, and at a meeting of the executive committee of the association, held at the Sherman House, in Chicago, on February 1, 1895, the opinion of the attorneys was read and other facts were brought before the committee which disclosed to it the fact that the said bill had been revised by the attorneys of the South Water Street game dealers and was in the interest of game destruction instead of game protection, and was being vigorously pushed by the game dealers of South Water Street, in Chicago, with the avowed purpose of having it become a law. Said bill if it became a law would be instrumental in destroying all of the game in this state before the meeting of the next legislature, when it might be repealed. Said bill does not prohibit the sale of Illinois or other game. In other words it allows the sale of Illinois and other game every day in the year. It does not prohibit the trapping of game in Illinois, thereby allowing quails, prairie chickens and all other game in Illinois to be trapped.

It does away with the penalty for trespassing upon the land of others, thereby allowing the game destroyer free access to trespass upon every farm and every piece of ground in Illinois and destroy the game thereon without any penalty for so doing. It also provides that the game warden shall have power to arrest persons on sight, without a warrant, without making any provision for trial or other means of ascertaining whether the person arrested is guilty or not.

It also provides that out of the state treasury shall be paid the chief game warden a salary of $1,500 a year, and to each of his eight deputies a salary of $800 a year, making a total of $7,900 additional burden upon the taxpayers of the state of Illionois, without any just compensation therefor.

The bill attempts to provide for a fund by licensing shooters, but in its present condition it does not state that the game warden is to be paid exclusively out of such a fund. It lengthens the season for shooting game by adding sixty days to the open season, in the interest of those interested in the destruction of game for the market. It is a well-known fact that the game animals and birds of Illinois are rapidly disappearing, and unless our present laws are more strictly enforced our game will soon entirely disappear. Our present laws are good in nearly every particular. They have been affirmed by our Supreme Court, and the only changes that may be necessary to more fully protect the game of this state would be to give some few additional powers to the game warden, and shorten the season for the sale of game from other states. For, as our Supreme Court said in the Magner case, reported in 97th Illinois, the prohibition of the sale of game from other states in this state has a tendency to protect the game of this state.

Illinois State Sportsmen's Association.—W. L. Shepard, president; W. J. Edbrooke, 1st vice-president; N. J. Hindert, 2nd vice-president; H. B. Meyers, secretary-treasurer. Directors: R. B. Organ, chairman; L. M Hamline, A. C. Patterson, C. S. Wilcox, Abner Price.

To the Honerable the Governor and Members of the Legislature of the State of Illinois:

Gentlemen:—The undersigned, citizens of this state, having examined a copy of a proposed game law submitted by Game Warden Blow, being House Bill No. 56, and having also been since introduced into the senate, as it has appeared in the public press, respectfully protest against the passage of such a bill, or against any material change in our present efficient game laws that have been approved by our Supreme Court. The proposed law does not prohibit the sale of game birds killed in the state of Illinois. Such sale is prohibited by our present law. It permits the sale of game birds killed without the state to be sold at all seasons of the year. This is prohibited by the present law except for four months of the year. Our sister states prohibit the sale of game killed in other states for substantially the same period, and we should treat them with equal fairness. It permits the netting, snaring and trapping of birds, which is now prohibited. It will probably result in permitting shipments of game from this state, which is now prohibited. It permits any person, without consent, to hunt upon the land of another, which is now prohibited, because the proposed law omits the penalty and other restrictions imposed in the law now upon our statute books. It provides absolutely for the payment of a large salary to the chief game warden and to the eight deputy game wardens, without making any adequate provision for a fund for the payment thereof, and without providing that such salary shall be paid exclusively from fines for a violation of the act, as is provided in the present law, thus imposing an additional burden upon the tax payers of this state.

Chicago, January 29 1895.

To the Officers and Directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association:

Gentlemen:—At your request I have carefully examined the proposed new game law for this state as drafted by Charles H. Blow, our game warden. After a careful consideration of the entire act and a critical examination of its various sections and provisions, I am of the opinion that its passage by our legislature would be an injury rather than a benefit, and that our present law, while it does not provide for the payment of a salary to the game warden and his assistants, is nevertheless better calculated to protect the game. My reasons for coming to this conclusion and my criticisms upon the bill are as follows:

Section 1 extends the open season on numerous game birds and permits the shooting thereof on September 1 at a time when they will naturally fall a prey more readily to the market-hunter. I recognize the benefit of having the open season on all game birds commence at the same time if possible, but I do not believe in encouraging the market-hunter in the slaughter of young birds. Possibly if the time at which such birds could be lawfully sold on the market were made to commence several weeks later, the slaughter by the market-hunter would be curtailed.

Section 5, prohibiting hunting without consent on enclosed lands of another, omits the provision of the old law that being within the enclosed grounds with a gun, dog or net without permission from the owner should be prima facie evidence of guilt. It also omits the penalty provided for in the old law, and with no penalty imposed the prohibition is absolutely without avail.

Section 9, as to the duty of game wardens, is substantially the old law, with the addition that they shall have power to arrest without warrant any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this act. This, as it stands, might be declared to be unconstitutional, as depriving a person of his liberty without due process of law. It should be coupled with the further provision that upon making such arrest the warden should forthwith take the offender to the nearest magistrate and make a formal complaint in writing against him, specifying the charge, and that thereupon the magistrate should fix a time for a hearing, holding the prisoner to bail meauwhile in such sum as the magistrate might deem suitable to insure his appearance.

Section 13, in reference to the sale of game, is a delusion. It permits the sale of game but does not in terms prohibit the sale of game. While it is true that all wild game belongs to the people of the state, yet when killed it becomes the absolute property of the person killing or capturing the same, and he may, in the absence of any law prohibiting him from doing so, sell or dispose of it in any manner that he sees fit. Laws prohibiting the sale of game are upheld upon the theory that, the game belonging to the entire people, the people may, through their representatives, say that it shall not be killed at all, or that if killed the person killing the same shall have only a qualified property right therein; that is, the right to use the same, but not the right to sell it, and if the people do not say so in express words, then the right of sale exists. There should be an absolute prohibition of the right to sell or have in possession for the purpose of selling or offering to sell, any of the game mentioned in Section 1 of the act, except during a specified period. This section, as originally drafted, also contains a clause limiting conviction to the sale of game coming from the state of Illinois. This would throw open our markets to the game of other states during all seasons of the year. The fine for each offense is only $10. In the old statute the fine was not less than $5 nor more than $25. Our game warden is raising the fine wherever it occurred in the old statute from $5 to not less than $10, not more than $25, except in this instance. Why does he reduce the possible fine in this case only? The old law also provided that it should be unlawful at any time to sell or expose for sale any quails grouses, prairie chickens, pheasants, wild turkeys, gray, red fox, or black squirrels, that had been killed within the limits of this state, but this Section 13 omits that provision entirely, and would throw all our quails, prairie chickens and wild turkeys upon the Chicago market. In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that Sections 3 and 4 of the act of June 27, 1885, appointing game wardens and giving them authority to swear out search warrants whenever they believe that game is illegally held or in possession of any person and providing for a speedy trial thereof, are wholly omitted, so that our game warden would not have the right to search the commission houses or warehouses of any of our game dealers for the purpose of seizing illegal game; and, further, that Section 5 of the act of May 14, 1879, which declares it to be unlawful to trap, snare or net wild turkeys, prairie chickens, quails, grouse or pheasants at any time, and providing a penalty for a violation thereof, has also been omitted by our game warden, and it would therefore be lawful during the open season, under this act as it stands, to trap, snare and net wild turkeys and quails of Southern Illinois, and I do not hesitate to say that the removal of the present restrictions in that regard would drive those birds from our state in less than three years. The omission of these valuable provisions of the old statute and this particular section in reference to the sale of gameseems to me to be wholly unaccountable.

Section 14 relates to the exportation of game and is apparently a stringent prohibition against such exportation, but the fact is that the very stringency of this section in all probability renders it void as a regulation of inter-state commerce. Such stringent provisions were declared to be unconstitutional as a regulation of interstate commerce in State vs. Saunders, 19 Kansas 129; Idaho vs. Evans, 2nd Idaho 634; Bennett vs. Express Company, 83 Maine 236. Similar decisions have been rendered by the Supreme Courts of New Jersey, Indiana and the United States. In Magner against the People, 97 Illinois 320, our Supreme Court, in passing upon our statute, referred to the Kansas case with approval, and pointed out the difference between that statute and our own, intimating that it would come to the same conclusion were our statute the same. In Express Company against the State, 133 Illinois 649, the question did not arise, as the game was killed in this state and transported to Chicago for sale. Such stringent provisions have been sustained, however, in State vs. Geer, 61 Connecticut 144; in re Organ 56, Arkansas 267, and in re Harrub 4, Interstate Commerce Reports, page 99. From the reasoning of the courts it is probable that our Supreme Court might sustain such a stringent law, but why run that risk? The constitutionality of our present law has been declared constitutional by our Supreme Court, so far as it has been passed upon, and saves large quantities of game killed in this state from being shipped to the Chicago market. Let that section stand by all means as it is.

This Section 14 also permits the shipment of game out of this state by members of clubs, if they accompany the same. This opens the door for fraud, and no reason is perceived why the state of Illinois should extend any such courtesy when it is not customary in other states to do the same.

There are other imperfections in this bill, as drafted, of more or less importance. The right is not conferred upon the game warden to seize game illegally in possession, on sight, and to provide for a trial thereof, but I particularly call your attention to the main features wherein this proposed law gives us all that we have now that is valuable, as follows:

It does not prohibit the sale of game in the state of Illinois at any season of the year; it permits all game killed in this state to be sold and offered for sale, which is now prohibited, except in the case of waterfowl; it permits netting, snaring and entrapping of birds, which is now prohibited; it takes away the power of the game warden to search for game supposed to be illegally in possession; it would probably result in permitting shipments of game from this state. The bill is unquestionably bad, and by all means should be defeated in the legislature.

Respectfully submitted,

Robins S. Mott.

The Produce Exchange, of Chicago, met last Saturday and listened to Messrs. Barnett and Sloan's report of the result of their meeting with the Illinois State Association, and, after a spirited debate upon the question of equal rights to all, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Produce Exchange of the city of Chicago hereby pledges its membership in every way in favor of the protection of Illinois game, and that no matter how stringent the laws for such protection may be they will do all in their power to aid in the enforcement of such laws.

Resolved, That it is the claim of this exchange that when a sportsman or hunter has killed game it becomes an article of commerce, and the right to dispose of such article should be unrestricted; that if the killing is stopped the selling will also stop, and the enactment and enforcement of laws regulating the killing and prescribing proper limits for such killing will effectually preserve the game, but there should be no restrictions placed on the selling of game legally killed, and this exchange denies the right of any association to say who shall or shall not sell the game when killed.

Resolved, The Produce Exchange of the city of Chicago claims it is entirely beyond the province of the Sportsmen's Association, or any other association, to say when game produced outside of the state of Illinois shall or shall not be sold, but that that power is lodged entirely in the hands of the legislature of the state of Illinois, and that any laws passed should be for the fostering of the business interests of the state.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this exchange the turning of the state of Illinois into one great game preserve for the recreation and "sport" of those who can take a Summer vacation and at the expense of the farmer should be sufficient without attempting by repressive legislation to drive the remnant of the game trade at present remaining to eastern cities.

Resolved, That this exchange earnestly requests the passage of the bill now before the legislature known as the game warden bill, 117 Senate, and 224 House, indorsing the most stringent provisions for the protection of Illinois game. Ask free trade and commerce on game from points outside the state and earnestly protest against any law for the benefit of the "privileged few," and that is against the right of the poor man, pot-hunter though he may be called.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to His Excellency, the Governor, and the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the state of Illinois.

By order of the Produce Exchange of the city of Chicago.

Respectfully submitted.

Editor American Field:—I have been reading the proposed game laws for Illinois both in the American Field and Chicago dailies, with great interest. I think it a mistake, on the part of the gentlemen representing the Illinois Sportsmen's Association, not to have met the commission men half-way and revised the Blow bill, which the game dealers said they were willing to do, instead of declaring war and signifying their determined effort to "kill" the proposed law in order—as Mr. Mott is reported to have stated to a Tribune reporter—to make such a fight before the state legislature that no new law would be made at all.

Now suppose we do not want the Blow bill passed, who wants the game laws as they now are? Such sportsmen can be counted on the toes of your hand.

Mr. Organ says the open seasons in the proposed bill are too long, and I fully agree with him. I would rather have the quail season open November 1 and extend to January 1, for reasons before stated. For waterfowl, that is ducks, geese and brants, September 1 to April 1. For prairie chickens, August 15 to November 1, but I admit it is late to say so when the Blow bill was published in the American Field four months ago inviting criticisms and suggestions. I, like many others, perhaps, was waiting for someone else to criticise the length of the open seasons.

In the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association's letter to the governor and members of the legislature condemning the Blow bill, in speaking of the proposed salaries for the nine wardens, they say: "The total of $7,900 would be an additional burden to the taxpayers of the state of Illinois." Does anyone doubt that the people could stand the "additional burden?" It is against the interest of the sportsmen to make such an assertion, for I believe the laws will never be observed until we have plenty of wardens that are paid ample salaries to compensate them for their risky occupation. Stopping the sale of game, everyone knows, would in a great measure help protect the game, but it would not prevent anyone from shooting young chickens, woodducks, teals and quails before they are barely able to fly. Prairie chickens could not be sold last year at any time, yet I will venture the assertion that nine out of every ten bagged were killed before August 15 simply because our present law is a bad one and we did not have enough wardens to protect them. It was not the game dealers that caused their illegal decimation. Whether game is to be sold or not I believe it would be best to have wardens appointed, as proposed by Blow. If one man can arrest and convict over 480 men, as Blow has done, what can eight wardens do?

Now if the members of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association go to Springfield and do not offer to compromise with the game dealers, with the result that we will have no new game laws, there will be a howl from the sportsmen all over this state for the next two years, and I am inclined to believe I will help them howl. My principal objection to our present laws is in regard to our prairie chickens, quails and doves.

Chauncey M. Powers.

Editor American Field:—Will some person who is fully posted kindly tell an old sportsman, one who has killed many kinds of game in many states during the past thirty-eight years, through your columns, what all this excitement and row about the proposed Illinois game law means?

Is it not true that Game Warden Blow caused his original draft of a game law to be published and sowed broadcast over the state early last Fall? Did he not ask all sportsmen who might consider any amendments necessary to advise him, stating their views for his consideration and adoption, in order that all might be heard? Is it not true that the directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association but a short time since approved and indorsed Game Warden Blow's original bill? According to reports on February 1 and 4 the directors of that association held meetings and are now bitterly opposing the very measure they recently indorsed.

It looks to an outsider as though there must be a very large African concealed in the woodpile of verbosity enveloping this stultifying action, and, again, I ask: What does it mean?

Also I see that Game Warden Blow's original bill—House Bill 56—has been revised to meet the views of a large number of Illinois sportsmen, and is known as House Bill No. 224 and Senate Bill 117. If this be true, what is all the row about?

By the way, Mr. Editor, in your issue of February 9, the law committee of the State Sportsmen's Association is reported as offering amendments, at the recent meeting, to the present law which will "prohibit the sale of game absolutely," and in the same sentence providing "that the state shall sell all confiscated game," thus making the state violate its own enactment. To the unsophisticated mind, those who frame such amendments should not criticise too strongly the efforts of others.

In conclusion the writer would say he has yet to see an instance in which any sportsman denies that Warden Blow has proved the best game warden Illinois has ever had. I wish to add that Warden Blow has proved his way of protecting game to be effective, and if his bill as published in the American Field of Febru[illegible] become a law, undoubtedly he sees his [illegible] preserve the game of the state for the p[illegible] not for a few men who have leisure an[illegible] in sport at any time.

Editor American Field:—In the Chicago Herald of February 2, I notice a savage attack on the game bill (formerly known as Game Warden Blow's bill, but now called the Berry bill) introduced in the House by Representative D. S. Berry of this district. While the attack is perhaps justified, I think it too sweeping in its denunciations, as a person reading the article in the Herald and knowing nothing of the circumstances would naturally think the attack was directed at the whole bill. Lest the sportsmen of Illinois may think Mr. Berry is in league with South Water Street game dealers, I will give the facts as I know them.

Mr. Berry informed me some time since that Mr. Blow had given him the bill to introduce in the House, and on Saturday, January 26, upon his arrival home, he handed me a copy of the bill as introduced, with the request to look it over carefully and see how it compared with the original bill as printed in the American Field of October 13 and favorably commented on. I did as requested by Mr. Berry, and, with the exception of the clause in Section 2, where the license to kill insectivorous birds for scientific purposes was made twenty dollars instead of ten dollars, I found the bill almost an exact copy of the original until Section 13 was reached, when I discovered the innocent-looking interpolation or addition which doubtless has caused all the trouble. In that section the words "coming from the state of Illinois," had been inserted, which changed the force of the bill very materially.

I at once called Mr. Berry's attention to the addition "coming from the state of Illinois" as being in the interest of the game dealers, and told him the whole section should be rewritten. He agreed with me and said he would not support the bill unless that section was changed. Who the author of the offending passage was I do not know, but it is there and should be stricken out; or, better still, the whole section should be rewritten, as it is very badly worded. I should like to see the bill pass with the exception mentioned.

F. E. Kellogg.

Prairie du Chien Station, Wis., Feb, 9, 1895.

Editor American Field:—I am requested to write you in behalf of the people interested in the preservation of game and fish in this section of Wisconsin. We are looking to the honorable legislature of Illinois, now assembled, trusting they will in their deliberations enact no game law that will work antagonistic to sister states. If the great Chicago market is left open the year round game in this western country will be exterminated. Illinois surely has an interest in the preservation of game in sister states, regardless of the statement of Illinois' worthy game warden, Chas. H. Blow. He asks under date January 30, What interest has Illinois in the game of other states, that it should make laws of the kind? referring to closing the Chicago markets during close season. We say Illinois has an interest in assisting other states to preserve law and order, at least we believe so. If the Chicago market does not respect the law and close when the game season closes, Illinois game will suffer, and the greatest inducement is held out to lawbreakers to continue their illegal business, and we are left helpless in spite of our game laws. If an open market is allowed it will be supplied not only at Illinois' own loss but much greater loss to other states. An open market is an open bid to men and boys to become criminals. If there is no market during the close season, there is no object in killing the game.

We hope the honorable legislature of Illinois will enact a law for the good of all and not for a few South Water Street dealers that have no interest in the question, except large profits in sale of game during close season, that every child must know someone obtained by violating the law.

J. P. Barnum.

Beresford, S. D.

Editor American Field:—I understand that a bill has just been introduced in the Illinois legislature, emanating, I suppose, from South Water Street, to legalize the sale of game during the whole year, provided it is not killed within the state. It does not seem possible that such a bill could be passed by a legislature of American citizens in any state of the Union, for upon its very face it is robbery of the lowest nature.

Why not sell game killed within the state? They know that such demands would not be granted, but hope that the legislators will be as greedy and dishonest as themselves and not care for the interests of their sister states. Why will they be so foolish as to be continually killing the goose that lays the golden egg? Their own greed and dishonesty will soon deprive themselves of a business by exhausting the supply that furnishes them their stock in trade.

In South Dakota we are now trying to have better laws enacted for both the protection of our game birds and fish and the enforcement of these laws. The National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association has done much to destroy the illegal market for game and fish, for which the thanks of the whole country are due, and it would be a great shame for a state like Illinois to legalize such an act as this bill asks for.

I protest most emphatically against the passage of any such legalized robbery, and I am sure that I voice the sentiments of every true sportsman in the country, and hope it will be snowed under so deep that they will wonder why they ever drafted it.

J. N. Wass, Prest. S. D. S. A.

Grand Forks, N. D.

Editor American Field:—The sportsmen of the state of North Dakota are very much interested in [illegible] that comes to us of the introduction of a bill [illegible] nols legislature, which is supposed to be back[illegible] dealers in game in the city of Chicago and [illegible] cities, making legal the sale of game during [illegible] year in that city, provided the game is not [illegible] the limits of the state of Illinois.

It hardly seems possible that such a measure could be introduced in any seriousness. Such a bill, if introduced and passed, would be a direct blow at the protection of [illegible] every other state in the vicinity of Illinois. It [illegible] a direct incentive to, and would offer a premium to market-hunters to kill game birds at all seasons of the year, and [illegible] them out of all adjoining states [illegible] the city of Chicago. It would practically [illegible] efforts of ours to protect small game in this state, for it would cover our prairies and sloughs with market-hunters throughout the entire season.

Our wild game in this state needs all the protection it can possibly get, in order that it be not entirely exterminated, and it seems almost incredible that we are to receive such a blow as this from a sister state.

Will you not, in the interest of the sportsmen of the Northwest, bring the powerful influence of your journal to bear against the successful passage of this measure?

W. L. WILDER, V. P. N. D. S. A.

WESTFIELD, WIS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Sportsmen in the Western states, tributary to the Chicago market, view with apprehension and dread the bill recently introduced in the Illinois legislature to make an open market the year round for game killed outside the state limits. A market always open for the sale of game may, for a time, fill the pockets of market-hunters and game-dealers, and please the palates of gourmets, but it will be found disastrous to the cause of game protection.

The clause intended to protect Illinois game, in the bill referred to, would be of little value, as market-hunters evidently believe "where there's a will there's a way" to smuggle game into market, and when the birds are offered for sale no expert on earth could detect the "earmarks" or "brand" to distinguish Illinois game birds from Iowa or Indiana game of the same species.

Thousands of sportsmen, knowing the keen interest the AMERICAN FIELD takes in the cause of game protection, look to it as a champion to aid in preventing the enactment of the clause.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I understand there is a bill being introduced in the Illinois legislature, backed by the game dealers of Chicago, to make legal the sale of game the entire year in Chicago, provided the game is not killed in Illinois. Now as a citizen of the state of Iowa, I do protest against any state in the Union, and especially any state adjoining the state of Iowa, enacting any law that will put a premium upon the killing of game in this state during the close season.

In addition to such a law putting a premium on killing game out of season in this state for the Chicago market, it will have the effect of destroying the game in Illinois by parties who are not law abiding, and who would kill all the game in Illinois if they could make it appear that it was killed outside the state.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Although not a resident of Illinois I have been much interested in the discussion regarding Game Warden Blow's last proposed law, and I wish to take this opportunity of saying that, to my mind, it is the fairest, most reasonable and most sensible game law ever brought before a legislature. I fail to see in it one objectionable clause.

Would that Iowa had a game warden and such a one as Chas. H. Blow.

A WILD BOAR HUNT IN MEXICO

ESCALON, MEXICO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—On January 10 last, Don Rafael Esperon, Don Juan Calderon, Mr. F. S. Dickerson, Mr. F. E. French and the writer arranged for a week's hunt in the Sierra Diablos. The game that we were bent on slaughtering was deer, bears and jabalis (the Mexican wild boar), yet we had heard great fairy tales of the bears and panthers to be found in the Sierra Diablos.

The Sierra Diablos is a range of mountains, some sixty miles in length, situated about thirty miles northeast of this place, and derives its name from a picture of his satanic majesty painted by the Comanche Indians on the smooth surface of a huge rock, no one knows how long since. But the mountain could have been so christened without the picture.

Our outfit consisted of six burros, four of which were loaded with bedding enough to start a respectable lodging-house, and provisions enough to feed a regiment; the other two, each carried a ten gallon keg for water. Each man was provided with a Winchester or Kennedy rifle and a six-shooter, and ammunition enough to annihilate the Guatemalan army; each man also rode a good horse, and we had our "packer" lead an extra one, to fall back on in case of accident, which, however, we did not need. We secured the services of an old scout who had hunted Commanche Indians in the Sierra Diablos twenty years ago, just prior to the time that the tribe was unloaded on Uncle Sam. He knows the mountains thoroughly, knows every water hole and exactly where to look for game, and s the best trailer and all-round guide in the country.

We left the store of Don Manuel Escorano, in Escalon (after getting our bearings), at 1:30 p. m. and camped that night at El Rancho Macho, twelve miles out. The next morning our objective point was El Rancho del Maripasas, [illegible] s away; but, before we had gone [illegible] r guide ("Chon," we called him [illegible]ldenly, pointed to a trail and [illegible] 'jabalin," and wanted to know if [illegible] That was what we were out for, so we intimated that we would be pleased to interview them if it was their "at home" day.

I might as well state that the jabali is not nearly so bad as he has been painted. Some hunters will tell you that he will attack one without any provocation whatever, and that if there is not a tree close at hand his coming back will not be as cronic as that of the feline so frequently spoken of by the Americans. I find the jabali very modest and retiring; in fact he seems to have a mania for retiring; he retires at all times of the day, that is, if he can see you first, and at a velocity that is only exceeded by his evident desire to be alone. And he will only turn on you when wounded, or run into a place where it is impossible for him to get out otherwise, then he fights to kill, and he is exceedingly well prepared for the fighting business. His tusks, instead of protruding on each side of his mouth like the common boar, run up on the inside of his upper lip, like a dog's, and instead of slashing sidewise, like a boar, he snaps like a wolf, his teeth being very long and three-cornered, cut like swords. He lives in the mountains, his home is in a cave. He lives on the nopal, a species of cactus, which is full of water, or sap, and the lecho guilla (a plant that is used in Mexico for several purposes. The root, or bulb, is used as a substitute for soap, the leaves, or blades, are used in the manufacture of rope. The blades are narrow, thick and stiff, like the blades of the palm, or, what is called in the states, "Spanish Dagger," only shorter, and, like the palm, is armed with a spear, or spike, at the point; but, unlike the palm, has a row of spines, or claws, down each edge of the blade), among which they will generally be found. The lecho guilla grows in tufts, or bunches, to a height of about twelve to fifteen inches, making it very difficult for a horse to get through, for if the spear on the end does not stab him in the leg the claws on the sides tear him.

To resume: "Chon" followed the trail like a stag hound for nearly a mile, when we tipped over a ridge in a very rough part of the Sierra Colorados, where we got to see them first. I made a rush and began shooting, missing, of course. The jabalies, taken by surprise, dropped down among the rocks and lecho guillas. I then tried three shots from my horse, standing, but, he being gun-shy, I missed again. As a last resort I got on the ground and killed one. By this time all the rest had taken to their heels except one, which "Chon" was herding in an arroya about a quarter of a mile away, and I went down and shot that one. One ran up and stopped within twenty yards of Don Rafael, who, in the excitement of the moment, forgot that his rifle was fastened in the holster with a strap and buckle and could not be gotton out without being unfastened. However, he shied a hot at him with his pistol, but missed beautifully. The cartridge stuck in Don Juan's gun and he, likewise, did not succeed in bagging a boar. Mr. French and Mr. Dickerson both got in too late to make a killing; so we loaded the two we had behind two of the saddles and headed for the burros, which had gone into camp at Maripasas when we got there.

I will not give a detailed account of what we did in the Sierra Diablos. I will merily state that there are no bears nor panthers up there, but any number of deer and some mountain sheep. We spent about sixty hours in the mountains, most of the time looking for water. We had plenty of water for ourselves, but our horses had none from the time we left Maripasas until we returned. We got no deer; in fact, we hunted very little else than water.

On the morning of the fifth day out we turned once more toward Escalau, and at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon sighted a band of jabalies in the Sierra Colorados, out of which Don Rafael knocked one down, and, while chasing another, his wounded one got up and scampered off—a clear case of misplaced confidence. No one else shot anything.

Next morning found us in the saddle by sunrise, and within twenty minutes' ride of camp we struck a trail and followed it for about four miles, when we came up to a large herd of jabalies on the side of the mountain, away up, out of range, and running like deer. One large boar, however, had hidden in the chaparral, and, when two or three of the party had climbed (on horses, of course) up near where he was hiding, the dog chased him out. He went straight for the horses, and for about a minute there were boar, dog, horses and men mixed up promiscuously, until at last someone shot him. Mr. French now has the skin, taken off with the four hoofs, snout and ears on. The tusks in the upper jaw measure one and a half inches, while those in the lower jaw are an inch longer. Mr. Dickerson followed ten or a dozen over the mountain, encountered seven of the lot and secured three, two others escaping hard hit. I chased an old boar about a mile and a half across arroyas, and finally up over the mountain, at last bringing him up with a bullet in the neck. I shot him at only about fifty yards away with a Winchester carbine. The bullet entered just in front of the right shoulder, ranged back, breaking the left shoulder, and lodged against the hide. I would have wagered any amount of money that a Winchester rifle, 44-caliber, would shoot through one lengthwise, bones and all, for the largest ones will not weigh more than a hundred pounds, but their flesh is tough and their hides are necessarily so to withstand the sharp points and edges of the lecho guillas.

I am told by some of the residents here that the jabali will cross with the domestic hog, which I doubt very much, for they appear to be a distinct species of the porcine tribe. They have a pouch, or bag, on top of their backs, just in front of the hips, which is filled with a fluid which they can discharge through a small orifice at will, which gives out a very strong disagreeble odor not unlike the skunk, and which I think is used in a similar manner.

One Mexican gentleman told me that this reservoir was the umbilicus, but a glance will convince one that such is not the case. This offensive odor soon leaves the hide after it is removed from the carcass. We have all seven of the skins, which we are having tanned with the bristles on. They make elegant door mats, but would not do to get out of bed on with one's bare feet.

We were out seven days, killed seven jabalies, and had a thoroughly good time; and having learned how to hunt them we will be able to make a much larger bag next time. I have killed a great many deer, quite a few antelopes, several bears and one mountain lion, but I like chasing the delusive, ungentle Mexican pig best of all.

HOW TO MAKE A CHOKE-BORE GUN MAKE AN OPEN PATTERN

BEAVER CITY, NEB.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—About four years ago I purchased an L. C. Smith gun, both barrels full choke, and one of the closest shooting and hardest hitting guns I ever saw. It being out of season for game, I used the gun at the trap, at which work it gave the best of satisfaction, killing live pigeons clean and grinding targets into powder. As soon as the season opened on quails I went forth with my choke-bore and old Ponto with the intention of surpassing all my former records, but I soon found that I might be loaded for bear, but certainly not for quails, as I either missed the birds clean or else cut them into mince-meat. I kept on shooting, however, and returned home finally with fifteen quails, or what remained of them after my choke-bore had got in its work. I worried along all that Fall with my choke bore for brush shooting, intending to get a pair of extra cylinder-bored barrels by the next season. The next season came, but I had put off ordering the extra barrels, so I shot quails as before, sometimes picking up the pieces to take home, and sometimes not, to the great disgust of old Ponto; but woe unto the bird that got up in the open at long range; I could bring it down at a distance no cylinder or modified choke could. I finally got a common gun that made a good open pattern and used it with success in the brush, but here was the trouble. I am an advocate of one gun for all work, same drop, length, weight and balance, and here I was shooting two guns with the natural result that I did not do as good work at the trap, and I was very much dissatisfied. About the time the quail season opened last year I bought through the AMERICAN FIELD a copy of a work on wing shooting and read with interest an article in it on how to make a gun scatter, and let me say it proved to be a good one. Here is the method: Same amount of powder and wadding material as for an ordinary load, one-half charge of shot, a cardboard wad, then rest of shot charge, with cardboard wad over shot and shell crimped. To make a load scatter still more divide the shot charge into three compartments with cardboard wads.

After reading the above I got out my ammunition and went to work. I first loaded a number of shells with the shot charge divided into two compartments; next a number loaded with shot charge divided into three compartments, and started out with my gun to an old barn to target it. I soon found I had what I had been looking for. I started in first with a regular load, distance from target twenty-five yards; next to this I placed a load with shot divided into two compartments; next with shot divided into three compartments, and so on until my ammunition was exhausted and the sides of the old barn about full of shot targets. With the most gratifying results, I found that with the shot divided into two compartments I made a target equal to a modified choke gun; with the shot divided into three compartments a target equal to a cylinder bore gun, and all the targets were nice and even, with the shot well distributed, and with good penetration.

My next move was to load more shells as before and start for the brush to practically test the theory. Soon old Ponto and I were right among the birds. When I was in thick brush where I could hardly see out I kept shells in the gun loaded with shot in three compartments; when in more open shooting I changed my load to shells loaded with shot in two compartments; when, as it happened, I got a bunch out on the prairie I discarded the scatter loads and let the birds down with ordinary loads, as I could wait until they were a reasonable distance off, with the gratifying result in three hours' work of twenty-two quails and five rabbits, all killed clean, with but few misses; and when on my way home, in crossing the prairie, having changed my shells from eights to sixes, a jack-rabbit jumped up I let him down at fifty paces. I was then satisfied that I had at last learned how to load my shells so as to give the best results for all-around shooting, and when I arrived home and spread my game out on the kitchen table and my wife said: "How nice; why, the quails are not shot all to pieces!" I was more than pleased.

In conclusion, I would advise, instead of going to the expense of buying extra barrels for a gun, to load one's shells as I have described, and a man will practically have ten barrels to his gun, a pair each of choke, cylinder, modified choke, or right barrel cylinder, left modified choke, and, again, right barrel modified and left full choke by simply reaching into a different pocket for a different loaded shell.

A BEAR HUNT IN HUMBOLDT COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Late one evening Bill Simms saw a bear in the gulch just across the creek from the ranch house. A steer had died up there a few days before, and evidently the bear had discovered it. Feeling certain that the bear would be somewhere in the gulch the next morning, he decided to try to get him. The best plan was to send the dogs in at the head of the gulch and wait for developments at the other end. Accordingly Jim Simms (Bill's son) was allotted the task of leading the dogs in a roundabout way to the head of the gulch and starting them down.

Early the next morning they set out. Jim wasn't much pleased with his share in the sport; it seemed to him as if he was going to get all the work and the old man all the fun. After Bill had stationed himself at the lower end of the gulch, Jim, leading the dogs, kept on up the ridge toward the upper end. From a certain point on this ridge it was possible to see the carcass of the steer in the gulch below, and Jim's only hope of getting a shot was the chance of finding the bear breakfasting on the carcass. Sure enough when he sighted the steer there was a half-grown cub eating it. The dogs had not seen the bear; so leading them back out of sight he tied them to a tree. There was plenty of cover between the bear and Jim and it was comparatively easy to get down near enough to shoot. His first shot was too high; but the cub was badly scared and, catching sight of Jim, scrambled up the nearest tree. Walking up Jim shot again; and this time he hit, but too far back to be instantly fatal. The bawling the cub set up could have been heard a mile off. Jim was just about to work the lever of his rifle preparatory to another shot, when there was a terrific crashing in the brush behind him and out rushed a big cinnamon. With frantic haste he pushed the lever forward and tried to draw it back. But the cartridge was jammed. By this time the bear was ten yards of him. With rare presence of mind (there being nothing else to do) he dropped the gun and made for the nearest tree. The tree he chose was a redwood too small for the bear to climb, but within two feet of it grew a large redwood in which the cub had taken refuge and of which the smaller tree was an offshoot. He reached the little tree and, grasping one of the lower limbs, pulled himself up, the bear taking the heel from his boot before he got out of reach. After walking around both trees for a while the bear seemed suddenly struck with an idea; for rushing to the larger tree she climbed up and tried to reach Jim, coming within a few inches of doing it, too.

The dogs in the meantime, excited by the rifle shots and the noise made by the cub, had been struggling frantically to get loose, and now having succeeded came rushing down the hill. The bear on the appearance of the dogs gave up its attempt to reach Jim and showed signs of uneasiness. Jim was correspondingly elated and, trusting to the dogs to keep the bear where she was, descended and picked up the gun. The bear started to come down also, but when she came within reach of the dogs she changed her mind and went up again. After a little trouble the rifle was put in working order, and when old man Simms appeared on the scene ten minutes later, Jim was standing triumphant over the dead bodies of the two bears.

THE DEATH OF G. S. CHAPIN

The sportsmen of the West, more especially those comprising a wide circle of intimate friends and acquaintances, learned with sorrow last week of the demise on February 4 of Mr. G. S. Chapin, one of the founders of the firm of Messrs. Chapin & Gore of Chicago.

Mr. Chapin died, despite the best medical and surgical care, at Santa Barbara, Cal., from erysipelas and blood poisoning superinduced by an abscess under his right arm, in the sixty-second year of his life.

Four years ago Mr. Chapin erected a fine residence at Santa Barbara, since which time the Winters have been spent there. Last November Mr. and Mrs. Chapin—the latter formerly Miss Lucy Frisbie, of Faribault, Minn.—left Chicago for Santa Barbara.

Funeral services were held on Thursday, February 7, and the remains having been embalmed will be brought to Chicago for interment whenever Mrs. Chapin may be able to travel.

Mr. Chapin was a native of Whitinsville, Mass., but went to California at an early age and followed the life of a miner for years. In 1863 he engaged in the dry goods business, at Faribault, but two years later removed to Chicago and formed a partnership with his brother in the grocery trade. In 1866 he went into business with Judge J. J. Gore, under the name of Chapin & Gore, and a very large trade is still conducted by a corporation bearing the original name.

Mr. Chapin leaves a widow, a son of fifteen years, and a daughter aged seventeen, a married daughter and a younger son having died within the past three years.

A very large number of friends and acquaintances—Mr. Chapin having been a member of the Ne-Pee-Nauk, Chicago Athletic and Washington Park clubs, and a Mason of high standing—who highly appreciated his manly qualities, no doubt will join us in extending sincere sympathy to the bereaved in the hour of their affliction.

NOTES

A BILL for the protection of game is now before the legislature of this state which appears to cover the ground completely. It was introduced by Senator Alpin, of Huron, and is, I believe, being pushed by Mr. Paul Page, of Mitchell. It continues in force all of the present laws for the protection of game and is designed to cover everything. The bill, in fact, is a careful compilation of all the present laws on the statutes, with several important additions, chief among which is a provision for the appointment of a game and fish commissoner by the governor. The salary is fixed at $1,200 and expenses. He has power under the bill to appoint deputies in the several counties and is to have full charge of all fry furnished by the government for restocking the rivers and lakes of the state. The open date on prairie chickens is given as September 1 and ending December 1. In my humble opinion the bill would be improved by making the opening date August 15. As a rule the birds are at that time nearly full grown and able to take care of themselves, while by September they are becoming so wild as to make stubble shooting impossible. Making the open date so late as September makes the law that much more difficult of enforcement and deprives law-abiding sportsmen of the best of the shooting, for the pot-hunters will be after them in spite of any law. However, this part of the bill is of minor importance compared with the general excellence of the bill as a whole. The best feature of the bill is that which looks to the appointment of a state game and fish commissioner. The trouble in this state has been lack of enforcement of the game laws and not in a lack of them. Without some official appointed, a part of whose duty shall be to look to the enforcement of the game laws, they are hardly worth the time and trouble it requires to get them enacted. Of course the great objection to the bill which will be raised by indifferent legislators is the appropriation for the game and fish commissioner. In order to ove come this as much as possible the bill provides that every non-resident sportsman coming into the state to shoot must first obtain a license, the cost of which is to be five dollars. Another bill is before the legislature placing a tax of 50 cents annually on shotguns. If these two bills become laws it is expected that they will bring in sufficient revenue to reimburse the state for any appropriation made. A concerted effort should have been made long ago to push this bill when it came before the legislature, as there are sportsmen enough in every county to influence legislation in its behalf. If it fails it will be due to a lack of this effort rather than to any serious objections to the bill itself.

Kimball, S. D. NANIT.

As I have had numerous inquiries in regard to the license law of the Northwest Territory, passed at the second legislative assembly at Regina, August and September, 1893, I quote "No person who is not a resident of the territories shall hunt, take or kill any of the aforesaid animals and birds, unless he has obtained from the lieutenant-governor in council a license on payment of five dollars, which license shall expire on the 15th of May in each year; such license shall only bestow the right to take, hunt or kill as limited by ordinance. Provided always that the lieutenant-governor in council may authorize such persons as he shall think fit to issue such license." Following is the statute of Ontario, Canada, passed in 1893: "No person not a resident and domiciled in the province of Ontario and Quebec shall be entitled to hunt, take, kill, wound or destroy any game, birds or animal without first having obtained a license in that behalf. Every such license shall be signed by the chief fish and game warden, and countersigned by the [illegible] retary or his deputy for one season only [illegible] the game laws in force in the province [illegible] cense was granted; the fee so paid [illegible] twenty-five dollars, and paid to the [illegible] to be applied to the expense incurred [illegible] the game laws; such license shall not be valid until signed by the person to whom issued. All persons having such license shall produce the same when so requested by any person, and shall, if found pursuing, hunting or killing game, and shall fail to show such license, when reasonably and properly requested, shall, upon trial and conviction, forfeit the same and be subject to the penalties as provided in cases of the violation of the game laws."

Chicago. M. R. BORTREE.

THE present deep snow is likely to prove disastrous to Bob White in many sections of the country. While still hunting foxes recently, I came across a fresh track of a mink. The next day I took a couple of steel traps with the intention of stopping one quail destroyer that Game Warden Blow missed on his pilgrimage to this section. On striking the mink's track I observed a small bunch of six quails. As I had seen nine quails in the same locality a few days previous, I suspected some marauder had scooped them. I did not remain long in doubt, for within one hundred feet I discovered where the mink had burrowed in the snow under a steep bank. Thinking that perhaps the mink might have a burrow beneath the bank, I began digging the snow away to set the trap. My surprise can be imagined when I say that a foot beneath the snow I found an entire hen quail. A crimson spot on the back of the neck showed it had not frozen to death. In fact I never saw a plumper bird. On parting the feathers the teeth marks of the mink showed plainly at the base of the brain. I reasoned that the mink had laid this bird away in his private refrigerator for future use, so I took one of my best traps and placed it on a bed of dry leaves, then took some feathers from the dead quail and covered the trap lightly, put the quail in my pocket and started for home, keeping a good lookout for Warden Blow, for if he had found me with a quail in my possession it would have been useless for me to have tried to make him believe I did not kill the bird. On approaching the trap next morning I saw an animal tugging at the end of the chain, and it did not take me long to make one game-hog less in the state. I did not even wait for him to say his prayers. He was the fattest mink I ever caught. There are many sportsmen who are sitting around the fire these cold Winter days calling each other pot-hunters and accusing the small boy with the Zulu gun of being the cause of the scarcity of game; but if they would tramp the fields every day they would soon learn that the vermin and birds of prey in Illinois are the true pot-hunters.

Princeton, Ill. GEO. O. GREENE.

CANNOT the editor of the AMERICAN FIELD, through the columns of his most excellent paper, arouse the sportsmen of the state of New York sufficiently to cause them to exert themselves and try and influence their representatives in the legislature to so amend the game law that the deer in the state may not be annihilated? The special commission appointed to find out what was necessary has not only failed to do so, but the members thereof have taken advice and counsel from the very men who are adverse to making the game law a protective measure. I am speaking particularly in relation to the deer law. They have made it just what the hotel keepers and guides want it—a law of extinction. The longer the hounding season the more money the landlords and guides make, and that is all they seem to care for. The recommendation of the special committee is to make a longer period of hounding. Now, everyone knows that if it was not for hounding, the deer supply would be good for years to come. It is perhaps impossible to prohibit hounding, but the shorter the time allowed the better. Some five years ago, almost unaided, I got up some printed matter relating to the protection of deer, and forwarded a copy of it to each member of the legislature with a personal letter asking him to look carefully after the game laws. They did so, and the law was improved, but now they are going to spoil it all.

Ellenburg Center, N. Y. PROTECTION.

THE Muskingum County Fish and Game Protective Association was recently organized at Zanesville, O., with twenty-five charter members. The objects of the association as stated are the protection of fish and game, and all song birds, coöperating with the state officers to strictly enforce all the laws enacted for such protection, and the dissemination of beneficial knowledge in all that pertains to the interests of sportsmen, either in the creation, observance and enforcement of the laws, or in any way that may promote the better interests of honorable sportsmen. The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, George Lillenthal; vice-pres[illegible] A. Moore; secretary, William Horn; treasur[illegible] Edward Martin; board of directors, George L[illegible] William Horn, D. H. Gaumer, J. H. Hartmeyer [illegible] George S. Warner.

At a recent meeting of the game and fish commission at [illegible]n's Hotel, Toronto, Can., it was decided to make the [illegible] season on deer the same as it was in 1892, from November 1 to November 15, and thus cut out the ten days now included in the season. It was also decided to prohibit duck shooting until half an hour after sunrise in the morning and after half an hour after sunset in the evening, that the birds may not be molested at the time of going to roost. The commission also agreed that deputy wardens should be given the power of constables to enable them to better enforce the law, and also that fifty cents per head should be offered for fox scalps, as foxes are becoming so numerous as to be of great detriment to small game and poultry.

The cold weather and deep snows of the past two or three weeks have undoubtedly been severe on quails in almost every section of the country except the extreme South and on the Pacific coast, and if hundreds of birds that ran the gantlet of the open season last Fall and escaped with their lives have not starved or been frozen to death, it will be a wonder. We hope that the sportsmen of the country will, as soon as the weather moderates sufficiently to permit, make inquiry as regards the condition of the birds and how they withstood the terrible storm and report to us.

We acknowledge the receipt of a photograph from Mr. Charles Wood, of Alpena, Mich., showing the result of three days' shooting by him on ruffed grouse on December 13, 14 and 15 last. The picture shows not only fifty-three fine birds, but also presents a good likeness of Mr. Wood and his two English setters, Gleam's Pride II and Blade's Pride. The bag is a big one and Mr. Wood must have either found birds very plentiful or else covered more ground than most sportsmen care to when hunting for pleasure.

The Kalamazoo County (Mich.) Game and Fish Protective Association has received 192 of the 408 quails ordered by the association for propagating purposes, which will be housed and cared for until such time in the early Spring as it is safe to turn them out. Members of the association believe that by liberating about 200 pairs of old birds in the county they will have good shooting next Fall.

Mr. Fred Pratt, a brother of the mayor of Minneapolis, Minn., recently saw two wolves in the northeast part of that city well within the city limits, and, procuring a gun, he succeeded in killing one of the pair, the other escaping. He took the skin to the auditor's office and received the $15 bounty allowed by law for the killing of a female wolf within the county.

Representative Edwards will introduce a bill in the Michigan legislature to prevent the killing of quails for sale or for shipment outside of the state. The bill provides that violators of this act, when it becomes a law, shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $50.

A jack rabbit hunt, lasting two days, was recently indulged in by the citizens of Bent County, Colo., which resulted in the capture of 6,522 rabbits. The game was sent to Denver to be distributed to the poor of that city.

Senator Herb has received a petition from Madison County (Ill.) sportsmen asking that the open season on quails be made from November 1 to January 1, instead of from October 1 to December 1 as it is now.

Governor Nelson, of Minnesota, has reappointed Captain Baird, of Fairmount, a member of the board of game and fish commissioners of that state.

GOOD HUNTING AND STRANGE HAPPENINGS

Waco, Tex.

Editor American Field:—The close season in this state relative to the hunting and shooting of deer expired on the first day of August. We had caught everything during the year that we would let our hounds run except a deer, and we had determined that as soon as the season opened we would try a deer. Accordingly, Jas. A. Harrison, Judge J. T. Harrison, Hon. R. H. Harrison, W. D. Herring, J. H. Hart and I agreed that on the morning of August 6 we would try to catch a deer.

Three o'clock on the morning mentioned found us all [illegible] bridge, the place of meeting, [illegible] for the fun. The hounds pre[illegible] as they played around us, for [illegible] fun ahead. It was a likely looking pack of Walker, July, Rhea and native hounds. Necking them, we rode hurriedly to the post oak ridges east of Tehuacana. There we uncoupled the hounds, and with a bound they disappeared in the thickets. We rode on in silence for about an hour, only occasionally giving a blast or two on our horns to let the pack know the direction we were traveling.

Stopping to listen, we could hear Blue Back about a mile ahead; in a few moments others had joined him, and in a few moments more they were up and off, just as the sun had cast long shadows westward. Down into Williams' Creek bottom they went. Making a circle or two, the graceful, fleet-footed flyer, bearing his flag of truce, became aware that his business called him to more open ground, and to the post oaks he turned, and as he struck the open glades leading toward Tehuacana he attempted to put sufficient distance between himself and his pursuers to insure his safety. But at every turn he heard that pack of flying hounds close in his wake; and as he doubled on his track they flanked him and drew close, and he made another straight run but failed to gain any vantage thereby. Down into the thick jungles of Hog Branch he plunged, and the pack, with fire in their eyes and regardless of brake or briers, rushed madly after him. Back he turned again and ran up near the St. Louis & Southwestern Railroad track, wheeling back. We cheered the pack lustily, and they bounded forward with renewed speed. The deer commenced to make short, quick circles, and the writer remarked that he would have to stop that business or his hours were numbered. He seemed to have seen his error, and, turning due east, he made a run for his life; but it was too late, for the pack closed round him and dragged him down in just fifty-five minutes from the time they started him. He proved to be a beautiful yearling buck.

Tying him up behind my saddle, we crossed the St. L. & S. W. Railway and made into the old Jink Evans pasture, a great place for wolves and foxes, and in less than thirty minutes from the time we caught the deer we had a wolf up and going; and what music the pack did make! There is just as much difference in the music of a pack when after a wolf and when after a deer as there is between martial music and the low gentle lullaby of a mother singing her babe to sleep. If that pack had struck up the air of Dixie we would not have dashed into the thickets more recklessly. Over to Wildcat Creek they went; there they doubled and ran by us with their heads up. They leaped forward as fresh seemingly as when they started. The wolf turned toward the town of Axtell, but the country was too open and he hunted the thickets along the divide between the railroad and Wildcat Creek. Around and around the pack took him. Red Rock, with his clear tenor notes, threatened to dethrone and take the lead from Clide; while Nic, with his deep basso profundo, was laboring hard in the rear, for they were setting the pace too fast for a big dog in thick brush. Again they doubled and crossed the road right in front of some of the party, and what yelling and riding as they drove him south to Elm Prairie! There he circled back and again made for the thick brush on Wildcat Creek, but to no purpose, for hounds were pressing him hard, and with tongue distended and tail down he was about ready to turn and fight it out. The pack rushed upon him, and wheeling he snapped right and left, his white teeth gleaming in the sunlight. But he was doomed, and in ten minutes more they had killed him—just one hour and twenty-five minutes from time of starting. A deer and a wolf in less than three hours! Who can beat it?

We had rather a strange experience with some of our hounds while out hunting several weeks since, and the story sounds so fishy that I had about concluded to say nothing about it; but when Major Val Young of Mississippi heard of it he urged me to publish it, as it might be of interest to the hunting fraternity and might save some good hound's life. It is as follows:

On a certain Wednesday evening several of us had gone out on the Basque brakes for a fox-hunt. We jumped a fox and he circled a time or two and then made straight for the Lover's Leap, a very high bluff near where the Basque empties its waters into the Brazos River, and where it is said an angry Indian chief had pursued his daughter and her lover, a young warrior of another tribe, and those two coming upon this bluff and seeing no avenue of escape, locked in each other's arms, jumped to the raging waters a thousand feet below. Here the hounds made a double or two on a thick gulch that makes out from Lovers' Leap, when suddenly they stopped, and, after some time, three or four of them trailed off down down the river. It was then two or three o'clock in the morning, and as this was our second run that night we concluded to blow them off and go home. After blowing some time we got all the pack except two, Trouble and Tumbler. Thinking, of course, that they would come home as they had often done before, we were not at all uneasy about them. Remember this was on Wednesday night. On Friday I had some business down at the kennels, and when I got there I noticed the absence of Trouble and Tumbler and asked Tom, our keeper, about them. He said that he thought they had stopped up at my house, as they were sometimes in the habit of doing. Saturday I put two men to hunting for them, and on Sunday they reported that they had reached the Basque brakes and could not hear anything of them. Sunday night I was lying out on my back porch thinking what could have become of my hounds, and I reasoned this way and that way, when the idea struck me that they were in a well. I thought and studied, and the more I thought the more clearly it appeared to me that they were in a well; but I had never heard of a well anywhere in that locality. The next morning after finishing breakfast I met my friend Jas. A. Harrison and told him that Trouble and Tumbler were in a well on the Basque. He asked me how I knew. I told him that I knew it and asked him to go out with me in my buggy, to which he agreed. I wanted to take a rope, but he said not to; that there was no well there, and if there was and the hounds were in it, they would be dead by this time. I told him I did not think so. We drove out until we were on the edge of the brakes about opposite where they were last, and as I reined up my horse a negro boy stepped out of the cedars. I asked him whether he had seen such foxhounds in that country, and he said he had not. I then asked him if he was well acquainted with the brakes in that particular locality, and he said he was, I asked him if there was any old well in that locality. He studied for a moment and then said there was; that an old gentleman by the name of Putnam many years ago dug some holes over there in search of buried gold, and that one of them was very deep and was near where I had indicated. I hired him to take me to it. He drove up to within about a half mile when we had to go the rest of the way on foot, the negro boy leading. He took us down a deep cañon for two or three hundred yards, and then up the side of a nearly perpendicular wall covered with briers and brush. About midway up this wall he stopped, and, getting down on all fours, crawled a few feet and then cautiously peered over into what appeared to us to be a large hole, and immediately exclaimed:

"Bless God; dar he is! Dar's both of dem."

We crawled up and looked in, and there they both stood at the bottom of a well at least thirty feet deep, dug in solid rock, and with sharp edges projecting all around, and as soon as I spoke they commenced to bark. We sent the negro boy back home after a rope. Harrison was more surprised than I, and about the first thing he said was:

"I tell you, Tom, it will never do to tell this; it's too fishy." But on reflection he remarked: "It's a good thing we have got this negro along to prove it."

Shortly the negro returned with a rope, and Harrison being the lightest I let him down into the well and pulled the hounds up one at a time, Harrison coming up after them. They were looking very well, considering, and strange to say they did not have a bruise on them.

I paid the boy to go down that evening and cover the well over, and thought he would do so; but in the course of a week or so we were again running a fox there and lost two more hounds. Their owners immediately went to the well and found both of them in it; and neither of these was hurt. The reader can rest assured that that time I had that well covered up.

Another strange accident happened, the knowledge of which I believe may at some time prove of value to owners of foxhounds. Last Summer I visited my brother, who, like myself, is an ardent hunter. Some time previously he had purchased some July hounds from Mr. Thad Murphy of Georgia. One morning he started down town and one of these July hounds, Jo Jay, started to follow him. He ran him back and went on to town, but had hardly reached there before a messenger came informing him that Jo Jay had ruined himself. He returned home immediately and found that the dog had run a stick entirely through his body just behind the shoulder; right where I supposed the heart was located. Not having a veterinarian he sent for two physicians. When they arrived the stick was projecting from each side and the hound would reach around with his mouth and try to pull it out. The physicians pulled it out and said that there was no use doing anything for him, that he could only live a few hours at best. My brother, however, got some carbolized water and injected it into the wound and placed the poor brute on a good bed; it had a fever for three or four days and then commenced to improve, and is now perfectly sound and well and runs as well as ever.

Fish and Fishing

LETTERS TO JACK—NO. 1

Steamer Dixon, Lake Superior, May 30, 1894.

Dear Jack:—When we went to bed last night, at the hotel in Duluth, the wind was blowing hard from the northeast; and Stephens said:

"We are in for a rough trip down the lake to-morrow."

Old Superior is as calm to-day, though, as on that August morning, two years ago, when you and I started for our outing on Isle Royale. There is a chill in the air now, causing us to seek the sheltered and sunny places on the boat, which was lacking then. But the water is just as blue, and so is the sky: the sun as bright, and a few miles out we passed what looked like the very same log, with the identical row of gulls sitting on it, that we saw on that trip. Knife Island seemed unchanged as we went by, and I caught a glimpse of our old camp site; but I did not see anything of the big black and white bull that disturbed our sleep the last night we were there. Do you remember the thunderous bellow he let out, close beside the tent, a little after midnight?

I most hartily wish that you were along with us now. It does not seem to be just the thing for Stephens and I to be off along the north shore trouting and you not along, when I know so well your longing to be with us and catch the speckled trout. I know that your thoughts are following us, as you perhaps question—

> Why dream I here within these caging walls,
> Deaf to her voice while blooming Nature calls:
> Peering and gazing with insatiate looks,
> Through blinding lenses or in wearying books?

I know, old fellow, that you are not deaf to the call but simply cannot obey it, and as I promised to give you a faithful account of our doings, so that you may enjoy—at second hand—our outing, I will write whenever I get an opportunity; but I fear that the ragged edges so characteristic of second-hand and shopworn things will be very apparent, as you read these letters.

We bought a new supply of trout hooks, while in Duluth, and dug a lot of worms—at least a thousand, I think—and this morning at the breakfast table, Stephens said:

"I don't believe we have worms enough; we'd better get some more."

So, after breakfast, we got a box and went and dug a lot more. I see, "in my mind's eye, Horatio," the look of disgust on your face, and hear—by my imagination—the tone in which you say:

"Worms!"

But we were informed, in Duluth, that all of the north shore streams are still high, and such being the case, it's worms or no fish. Then, too, you know, right well, that I'm not a fly crank but firmly believe a man may use bait in fishing and still be respectable; although to hear some of these fly-fishermen talk, and to read what they write, you would not think such a thing possible. The worms we have are fine fat ones, but are as nothing compared with some I read about in a paper the other day; where it was stated that, in some parts of Australia, earthworms grow to be six feet in length and three inches in diameter. "By the great horn spoon," as you would say, what a trout a man ought to catch with a worm of that size for bait.

We caused quite a commotion among our fishing friends in Duluth when they saw us with our rods, creels and tackle boxes and learned where we were going. Each and every one said we were two fellows to be envied, and wished that he could go along.

I keep thinking, as we pass the familiar places along the shore—Two Harbors, Split Rock, Beaver Bay, and the rest of them—if Jack were only along, my cup of content would be full; for, although, as Dr. O. W. Holmes has written,

> Joy smiles in the fountain, health flows in the rills,
> As their ribbons of silver unwind from the hills —on the north shore there are trout in them too—your presence would add much to the enjoyment and health of both Stephens and myself, as well as to the trout score we are going to make. Stephens is brimming over with anticipations of the trout we shall get, and has just said:

"By to-morrow, at this time, we'll have some trout; and we'll have fried trout, fried in butter, at our first supper in camp."

We have just learned that a little tug, with a fishing party on board, is down the shore somewhere; and we are fearful that the craft may touch at and the men fish out the streams we are going to before we get there. You see, Jack, that we borrow trouble for the morrow, and in thought are trying to cross streams before we come to them, out here on the steamer just the same as when at home. Stephens has just called:

"Come out here and see Manitou Falls;" so out I go.

MYRON COOLEY.

NOTES

THE Massachusetts Fish and Game Protective Association held its annual dinner at Young's Hotel, Boston, the night of January 30, President B. C. Clark presiding. About 250 gentlemen were present, among the most prominent being Lieutenant-Governor Wolcott, Rev. E. A. Horton, Rev. Minot J. Savage, Hon. George von L. Meyer, Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives; Captain John C. Wyman, Colonel Edgar R. Champlin, Hon. Charles W. Parker, Colonel H. T. Rockwell and Hon. W. H. Shurtleff, of the New Hampshire State Fish and Game Commission. Lieutenant-Governor Wolcott led off the speaking and distinguished himself at the outset with a bouquet of stories. He continued with a tribute to the true sportsman who found in the communion with nature the true zest of hunting rather than in the mere killing. . . . . President Clark reviewed the history of the association briefly, and spoke at some length on the outlook for protective legislation on the lobster, a fast disappearing fish of our waters. The introduction of the Mongolian pheasant was pointed out as one of the hopes of the game situation. Game matters were treated both jocosely and eloquently in turn by Rev. E. A. Horton, Col. John C. Wyman, Rev. Minot J. Savage, Judge Shurtleff of New Hampshire, Theodore H. Tyndale, Charles A. Kilham, of the Meganic Association, J. W. Titcomb for Vermont, Henry O. Hanley for Maine and others. The committee in charge was John Fottler Jr., William B. Smart, Heber Bishop, Benjamin C. Clark, Walter M. Brackett, W. B. Hastings and C. J. H. Woodbury.

VERY cold weather here now and not much snow. Spirit Lake is open in several places, each several hundreds of acres in extent. A curious phenomenon, for the ice is about two feet thick clear up to the holes, where the ice begins to grow thin. The fishing has been good this Winter, the law allowing the catching with hook and line. There are some violations, however, and Commissioner Delevan has been after them. He has secured some convictions, but it is hard to enforce the law. The accused call for a jury, and get clear in direct violation of the statutes. The only way is to forbid by law any fishing whatever during the Winter months. The better portion of our people are disgusted with the way these pot-fishermen act. They are, as a rule, a set of men who are no good to the community, pay no taxes, and a good many have not even a home. They just loaf around and live by hook or crook. If the real citizen wants a mess of fish he should have them, for that is all he does want, but it is hard to draw the line as to who ought to fish and who ought not. The present law will undoubtedly be changed when the next legislature meets, then the fish-hog will have to go.

Spirit Lake, Ia. M.

THE monthly meeting of the Anglers' Association of Onondaga County was held at Syracuse, N. Y., the night of February 4, Mr. Amos Padgham in the chair. A prominent feature of the night's work was the passage of a resolution which fully indorsed the action of the state association at its recent meeting in proposing to the legislature of New York an amendment to the state fish and game laws prohibiting the use of nets of any kind in the inland waters of the state. An effort will be made when the Senate game law committee is in session to have spearing abolished also. A resolution in the form of a petition to the state fish commissioners was proposed by Mr. J. E. Bierhardt, recommending the reappointment of Mr. Harrison Hawn as a state fish and game protector. It was declared that Mr. Hawn had been an able and faithful worker in the cause of protection, and that his extended experience would be valuable to the cause. Mr. Cornelius W. Smith of the Anglers' Association and others of a committee appointed to represent the state association before the Senate committee went to Albany for that purpose on February 8.

THE fourth annual meeting and banquet of the Kennebec Fish and Game Association, which from a handful of sportsmen in 1891 has become a powerful organization of about 350 members, was held at Waterville, Maine, the night of February 8. Several members of the legislature who are interested in fish and game protection were present as guests. The banquet was served at the Elmwood Hotel. Music was furnished by Manley's orchestra and by the Temple Street quartet of Waterville. Ex-Mayor E. L. Jones was the toastmaster. The place of honor at his right was filled by the venerable president of the association, Hon. William P. Blake of Oakland. Mr. Blake has watched all the work that has been done in the way of restocking Kennebec waters with trout and landlocked salmon. Among the speakers were Hon. L. T. Carleton of Winthrop, who has angled in almost every corner of Maine; Hon. A. M. Spear of Gardiner; Hon. E. H. Heath of Augusta, who hunts and fishes all over the state; G. W. Golding of Oakland, Hon. C. F. Johnson of Waterville, Senator Pennell of Piscataquis County, Hon. O. B. Glason and Dr. W. P. Giddings of Gardiner.

IN reading an article in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 2, about the amount of fish distributed in Wisconsin, you use the term fishes. Fish being plural, I would like an explanation of why you use the term fishes; and in another article you use the term quails while quail is plural. Being at sea on the subject, I would be pleased to have the same explained in a satisfactory manner.

Plymouth, Wis. ENAS WILLIAMS.

[If the writer of the above communication will consult Webster's dictionary he will find the plural of fish given as fishes; a secondary explanation says, "or collectively fish." But throughout the definitions, wherever the plural is used, Webster says fishes, not fish.—ED.]

AT least a score of anglers participated [illegible] fishing at Point Reyes, Cal., on Janua[illegible] Francisco Chronicle, and fishes en[illegible] gladden their hearts although all w[illegible]. Among those present were Doc W[illegible] Laughlin, Sandy Terry, Charlie Green and others. McLaughlin caught a seven-pounder, but a small boy made the big catch of that forenoon, landing two good ones. The sportsmen of the state uniformly have approved the changing of the opening day of the trout season to May 1 instead of April 1, and the present legislature will be asked to lengthen the close season to that extent.

THE veteran angler of San Francisco, Mr. John Butler, feels certain that the pleasant weather on the coast should make good fishing, remarks the Chronicle, of that city, in a recent issue, and steelheads have been running in large numbers. It is thought the list of new members of the state fish commission will include the name of either Mr. Harry Emeric, Mr. Alex. Vogelsang, or Mr. Otto Muser. It is considered certain that Mr. Wm. C. Murdock will be retained on the commission. The state fish commission is investigating reports from the vicinity of Olema Creek, to the effect that Italian residents have been spearing many steelheads of large size.

THE new fish and game law drafted by the Fish and Game Commissioners of New Jersey, if it becomes a law, will prevent the catching of bass upon Decoration Day. Attention is drawn, by the Sunday Call, of Newark, to the fact that it would be better to allow the present law to stand; that the law is concurrent with those of New York and Pennsylvania, and as there are waters which in some instances lie partly in New Jersey and partly in one of the adjoining states, it appears odd, to say the least, to enact a statute which would prevent fishing for bass in one part of a lake or stream at a time when just over the state line the same fish can be taken legally.

ON February 6, the market fishermen of Bay and Saginaw counties met at Bay City, Mich., and organized the Practical Fishermen's Association. Officers were elected as follows: President, W. C. Grisdale; secretary, Henry Benson; treasurer, William Willis. The object is to secure legislation beneficial to the interests of the market fishermen and fish dealers.

ON February 1 and 2 the snow-covered surface of Moosehead Lake, Me., was dotted with several hundreds of brush and bark shelters, erected by fishermen who were taking advantage of the clause in the state fish law allowing residents of the state to catch fishes for their own use. Hundreds of fine trout and "lakers" were pulled up through the ice and lay upon its surface.

BIG KING POND, located in the Dead River region of Maine and long noted for large trout, is to have 200,000 trout fry liberated in its waters. Little King Pond, in the same section, will be the recipient of 200,000 landlocked salmon; being fed largely by springs and having great depth, its waters are well adapted for salmon.

IN Michigan, on January 25, County Game Warden Nelson, of Manistee, arrested one John Thomas while fishing with nets under the ice on Lake Manistee. The official took his prisoner before Justice Harley, who promptly fined the culprit two dollars and costs for violating the fish law of the state, and in default of payment committed him to jail for ten days.

A RECENT dispatch from Bonaparte, Ia., says fishes are being taken from the Des Moines River there, to the amount of 10,000 pounds daily. The river being frozen over the fishes are driven to the millrace for air, and are being shoveled out by wagon loads.

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Red racer; spotted Coluber—Coluber guttatus (Linn.).—In 1877 I received a very peculiarly colored snake, which was captured in Kalamazoo County by Reverend Mr. Day. It was about four and a half feet long and the color above was light red as a ground, paler on the sides. On the back was a series of blotches over forty in number of nearly a brick-red color. The specimen was [illegible] head, which had been removed by those who [illegible] supposed poison, and I was unable to identify it. [illegible] sent to Professor Garman, of Cambridge, Mass., [illegible] identified it as this species. It is a snake rarely ta[illegible] the North.

Black racer: pilot; Alleghany blacksnake—Coluber (Say).—Found both in beech and maple as well [illegible]. Plentiful in pine lands and found through[illegible]. To an inexperienced person this would [illegible] the eastern blacksnake, B. con[illegible] two may be readily distinguished by the following marks of identification: The Alleghany blacksnake is, so far as I am able to learn, always furnished with a white patch on the throat and lower jaw. The other blacksnake has not this mark. Obsoletus has carinated scales on the back. That is the scales are provided along their center with a keel or ridge, and this mark is not possessed by the other snake as it has smooth scales. I have never met with the eggs of this specis knowingly, but in one instance a specimen was found to contain sixteen eggs. It is therefore probable that all of the members of this genus lay eggs. The pilot has longer teeth than the blue-racer, and it can use them with considerable effect, but, of course, its bite is innocuous. One which a friend of mine had in captivity for many months became a great pet and could be handled, never offering to bite. One of our diversions was to whirl it around in the air by the tail and coil it about the arm, when, in affright, it would use its constricting powers on the forearm, causing slight pain from pressure unless the muscles were kept rigid. I have seen individuals nearly six feet long, but they are said to reach a length of eight or nine feet. I have heard many times of a large blacksnake with a white ring around its neck, which reaches a length of twelve feet and upward, but have placed as much confidence in the story as in the narratives concerning the hoop-snake and sea-serpent.

The pilot is fond of sunning itself in secluded spots, where it may be seen stretched out to its full length. It is a great climber and may be found fifty feet from the ground. On one occasion a friend and myself found a specimen of this species and a blue-racer lying sunning themselves at not over ten feet apart. The locality was a wild one, near a stream and a small lake, the time in May. We secured the two by stepping on their tails with our rubber boots. Then the flouncing was terrific, and the movements continued with great violence as long as they were held. The motions of the blue-racer were much the quicker and far more vigorous.

This blacksnake is said to be very destructive to birds. The only thing which I have found the stomach to contain were some small mice. I have seen specimens vibrate the tail with a quivering motion much like that of a rattler, and producing a sound when the tip of the tail came in contact with the dead leaves. The range of this species is wide, as it is found from Southeast New York to North Carolina and Texas, and West to the plains.

NOTES

In the AMERICAN FIELD of July 8, on page 37, Sirus speaks of a black and tan terrier recognizing his master's footstep, a very common thing for a dog to do, as no doubt most of your hunting readers know. I can tell something which seems more remarkable to me. Several years ago I brought home from Minnesota a pair of young Canada geese. They soon became great pets, would eat from my hand and the gander would allow me to stroke his neck and back while eating. He would come chattering to meet me when I went out in the morning, though that might have been because he was expecting food. I had a name for him and when called by it he would answer. My wife and I were usually at the store until late in the evening, and he would always greet us with his "honk! honk!" when he heard us coming on the plank sidewalk. One evening she remarked: "I believe that goose knows your footstep, he never says anything when I come home alone." The next evening she suggested that I should walk on the grass and she keep on the walk. We each did as proposed, and he did not have anything to say. I then went back some distance, stepped onto the walk, and when I got near he began his greeting as usual. I tried the experiment several times and became fully convinced he knew my step. I lost his mate accidentally and then mated him with a tame goose. When she was setting and for some time after her brood was hatched, he would fight anything that went near, he would even drive the cow. After a while he was taken with a sore throat and could not eat, and I had to have the poor fellow killed.

Columbus, Wis. OLD CAP.

On board the three-masted schooner Warner Moore, which trades between New York and the West Indies, has been carried a pig which the crew had named Pat. He had a good berth in the galley, but owing to an inclination to assail the ship's scullion and the crew Capt. Croker had sentenced Pat to death, the execution to take place when the next voyage commenced. Early on the morning of January [illegible] as the Moore lay at Pier 13, East [illegible] Cullen wandered down the pier [illegible] to the river. Her loud screams [illegible] began squealing so vociferously [illegible] ed from his early morning nap [illegible] broomstick. The castigation but caused Pat to squeal the louder and more furiously, and the sailors rushed upon deck to see what was the matter. One of them heard Mrs. Cullen, threw her a line, and she was soon rescued, but in such a critical condition that she was sent at once to the Hudson Street Hospital. Undoubtedly Pat saved Mrs. Cullen from drowning, and probably he will have a new lease of life granted him.

Two men owning cattle on the Cave Hills ranges in the northwestern part of South Dakota, Messrs. W. H. Hamilton and brother, recently reported that during the past year they have lost at least thirty cattle—mostly valuable calves—by the depredations of wolves. The Messrs. Hamilton have tried poisoning, with little success, and will now resort to dogs, and if they are unable to cope with the nuisance, Mr. Hamilton says the Cave Hills ranges will soon be left to the wolves. They took four greyhounds out to the ranch this Fall, and have sent to West Virginia for four trail hounds, which are expected to arrive shortly. The latter are a cross between blood and fox hounds, and make excellent trailers.

THE extermination in New York of the English sparrow, through legislative enactment, was begun at Albany on February 6. Assemblyman C. J. Smith, of Monroe County, introduced into the assembly a bill which provides that any person who kills an English sparrow or destroys its nest and eggs shall be entitled to a bounty of one cent for each bird killed and five cents for each nest and eggs, on certificates to be issued by the supervisors of towns or aldermen of cities, specifying the number of birds killed or nests and eggs destroyed. These certificates are to be paid by the treasurer of each county. They shall not exceed fifty dollars in each county in each year.

WHILE I was out last year, on May 5, collecting specimen of crow's and hawk's eggs, I saw a crow fly from her nest in a pine tree, and on climbing to the nest I saw, to my surprise, four pink crow's eggs. They measured about 176 by 108, and as near as I can describe they looked like the cactus wren's eggs only there were larger spots and blotches of a reddish tint on them. The nest was about forty feet from the ground, was made of sticks and lined with bark, grapevines and skunk's hair. Did any reader of the AMERICAN FIELD ever know or hear of such a freak of nature before?

Bedford, Mass. FAY L. KENRICK.

IT has been stated that the largest snake known to have been killed on the American continent is mentioned in Dr. Gardner's book "Travels in Mexico." The snake was dead when Dr. Gardner found it, and was lying in the forks of a tree with its body full of arrows, just as it had been left by the Indians who dispatched it. It was dragged into an opening by the aid of four horses, and was found to measure thirty-seven feet in length. Probably the reptile was a species of python or boa constrictor.

A WEEK or two ago, Buck Patton and another man were out hunting coons. They tracked one to a tree which Patton climbed, and then he found the coon was as white as snow. The men decided to capture it alive, and though their hands were terribly bitten and lacerated by the animal they succeeded in securing the largest and finest albino coon I ever saw.

Mechanicsburg, O. H.

AT Elgin, Ill., Mr. M. W. Dunham had a herd of fourteen deer in his park. Thursday of last week a battle took place between two dogs and an old buck, which lost its horns defending the fawns, but he proved himself master of the field. As a result of the dog's attack two fawns were killed. Two deer jumped the fence and are still at large, while the buck is used up and will need considerable repairs about his head to renew the fight some other day.

IT is said that a man living in Wyoming has written to Secretary Hedges of the New York Driving Club that he has a trotting elk, broken to a pneumatic sulky, which can trot like the wind and never breaks. The owner wishes to exhibit the animal on the track at the Fleetwood Park meeting, next August.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 4

(Illustrated)

BY A. K. DELANEY

Victoria

Along the west coast of North America, between the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Cross Sound, covering something over ten degrees of latitude, lies the largest archipelago of the Western hemisphere, with, perhaps, the single exception of the West Indies. While it is probable that the West India group has the larger number of square miles of land, the Great and Small Antilles with the Bahamas thrown in offer no comparison in either length or intricacy of water line to that presented by the great archipelago of the North Pacific Ocean.

The largest and most important of this vast group of islands is Vancouver's, which extends along the coast, almost due northwest, from the Strait of Juan de Fuca to Queen Charlotte's Sound, a distance of three hundred miles. It possesses an area of nearly nineteen thousand square miles, and its surface is diversified with mountains and valleys. Its culminating point is Mount Arrowsmith, which reaches an altitude of fifty-nine hundred feet above the sea level, and the rolling portions show areas of excellent timber while many of the basins are grassy plains. It has very large deposits of coal at Departure Bay and Nanaimo of the best quality thus far discovered on the coast.

Situated at the southern extremity of this island, amid exceptionally picturesque surroundings, is Victoria, the oldest and most attractive town on the great estuary. To the south, across the Strait of Juan de Fuca, rises the bold, snowy belt of the Olympian Mountains, and from Beacon Hill the Cascades are visible, away to the northeast, across the blue waters of the Gulf of Georgia, conspicuous among which Mount Baker lifts his jagged, uncouth form. Near the city several handsome bays and coves indent the island, the principal of which is Esquimalt Harbor, the seat of a dry-dock and the headquarters of the British naval squadron, and, from the harbor of Victoria, a long arm known as the Gorge penetrates the coast for several miles, which is full of picturesque beauty. In climatic conditions, Victoria is greatly favored. Extremes of heat and cold are unknown, and the rainfall is considerably less than that of the Upper Sound. Its location is so far out toward the ocean that the "Chinook" winds, drifting eastward, moisture laden from the Japan current, are not submitted to the full force of the condensing process until after they have passed Victoria and encounter the colder air currents of the continental ranges. Hence the precipitation of rain is greater toward the mainland.

An American after becoming somewhat familiar with the Northwest coast and the greatness of its natural resources cannot suppress the feeling of regret that, among the many punishments visited upon the American people by the long contest over the slavery question, the loss of British Columbia to the United States is proving by no means the least. But for the presence of the "peculiar institution" and its influence in preventing the acquisition of territory in the Northwest, there is scarcely a reason to doubt that the cry of "fifty four-forty" would have been realized, which, with the subsequent acquisition of Alaska, would have given us the Pacific Coast from Mexico to the Arctic—a consummation whose benefits are incalculably beyond the capacity of any man now living to estimate—and I have never visited Victoria without wanting to reconstruct this part of American history.

One does not need to be long on shore to detect that the city is a hybrid; a mixture of Brother Jonathan and John Bull, in which the latter predominates. The public structures all wear that air of solidity and stability peculiar to British architecture, and the business methods are affected with that excessive deliberation John Bull seems to take such delight in manifesting. The streets of the city are solidly macadamized, and for some distance beyond the suburbs of the town one finds the same substantial highways. Along these drives are bright cottages, surrounded by a wealth of flower gardens and emerald lawns, with here and there a monarch forest tree preserved, giving a decidedly English tinge to the landscape and calling to mind the pictures of rural England so graphically portrayed by Washington Irving. Not infrequently one meets with public houses, bearing such unmistakably English cognomens as "King George's Inn" and "The Boar's Head," where ale and "'alf and 'alf," of undoubted British brew, are dispensed in large stone mugs. At the "Driard" (which, by the way, is without exception the best hotel on the coast) evidences of English influence are present in the pronounced penchant for roast beef and plum pudding. Jonathan is, however, not altogether in the background, but asserts his presence in a street railway propelled by the electric motor; and one occasionally meets with an establishment whose insignia and mysterious looking flasks in the front windows are suggestive of Chapin & Gore's of Chicago. So if one does not want to wait for the slower movements of the English coaches he can take the motor, and if the milder British beverages are not fast enough in their processes he can alway be promptly accommodated with some of Kentucky's celebrated product.

My second visit to Victoria chanced to occur at the time of the jubilee over the fiftieth anniversary of the Queen's reign. I went down from Alaska on the Olympian, and among the passengers on board were some of the magnates of the Northern Pacific Railway and the senior member of the firm at San Francisco that has charge of the lines of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, all of whom manifested a desire to reach Victoria in time for the jubilee. As the outcome of this we made the run from Juneau City, Alaska, to Victoria, in the unprecedented time of fifty-six hours, and swept into the harbor of the latter city about ten o'clock on the morning of June 22, 1887.

The day was beautiful and the city was clad in its best holiday attire. Flower gardens were in full bloom, and the clean-shaven lawns were in their deepest green. Decorations everywhere met the eye, and from scores of flagstaffs the deep crimson of the British ensign floated against the blue dome of the sky.

In the forenoon we witnessed a rather indifferent sham battle between Red Jackets on Beacon Hill, though the artillery display was quite creditable. The afternoon was set apart for a regatta, which took place in the Gorge, and long before the appointed hour the harbor was alive with every imaginable small craft—from the swell steam yacht of the English cockney to the graceful proportions of the dugout canoe of the Hydah Indian—all gay with decorations and making their way to the scene of the contest.

In the meantime the steamer Idaho, bound for Alaska, had arrived and under the leadership of Capt. Carroll passengers from both her and the Olympian were soon amid the throng on board the steamer's small boats, in tow of steam launches, each boat plentifully supplied with enormous Japanese umbrellas, whose gay colors and mysterious hieroglyphics bespoke the land of their manufacture. The ten and twelve oared matches between the crews of the flagship Triumph and her consort, the Caroline, both of Her Majesty's naval squadron, proved the most exciting events of the afternoon.

The course was down the Gorge and around a small stone island at its mouth and back to the starting point. Our indefatigable Captain had secured for his party an excellent position on a smooth, grassy knoll on the banks of the Gorge which commanded a view of the whole course. The ten-oared match was won by the crew of the flagship by only a few inches; and when the twelve-oared match came on the sympathies of the throng of people that lined the course on either side were manifestly with the Caroline's crew. The crews were all young men, clad in the typical blue trousers and clean, white jackets of the seaman, their brawny arms bared to the shoulders; and I am frank to confess that after the boats had rounded the rock island and were coming home, dead abreast of each other, leaping forward at every stroke of the oars, each one of which rose and fell at the same instant as if responding to the gesticulations of the cockswain, who with turgid muscles was swaying back and forth in the stern as if giving the stroke, my admiration for John Bull rose several notches, and when the Caroline's boat shot under the line, barely ahead of the other, it is not to be doubted that no small share of the applause that followed came from the American party in charge of Capt. Carroll.

The chief, and to me most interesting, part of the day's entertainment was reserved for the evening in the illumination by the naval squadron at Esquimalt Harbor. Shortly after sunset the Olympian pulled out from the Victoria dock, and steaming around a small, rocky peninsula, entered Esquimalt Bay. The evening was surpassingly beautiful, and the bay was as smooth as glass and well filled with craft, both great and small, bearing people who had come to witness the display. In the center of the bay the squadron, consisting of the Triumph—an iron man-of-war of the second class—and three consorts lay at anchor. They were surly-looking fellows, wearing the sort of keep-your-hands-off or let-me-get-at-you air of the English bulldog. The bay was so calm that their every feature—sturdy hulls, graceful spars, and mass of cordage—was reflected from the mirror of the water. And when, in my mind, I compared them with the punt-shaped apology for a craft that represents Uncle Sam's navy in Alaskan waters, my American pride was treated to a cold bath.

Out of compliment to the occasion the Olympian was gaily dressed, every piece of bunting on board ship, including signal flags, being on display overhead, and from the flagstaff at the stern floated in long graceful folds that ensign dear to every American heart—the stars and stripes. We entered the bay at a slashing pace and Carroll carried his ship away around the harbor, encircling the squadron, then swung around and dropped anchor within a few rods of the flagship. The rattling of the heavy iron cable rushing through the hawse-hole, had scarcely ceased when the Olympian dipped her ensign in salutation to the fleet, which was immediately answered by the Triumph, and a long, loud cheer went up from the crews of the squadron.

John Bull never does anything in a hurry, and the stillness which settled ever the bay after this outburst of applause began to grow wearisome before a capital cornet band, on board the Triumph, began to play and just after, simultaneously, upon every ship of the fleet a sailor at each mast—fore, main and mizzen—ascended the shrouds to the masthead for the purpose of adjusting some tackle necessary for the coming display; and when darkness had fully enshrouded the bay all at once the festoons of Chinese lanterns, stretching from bowsprit over fore, main and mizzen masts and down to the stern, began to go up and were soon in place. Next, every yard-arm was decorated; and from the whole fleet, on deck and in the cross-trees, commenced a most excellent display of pyrotechnics, which lasted for two hours.

As the last rocket went up from the Triumph, the crews—all in chorus—struck up "God Save the Queen," filling to overflowing the calm night air with the voices of a thousand hardy English "Jackies" joining in their national anthem. The system and the despatch with which everything was executed, with the transparently deep devotion of the participants to their mother country and its reigning sovereign, left a far more profound impression on my mind than the exhibition itself; and I left Esquimalt Harbor that night a complete convert to the doctrine of a navy for the United States, one commensurate with the wealth and power of the Republic, that shall command both the respect and admiration of the civilized world.

NOTES

THE readers of the AMERICAN FIELD will recall the very widespread interest excited somewhat more than one year ago by the newspaper reports of the loss of the Carlin hunting party in the Clearwater country, in Idaho, the rescue of the party by a searching party from the United States Fourth Cavalry, under Lieut. Charles P. Elliott, and the unfortunate disablement of the party's cook, George Colgate, whom the other members of the hunting expedition found themselves compelled to abandon in a helpless, dying condition or run the risk of losing their own lives. Owing to the many criticisms upon this affair, very many men in this country will be pleased to learn that an accurate account of that trip has been published in book form, which is also valuable as an addendum to the early explorations of that country by Lewis and Clark and other adventurous spirits. The work is a 12mo, of 280 pages, illustrated with twenty-seven reproductions of photographs taken by members of the party, is printed in bold-faced large type, and is entitled "In the Heart of the Bitter-Root Mountains," by Heclawa. An excellent map of that country adds to the value of the work, which we can furnish, postpaid, at one dollar and one-half.

I HAVE read with interest all the articles which have appeared in the AMERICAN FIELD, contributed by W. S. B., relative to the Lewis and Clark expedition. This is the most interesting of all exploring expeditions in the history of this country, possibly the most important. A new edition of Lewis and Clark should be issued, carefully prepared and annotated with maps so as to show the original names of places, (rivers mountains, etc.), and the new names. The original book—now hard to find—has lost its interest by reason of having lost the original names of places, so that one cannot now trace the line of march with certainty or intelligence. A new edition, with the old names of places and the now prevailing names, would be of great value. If to this could be added the line of the Astoria Expedition (1810-11), the book would certainly be most popular and instructive. Capt. Bonneville should be added. It has occurred to me very strongly that your correspondent, or rather contributor, W. S. B., is the man for the work, and I hope you will urge him to undertake it.

THE SOUTHERN FIELD TRIAL CLUB'S TRIALS

The trials of this club at New Albany, Miss., beginning February 4, had a rough experience in weather which finally forced the abandonment of the All-Age Stakes. The rain, snow and freezing weather which have prevailed in this section during January left the grounds and roads in anything but the best condition. The trials were tardily conducted and the weather conditions, though not of the best, on Monday and Tuesday were not taken advantage of; had they been, the result might have been different. Much time could have been saved in earlier starts, the prompt changing of braces of dogs, and a better arrangement of courses. So much so that the first series in the All-Age Stakes might have been finished. Some delay was unavoidable owing to the scarcity of birds, which caused longer running of dogs that they might be seen on game. The scarcity of birds could not be explained, for with an excellent hatching season few were found where last year they were most abundant. The club will now consider a change of ground, and it is possible that next year's trials will be held at West Point.

On Wednesday a hard rain prevented any work, and by Thursday zero weather appeared and the day was spent around the fire. The handlers in the afternoon consulted and finally agreed to submit a proposition to the club authorities, which asked that the prize money should be divided between all that had started and those eligible to start in the All-Age Stakes. In the evening the management consented. Their action was justified by the weather conditions, prevailing and expected, as well as by the rules of the club; otherwise a heavy expense would have been incurred that was needless, as well as burdensome to some. The judges were Mr. John D. King of Jackson, Tenn., Mr. T. M. Brumby, secretary of the club, and Dr. M. F. Rogers, the second vice-president, of New Albany; the latter filling the places of Mr. Will Wilson of Atlanta, Ga., and Mr. Williams of St. Louis. It is well to remark here that persons who accept the position of judge should consider well the probabilities of their being able to be present, as people who enter dogs to run under them do not always feel satisfied with those substituted for them. These remarks are not intended to reflect on the substitute judges at this meeting, for no objections was heard or raised to either, but they apply to the management of all clubs and to those who accept the honor tendered them to judge. Let [illegible] these failures to attend and keep down [illegible] any cause for complaints by those w[illegible] make them. Joe Tucker, son of the [illegible] Chas. Tucker, who was detained [illegible] illness, and C. A. Galloway made th[illegible] as handlers at trials and acquitted th[illegible]ves in good form.

The annual meeting of the club was held at the Rogers House, New Albany, on February 6. The secretary-treasurer's report was read and adopted. It showed a good financial condition. The following officers were re-elected: President, Maj. J. W. Renfroe; 1st vice-president, Capt. Pat Henry; 2nd vice-president, Dr. M. F. Rogers; secretary-treasurer, T. M. Brumby. The first Monday in February of 1896 was selected as the date for the next trials; the place was not definitely settled, but will be at New Albany or West Point. The stakes have been changed, a little less given to the setters and pointer stakes reopened. For the Setter Derby $150 are given; $200 to first, $125 to second, $75 to third, and $50 to fourth; first forfeit of $10 due August 1, second forfeit of $10 due November 1, and $5 additional to start. Four hundred dollars are given to the All-Age Setter Stakes, divided as follows: $160 to first, $120 to second, $80 to third, and $40 to fourth; first forfeit of $10 due October 1, second $10 due December 1, and $5 more to start. Pointer Derby, $250; to first $100, to second $75, to third $50, to fourth $25; the club agrees if 25 entries are made and pay the second forfeit to increase the prizes to the same as those given in the Setter Derby. The same prizes are offered in the All-Age Pointer Stakes, and the forfeits and times for payments are the same as in the respective setter stakes.

MONDAY

After many previous days of rain, snow and freezing weather the trials began under favoring weather, clear but cold. As the drawing was not made until Monday morning and the ground was hard frozen, together with a big frost, a late start was made about one and one-half miles from town. Birds were not plentiful during the day and the length of the competitions in the first series in some instances was not long enough to correctly estimate the dogs, as was seen in the selection of some that were taken into the second series. The Derby (for pointers and setters) had fourteen starters, twelve English setters and two pointers.

DERBY

CYNOSURE—PALOMA.—Norvin T. Harris' black, white and tan English setter bitch Cynosure, by Roderigo—Norah II, handled by J. M. Avent, and P. Lorillard Jr.'s black, white and tan bitch Paloma, by Eugene T—Lou, handled by Joe Tucker, were cast off in rather thick sedgegrass at 9:49, running until 10:27. Paloma did all the point work, except a point on single bird made by Cynosure on scattered birds of first bevy found by Paloma. Paloma made a good find and point on first bevy, Cynosure coming up backed her. Tucker not walking wide enough did not raise birds, and Paloma sent on in direct line to birds dropped to point. Cynosure moving on, to her right, got too close and two birds rose, the balance of the bevy following. Sent on, each dog secured a point at same time on single birds. Afterward Tucker called "point" to Paloma when the bird rose. Several birds afterward rose, whether from dogs or not it was hard to tell. After quite a run the dogs were ordered up, the judges not taking the precaution to have the dogs in sight. Paloma had not been seen for a few moments, and was found on bevy point near by. She was clearly entitled to the find. Paloma had the best of it all through, was quietly controlled and had best range, doing all the point work with the exception mentioned.

TOM BEGGS—JOE CUMMINGS.—Blue Ridge Kennel's black, white and tan English setter dog Tom Beggs, by Antonio—Ruby's Girl, handled by D. E. Rose, and Maj. J. W. Renfroe's black, white and tan English setter dog Joe Cummings, by Antonio—Pocceola, handled by W. W. Titus, were sent away at 10:30, both going well and maintaining their speed to the end. Joe ran in improved form over that shown at West Point. He found the only bevy found, making a very stylish point, which was backed by Tom. Sent on Joe found and Tom flushed twice in going to him. Besides this he made false points, destroying all his chances.

DELHI—IDA B.—Charlottesville Kennel's liver and white pointer dog Delhi, by Rip-Rap—Queen II, handled by C. E. Buckle, and Bryson & Bedford's black, white and tan English setter bitch Ida B, by Tremont—Leda, handled by C. A. Galloway, started at 11:19 and ran until 11:38 without finding. Not having suitable ground to continue they were ordered up until after lunch. At 1:13 they were put down again and after a short run a bevy was up in direction of Ida B. A judge stated that she flushed and chased it. Spectators near stated she did neither and that she never saw the birds. Passing on, without following the birds, Delhi was missed and was found on bevy point, but before Buckle got to him he moved forward a little and the bevy flushed. This was an unusual proceeding for him for he is usually thoroughly stanch under most trying circumstances. The birds were followed but none found. Delhi then pointed where first bevy raised from. Hunting over quite a territory Delhi pointed on scattered birds. When Buckle called point a bird or two rose, and he flushed one. This finished their work. Delhi maintained his pace and range best. Ida was not regular in either, at times going out well and then working close in. Delhi did not run up to his usual form.

TONY'S GALE—SHAD.—Fox & Seiler's black, white and tan English setter dog Tony's Gale, by Antonio—Nellie G, handled by J. H. Johnson, and P. Lorillard Jr.'s black, white and tan dog Shad, by Eugene T—Lou, handled by Joe Tucker, were cast off at 1:56. After a short run Shad made a point on scattered birds from a bevy put up by horsemen and marked down. He was a little unsteady to flush. Sent on, Gale made a good bevy find in a pasture and was steady to flush; Shad backed. [illegible] followed. The dogs now had quite a run, Tony [illegible] best and hunting out ground in excellent sty[illegible] best. He found the next bevy and was stead[illegible] Birds followed, not found. Tony made good [illegible] bird. Dogs ordered up; time, 2:39. Shad had go[illegible] at times ranging well, but not equal to Tony, a s[illegible] dog every way.

CLEMENTINA—LADY CLARE.—Avent & Thayer's black, white and tan setter bitch Clementina, by Roderigo—[illegible] by J. M. Avent, and Jackson-Denmark [illegible] white setter bitch Lady Clare, by [illegible] handled by Thomas Bond, started [illegible] There was little done to the credit [illegible] To a first point claimed by Bond for Lady [illegible] and pointing under a tree, nothing could be raised. A bird flying out above her and scattered birds being found near by, the indications were strong that she had flushed a bevy. On scattered birds from a bevy raised by horsemen each dog secured a point. After flushing to the points all the birds rose. Dogs steady. Just before the close of their trial Clementina pointed a bevy in good form. Birds not followed and dogs ordered up at 3:24. In the making up the second series neither was entitled to recognition, but it is hard to see if Lady Clare was recognized and taken in why Clementina was not, as she had the best of the trial between them, doing more and better point work and the equal, if not the superior, in pace and range.

TONY'S BOY—MARS.—Norvin T. Harris' black, white and tan setter dog Tony's Boy, by Antonio—Laundress, handled by D. E. Rose, and Capt. Pat. Henry's lemon and white dog Mars, by De Soto Boy—Gladstone's Girl, handled by C. A. Galloway, were cast off at 3:28, having good territory and a good part of the evening. Sent ahead with directions to work down the ridge to a crossing below, Tony was off. At end of ridge he made a wide cast and found birds; a piece of good work. Mr. Galloway with his dog, which had limited range, had in meantime crossed to other side and was hunting out ground on his own hook with neither judge or other following. He had found nothing when Rose joined him. Handlers now keeping together Tony soon made a long cast in front and found a bevy at edge of a plum thicket, and though missed for some time he held it until the crowd came up, and after. After flush of birds Mars was brought up. Sent on Tony did the finding and pointing on the scattered birds, pointing twice. They were now ordered up, Tony making a fine run, being far superior in work at all points. Mars was limited in range and seemed to have little spirit in his work; it was said the riding in wagon had sickened him.

TIPPOO—LADY MILDRED.—Charlottesville Kennel's liver and white pointer dog Tippoo, by Rip Rap—Monterey, handled by C. E. Buckle, and Blue Ridge Kennel's black, white and tan bitch Lady Mildred, by Antonio—Ruby's Girl, handled by D. E. Rose, were put down at 4:09 and run until after 5:00. Lady ran in excellent form, covering ground well with good pace and fair range; she was first to find bevy at a plum thicket, Tippoo backing. The birds having run, she was sent on, Tippoo joining and hustling. Birds flushed wild ahead. Before the work was finished on scattered birds there were some words between the handlers. Some points and flushes were made by the dogs. All ended well and the dogs were sent on. Lady by a nice cast ahead found and pointed a bevy. Tippoo was working to the right, but when Rose fired his gun at rise of bevy, Tippoo was quick on hand ready for business of any sort. On the scattered birds he proved to have an excellent nose, not surpassed by any dog in the stake. Buckle was not of a trustful mind and punished him beyond his deserts. Tippoo goes right up to his game. Another year when in form he should make it interesting for any dog. After about ten minutes' more running Lady made a point, which proved false. This was the last brace of the first series and concluded the day's work.

TUESDAY

This was an exceedingly uncomfortable day, cold and cloudy with a penetrating east wind, making it impossible to keep warm on horseback. The ground was hard frozen until late in the afternoon, making it rather hard running for the dogs. Added to this birds were exceedingly scarce, scarcer than ever known on these grounds. A late start was made and the first brace was not put down until 10:30. Slow, slow, is hardly the word for the conduct of the trials and the route is laid with little system. The Derby was continued, and finished after the middle of the afternoon, with an unnecessary amount of running, as it was a foregone conclusion that the dogs placed would win, and as finally placed.

SECOND SERIES

Eight dogs were taken into this series, and at least two or three without possible chance to be placed.

JOE CUMMINGS—PALOMA.—They were put down five miles from town at 10:30. Little point work was done. Only one bevy was found and that was flushed where Paloma was; circumstances not known. On the scattered birds Paloma pointed twice, Joe once. The dogs maintained the showing in way of speed and range shown in their first trial, but it was not a winning gait.

CYNOSURE—TONY'S BOY.—When this brace was called the handler of Cynosure, Mr. Avent, asked to withdraw her, as she was sick, showing signs of distemper. After investigation by the judges the request was granted. After the next two braces were tried Tony's Boy was put down to run a bye, and he maintained himself in good form. After a short run he pointed, but a lark and rabbit were the only things started. After a short run he was found on point, and Rose, failing to raise birds, sent him on. Thirty yards away he had birds located; he was steady to flush. He was now ordered up after a short run.

DELHI—TONY'S GALE.—After running a short time Delhi pointed a small bevy of about eight birds, Tony's Gale at the time being off on a long cast to the left. Delhi steady to flush. Sent on he pointed in wood near by, but no birds were raised. Tony's Gale had now returned and being sent on together, Tony pointed. Delhi, refusing to back, went in ahead to a flush. Ten minutes later Tony had a bevy point which Delhi at first backed, but then going on he passed Tony in the open and drew to a point at least fifteen yards ahead; Tony meantime retaining his point stanchly. Both were steady to flush. Sent on to find the birds which had settled in an open cotton patch, no point was made. In the meantime Delhi had been [illegible] wire fence with some little [illegible] him as quickly as possible. [illegible] t 11:47.

LA[illegible]DRED.—This brace went down [illegible] at 12:23. About close of run [illegible] y along a ravine which settled [illegible] secured a point. Others were claimed, because of the known presence of birds, but the dogs were simply stopping and looking. Lady Clara, about time she was ordered up, had a fit of some kind. Tony's Boy now ran a bye with the result mentioned.

THIRD SERIES

Four dogs were taken into the third series. Tony's Gale to run with Lady Mildred, and Tony's Boy with Delhi.

TONY'S GALE—LADY MILDRED.—This was the first brace down after lunch and was sent away at 1:14. Lady was first to find, and a bevy rose as Rose called point. Following the birds, Tony made a point in open before reaching the wood, but nothing could be raised. Tony found birds first and was backed by Lady. Both steady to flush. Sent on, Lady Mildred flushed birds and chased about seventy-five yards, a very unusual proceeding for her. The birds were followed again but not found. Ten minutes later Tony pointed but moved on, casting in a direction that took him from scent of birds. A little later the birds flushed about twenty-five yards from place of his point. Sent to find them in a nice open place, Lady flushed one just before Tony pointed the bulk of them. Following them again, Lady pointed twice on birds Tony, casting to right in meantime, found and pointed a bevy, being very stanch on them. At 2:30 they were ordered up.

TONY'S BOY—DELHI.—At 2:35 they were cast off, both giving a good exhibition of speed, range and searching qualities, Tony usually working on the outside. After beating out a large field Delhi worked off to the right and made two false points. Tony later, and after the dogs had been brought together, scored one also. After a few minutes' more running Delhi pointed a bevy on hillside. The birds flushed wild before Buckle got up. Delhi steady. The birds were followed but not found, Tony making a false point, Delhi backing. The dogs soon got widely apart, Tony keeping the course. Each found a bevy. When the bevy to Delhi was flushed his handler was ordered to join Rose. A bevy in meantime being flushed to Tony's Boy he was held up until Delhi was brought up. Sent on, Tony's Boy found first, and got a second point while Delhi got a point and flush. Tony excelled in speed and range and hunted out ground in better style, looking for bevies. They were ordered up at 3:22.

FOURTH SERIES

TONY'S GALE—TONY'S BOY.—This brace was sent away at once for a short run, principally to comply with the rule "that first and second prize winners shall have run together." Tony's Boy first false pointed. Sent on, they passed over a hill and when seen a few moments later both were pointing at a plum thicket where a bevy of birds was raised. Following the birds, marked down near by, Tony Boy got a point and a flush and the heat was over. A short consultation was held by the judges and the winners announced as below.

ALL-AGE STAKES

There was a good entry of starters, seventeen in all, drawn to run as follows:

Bryson & Bedford's Tremont with Dr. C W. Duke's Acolyte; Kidwell & Stoddard's Tick Boy with Manchester Kennel's Gleam's Sport; P. Lorillard Jr.'s Ightfield Rosalie with F. R. Hitchcock's Tory Topaz; Jackson-Denmark Kennel's Lillian Russell with Major Purcell's Lady Margaret; W. W. Titus' Minnie T with Avent & Thayer's Topsy's Rod; Major Purcell's Cid with Blue Ridge Kennel's Allene; Manchester Kennel's Gleam's Pink with Blue Ridge Kennel's Blue Ridge Mark; Major Purcell's St. Blaise with Norvin T. Harris' Tony's Boy; Dudley Schofield's Joe Bowers, a bye.

TREMONT—ACOLYTE.—Bryson & Bedford's black, white and tan dog Tremont, by Gladstone's Boy—Speckle Gown, handled by R. P. McCargo, and Dr. C. W. Duke's black, white and tan dog Acolyte, by Toledo Blade—Sue II, were put down at the conclusion of the Derby and ran from 3:46 until 4:30. After a run of about fifteen minutes, in which both showed only fair pace and range, a bevy was flushed by horsemen and marked down in a wood near by. The dogs were worked to it. A little point work was done by both dogs, but the birds were flushing wild ahead, giving limited opportunities. Passing to the open again, Tremont pointed, but McCargo could not find the birds. Both dogs now tried to locate them but failed, although the birds were flushed from ground passed by them. Tremont put up some in thick grass. After this they were ordered up.

TICK BOY—GLEAM'S SPORT.—Kidwell & Stoddard's black and white pointer Tick Boy, by King of Kent—Bloom, handled by J. B. Stoddard, and Manchester Kennel's lemon and white dog Gleam's Sport, by Vanguard—Georgia Belle, handled by A. P. Gilliam, were put down at 4:32. A few minutes later Sport pointed a bevy, moved on and flushed it. Less than fifty yards away he flushed a second one with conditions favorable. Ten minutes later he pointed again, but Gilliam could not raise birds. Sent on, Sport roaded and pointed for fifty yards or more but never located anything. Tick Boy, coming that way later, also pointed near the place of Sport's first point but nothing was found. Tick Boy after this indulged in some false pointing. At 5:17 the brace was ordered up.

Wednesday it rained all day and in the evening it grew colder, and by Thursday morning it was zero weather. Late in the afternoon there seemed no prospect for favorable change for two or three days, then the handlers put their heads together, all joining in but one, Mr. Avent; they requested the management to divide the prize money equally between all the dogs that had been paid for to start. Late in the evening the decision to do so was made, giving each dog $29.40. This ended the meeting.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE U. S. F. T. CLUB

NEW ALBANY, MISS.

The following is a copy of the proceedings of the board of governors of the United States Field Trial Club at New Albany, Miss., February 5, as handed to the reporters afterward by a member of the board:

"ROGERS HOUSE, NEW ALBANY, MISS., February 5, 1895.

"The meeting of the board of governors of the United States F. T. Club held at West Point, Miss., Monday, January 28, being adjourned to meet at New Albany, Miss., February 5, was called to order as 9:30 p. m. on the above date at the Rogers House, New Albany, Miss. In the absence of the president and vice-president Mr. W. B. Stafford was nominated and duly elected chairman of the meeting.

"In the absence of the secretary Mr. St. M. M. Mundy was nominated and duly elected secretary pro tem.

"Moved by Mr. J. M. Avent, and seconded by Mr. C. E. Buckle, that Mr. Osthaus and Mr. L. McGrew, members of the club, be called in to meet with the board of governors; carried unanimously.

"The roll was then called and it was found that 13 of the 15 members of the board of governors were present in person or by proxy.

"The following gentlemen were proposed for membership in the club by Messrs. J. M. Avent and W. B. Stafford: Chas. Cooledge, Boston, Mass.; T. T. Ashford, Birmingham, Ala.; Bayard Thayer, Boston, Mass.; and J. D. King, Jackson, Tenn.

"Moved by Mr. Osthaus, and seconded by Mr. McGrew, that the Secretary be instructed to cast the ballot of the meeting; carried unanimously, and the above named gentlemen were declared elected by the chair.

"Mr. Madison's resignation being presented, it was moved by Prof. Osthaus, and seconded by J. M. Avent and C. E. Buckle, that Mr. Madison's resignation be not accepted; carried unanimously. Moved by Mr. Avent and seconded by Mr. Buckle that Mr. Osthaus be appointed a committee of one to communicate with Mr. Madison, requesting him to withdraw his resignation as the secretary and treasurer, also as a member of the club; carried unanimously.

"Moved by C. E. Buckle, and seconded by Mr. Osthaus, that the meeting adjourn on a recess to meet at the same place at 8:30 p. m., Wednesday, February 6; carried unanimously."

The adjourned meeting was held at New Albany, Miss., Wednesday evening, February 6, at 8:30, Mr. W. B. Stafford in the chair. Messrs. Avent, Buckle and Mundy of the board were present, with E. H. Osthaus and Mr. J. B. King, elected the previous evening, sitting with them and accorded the right to vote and participate in the meeting. Mr. Stafford held Mr. Seale's proxy, Mr. Avent held those of Messrs. Essig, James and Harris, and Mr. Buckle those of Messrs. Adams, Rowland, Freeman, Madison and Hulman. When the chair announced that the meeting was ready for business Mr. Osthaus offered the following introductory remarks and resolution:

"As there has been some talk by members of the club of disbanding the club, with other matters mentioned in that connection, I wish to state that I believe it is not in the power of the board of governors to take any such action, and believing the following resolution is the best thing to consider I hereby offer it:

"Resolved, That when this meeting adjourns it adjourns to meet in Chicago on Thursday evening of the Mascoutah Kennel Club's Show, and that the secretary, Mr. Madison, be directed to notify each member of the club to send a written expression of opinion and instruction as to the future conduct of the club in respect to the continuing or disbandment of the club, and that Mr. Madison be requested to continue to act as secretary of the club until that time."

Before action was taken on the resolution Prof. Osthaus, when asked if he was ready to report as to Mr. Madison's resignation, stated that he was, and that he could say that he, Mr. Madison, was firm in his decision to resign.

A movement to have copies of telegrams sent and received spread on the minutes of the meeting was abandoned, on the suggestion of Mr. Buckle, as he thought Prof. Osthaus had fulfilled his duty, which should be satisfactory. Discussion on the resolution followed. Mr. Avent opposed the resolution and advocated the acceptance of Mr. Madison's resignation for the fifteenth, stating that it would put the club at the mercy of Mr. Madison, who was seeking to disrupt it, adding that he had several letters in his pocket to prove it. Mr. Buckle said he knew Mr. Madison too well to believe such a statement. Mr. King, being asked for an opinion, at first refused, but he afterward stated he thought a new secretary-treasurer should be elected now. The chairman, Mr. Stafford, said that the club was now represented, in person, or by proxy, by thirteen of the board, which was about all of the club and, he thought, as full a representation as could be had. The Chairman then stated that it would be best to have it decided if proxies could be used. After discussion it was decided to use them. The vote on the adoption of the resolution was then taken, which resulted as follows: Yeas, Prof. Osthaus, Mr. Buckle and five proxies; total, 7. The chairman stated that the yeas were all in, which showed a knowledge of the situation, and that the nays be taken. They were as follows: King, Mundy, the Chairman for Mr. Seale, Mr. Avent for self and three proxies; total, 7. A tie vote. The Chairman voting "nay" the resolution was lost by a vote of 8 to 7. Prof. Osthaus regretted the vote, as he thought all the members of the club should be heard in this matter and he thought the proposed way was a just one.

The Chairman declared Mr. Madison's resignation in order and it was accepted, Mr. Buckle declining to vote for himself or his proxies. It was then decided to go into an election of a secretary-treasurer. Mr. Avent nominated Mr. Stafford. Mr. Stafford called Mr. Avent to the chair, pending an election. Prof. Osthaus asked to be excused from voting. Mr. Buckle declined to vote any of his proxies or for himself. Mr. King, Mr. Mundy and Mr. Avent with his proxies, a total vote of 7, voted for Mr. Stafford, when he was declared elected secretary-treasurer of the club for one year.

Mr. Stafford resumed the chair and announced that "withdrawals" were in order. Prof. Osthaus asked to know what the announcement meant. The Chairman stated he had understood that several withdrawals from the club were to be made. Mr. Buckle supposed he meant resignations, and he presumed that if there were any they had been sent to the Secretary, as in regular order they should be.

The Chairman then announced that it was in order to request the Secretary-Treasurer to turn over his books, etc. Prof. Osthaus said it would be an insult to Mr. Madison to pass any such resolution; and then followed the announcement that Mr. Madison had stated, at time of his resignation, that he had dated it to take effect on the fifteenth to allow himself time to put them in order for delivery. No further action was taken.

The Chairman then requested that a vote of thanks be tendered Mr. Madison, and the following was adopted: It was moved by Prof. Osthaus, and seconded by Messrs. King, Buckle and Avent, that "a vote of thanks be extended by the club to Mr. Madison for the many services rendered since the organization of the club, and express the sincere regret of every member that Mr. Madison has withdrawn from the club;" carried.

Action was now taken to fill the vacancies in committees caused by Mr. Madison's resignation. Mr. Avent moved that Mr. H. Hulman Jr. be elected to fill the vacancy in the committee for the selection of judges; carried. Mr. Avent proposed Mr. Richard Merrill for the vacancy in the committee to select grounds for the prairie chicken trials; carried. Mr. King nominated Mr. Stafford to fill vacancy in committee to select grounds for A trials; carried.

The following persons were then proposed for election as members: Messrs. Frank B. Johnson, F. W. Dennison, J. J. Odurn and George Eubanks, all of Birmingham, Ala. The mode of election was then discussed, whether they should be voted on separately, or by ballot, or the secretary be instructed to cast one ballot for all. It having been intimated that black-balling could, or would, be indulged in, Prof. Osthaus promptly stated that he had no thought of such action and declined to vote. Mr Buckle being asked his position retorted by asking the chairman why the others present were not asked the same question; he then declined to vote, either for his proxies or himself. It was decided that balloting was the proper mode, when all the applications were voted on separately and elected.

Mr. Avent, as one of a committee to secure grounds at West Point, stated that the committee had secured all necessary grounds and that $75 was agreed upon as a fund to be paid to Dr. Crump for their protection.

Mr. Avent moved that Mr. Stafford be instructed to go to Indianapolis to confer with Mr. Madison and to accept the books, etc., of the club; carried.

It was then moved by Mr. Avent, seconded by Mr. King, that the Secretary be instructed to advertise the stakes of the prairie chicken trials and state that the club reserves the right to declare the stakes off after the entries are received if it seems advisable to do so; carried. The meeting then adjourned.

In an informal way the members of the board declared it was not their intention to refuse admittance to reporters the night before, stating it was unintentionally done, as they recognized the importance of the representatives of the press being present on such occasions.

ENGLISH SETTER TYPE

The English setters on the show benches in England are no more to the taste of Mr. George Lowe—and in all England there are few better judges of setter or foxhound—than the pointers are to Mr. Arkwright's. Judging from the attacks made by men who are both breeders and sportsmen upon the spaniels, setters and pointers of the English show bench, it certainly looks as though the fanciers and the sportsmen are traveling along gradually diverging paths, and the question naturally arising is "where will it end?" In Great Britain a different state of affairs exists to what there does here. Over there some country gentlemen who never think of showing a dog keep kennels of pointers and setters, and have been breeding them for years. Without attending shows or field trials they know what the type is and what is required of the dog afield, and knew it before a majority of the fin de siécle fanciers went into the dog show business. They will continue breeding on the same lines, and the fanciers will probably continue "progressing," so the question seems to be not whether they will be apart but how far apart at the end of another ten or fifteen years.

In a recent issue of the Sporting Life, an English cotemporary of which he is editor, Mr. Lowe writes:

"Setters and pointers were a little by themselves when the pioneers of dog shows took the matter up, as a lot of old family sorts existed that had been maintained so long as to have become distinct breeds.

"The pointers had been formed out of the old Spanish pointer and the foxhound by Mr. Edge, of Strelby, the Rev. J. Holdon, Lord Henry Bentinck, Lord Sefton, Lord Derby, Lord Lichfield, and Mr. Moor, of Appleby. These noblemen and gentlemen, who lived nearly a hundred years ago, were of the same mind about pointers, and by breeding to each other's kennels for thirty or forty years a perfect breed was established.

"Setters had, perhaps, not as many patron breeders, but still there were some good sorts about that were possibly a little older than the pointers. There were some beautiful setters twenty years ago that were bred by old Edward Laverack, the most perfectly shaped animals I have ever seen, and the field trials, then but a few years established, showed that they were better for nose, range, and style than setters bred by anyone else. It was apparent that old Laverack and his setters got a great reputation in a very short space of time, although he had been known to a few people like Mr. Lort and Mr. Statter for the best part of fifty years.

"Members of the Kennel Club were impressed with the old man's breed and bought his dogs, and it may be said that Laverack lived and died in the fullness of his reputation. He said that he had bred them himself for fifty years, and that he had them from a veteran, who had bred them for seventy years, or making up a record, part of it unwritten, certainly, of about 120 years. When Laverack died there was a great dispute, the merits of which I am not going to enter into, but the assertion was that Laverack had not taken the breed out of the Ark, and that he had made his improvements by crossing. Nothing might have been nearer the truth, for precisely the same could be said of thoroughbred horses, Bates' shorthorns and Webb's sheep. That they were better and looked more of a family were the main points.

"But the Kennel Club, in an evil hour for setter breeders, declared that Laveracks had no more breed in them than others, and henceforward breeders went on anyhow with what they were told to call English setters. In a long evening talk I had with old Laverack in 1873 he told me this would be the case, as no breed wanted more care, and no breed was more mixed with Gordon, sheepdog, spaniel or retriever than so-called setters outside his particular sort. He suggested that his own crossings had been with some old Northern breeds that he had some faith in, but always bred back into his own sort, which was always much inbred to counteract a cross. This is really no other theory than that of sheep breeding—the cross is never allowed to be more than one-seventh in comparison with the old blood of the flock. General crossing, though, is quite another thing, and, no matter what animal it is, a cross-bred on a cross-bred must produce a failure. It is so even in the lowest grade of animal—pigs.

"That there was something special in the Laverack setter was shown by the first crosses being so good. The lovely bitch Countess certainly threw very good stock to a dog not of her family; Phantom the same, ditto Nellie.

"I had not been at shows for two or three years until the other day when I judged setters at the Crystal Palace, and I was quite shocked at the change that had come over the scene. Instead of the beautiful animals I was charmed with years ago, when Old Blue Dash, Mr. Pilkington's Dash, Fletcher's Rock, Prince Royal, Countess, Phantom, Rum and Daisy occupied the setter benches, there were nondescripts related to the above, certainly, through various crossed generations, but possessing all sorts of other elements—heads like Clumber spaniels, bodies like retrievers, coats like terriers, sheepdog expressions, and of all sizes. I hear the same account is given of the Birmingham show, and so the setter must have fallen from his high estate, and old Laverack's words have come true. His sort should have been kept up, such as it was, in 1873, twenty-one [illegible] was not a question at all as to how he [illegible] said he had bred on principles of his [illegible] were forthcoming in strong evidence [illegible] at the shows and field trials.

"At a Crystal Palace show I can r[illegible] prize was taken by the old man's [illegible], his son, Mr. Pilkington's Dash, took the open prize; his daughter, Mr. Llewellin's Countess, took first in bitches; and, in fact, all the honors were taken by sons and daughters of old Blue Dash; and in several years at Birmingham it was the same. Fletcher's Rock, Mr. Llewellin's Prince Royal, Countess and Phantom swept the boards, and Rock's descendants were seen in the next generation, with a grandson of his, Sir Allister, coming after to make up quite an hereditary line. There were such sires as Tam O'Shanter, Lort's Jock, and Laverack's Blue Prince, and from these came good looking and good setters.

"That good judge, Mr. S. E. Shirley, gave me 100 guineas for Robbie Burns and Lad of Ayr, both by Tam O'Shanter out of different bitches, and three months afterward they were second and third in a large class at Birmingham; but where are their fellows at the present moment? I only know of two sportsmen who are thoroughly keeping up the breed—Mr. Thomas Pilkington, who got the blood early in the sixties from old Laverack's kennel, and bred Champions Rock and Dash; subsequently he tried crossing them for a few years, but, finding it an utter failure, went back to the originals again. Mr. Pilkington is a large moor owner, and now for some time past has shot over nothing but pure Laveracks. The other gentleman I allude to is Mr. J. C. Hartley, of Redworth Hall, County Durham, also a large moor owner, and he will have nothing but pure Laveracks on his place, and at the present time must have some beautiful teams. I know that neither of the above gentlemen are inclined to lend their blood for show purposes, for they do not show or run at field trials, maintaining their kennels simply for their own sport. Consequently it is now very difficult to find pure bred ones, and the downfall of the setter is entirely due to the Laverack, which was a source, being dropped, or exchanged, for the policy of breeding anyhow. Cross-bred Laveracks have been bred to cross-bred Laveracks, or with those without a particle of the blood in them, and so the influence of the sort has been getting weaker and weaker. The best maxim in breeding all animals is that one side, at least, should be absolutely pure by long established systems of inbreeding; and in the absence of such a policy the results must be obvious. I hear that precisely the same state of things is being deplored in America with regard to setters."

BREEDING ENGLISH SETTERS

Santa Cruz, Cal.

Editor American Field:—The articles from Mr. Bryson and Mr. Maclin are very interesting to breeders especially. It has been a study to find out how to produce by breeding as good as the parent stock. To get better was the first desire; but when, at the present, we have such superior ones as to defy the want of any better the only wish now is to hold it there. I claim you can only do it by inbreeding. That inbreeding has never harmed the produce of good stock can be seen so plainly that I wonder how anyone can be found who would deprecate it. The knowledge we gain by years of breeding would be sufficient in many cases to prove the cause of poor stock appearing, but that inbreeding of itself produces inferior animals cannot be proven by any examples when pure, healthy stock has been used.

There is as much variance in a litter of puppies as there is in a tree of fruit, and to suppose and breed on the belief that one of that litter is as good as another to breed from, because it is the same blood, is a fallacy and is the cause of the fault finding as to inbreeding. It is well enough to experiment when we have not what we want, but when we have it it seems to me a very dangerous experiment to introduce a foreign blood, even of its own kind outside of the immediate family. Why is it that wild animals hold ever to the original standard? Because nature has so ordained it that the strongest and most perfect controls and is supreme from generation to generation. And if we can discern in the domestic animals which we have in our charge a superior quality of intelligence, accompanied with and by a strong nervous combination of physical and mental matter, we have no further to look.

To use the common saying that such and such stock is "played out," is, to my mind, an acknowledgment that the good blood, once acknowledged as the best, has been weakened by not breeding the best to the best regardless of the closest inbreeding. In each litter so bred there are superior ones which will transmit and carry on the superior qualities, but if any think that each one of a litter should be equally ao good they will never see that result. Those who stand to-day as the most successful breeders are those who can afford to hold all the progeny of certain good sires and dams (particularly) until the age of a pair has arrived, when they dispose of good ones, but never of the best. It takes a long experience and an innate knowledge to discern the natural requisites, and they do not lie latent, as many suppose. I think Avent or Mr. Bryson will say he can choose his puppies for future prize winners when they have reached the age of four to five months, and often younger.

There may be such a thing as having perfection in all. Striving for it will not retard the result. But if we are to have a marked resemblance in appearance, as well as a superior mental and physical development, I claim it must be based on inbreeding with judgment.

A. C. Waddell.

Memphis, Tenn.

Editor American Field:—I have just read the short article written by "F. T." of Newburyport, Mass., in which he commented briefly upon one of Dr. [illegible]'s articles on English setter breeding, and among other things expressed the belief that English setters of the present day are equal, if not superior, to those of former days (some of us doubt that, but we will not stop now to discuss that question). F. T. says the cry that the English setters were playing out, by reason of too close inbreeding, was raised years ago, and that to test the matter the plan [illegible] or cross-bred setters, Grousedale, was selected to run against Lit, a pure-bred Llewellin, and that Lit's [illegible] settled that cry for a long time.

[illegible] closes his article by asking "if there is any- [illegible] his wonderful setter of different [illegible] Lit." Of course, I am not au- [illegible] question, but there is a dog in this vicinity [illegible] double cross of this same celebrated Grousedale, whose friends, I believe, would be willing to run him against any dog on earth. His owner is not a patron of field trials, and consequently little is known of him outside of his immediate neighborhood. He has been well and carefully trained by his owner, who certainly succeeded well, for some of the best judges of field trial dogs have seen him and with one accord pronounce him phenomenal. He comes from a family or strain of dogs owned and bred by one family of men; and out of seven started in field trials five of them were placed. The famous and unbeaten Wun Lung, I believe, was from this same family or strain. These dogs have been somewhat handicapped by this Grousedale outcross, although it seems to have been so potent for good, and they have not been bred to or from to any extent for the reason that few men cared to have anything but the straight bred Llewellins. This wonderful dog, for that is what he is called, is about three years old, of nice size, handsome as a picture, perfect setter type, has remarkable speed, range and endurance and a quick, snappy, stylish way of getting onto his game; and if Lit were alive now, and in her prime, I believe this fellow would be able to make rings around her with ease. He is pre-eminently robust in all of his characteristics and well calculated to transmit the name and fame of Grousedale to future generations.

I did not start out with the view of eulogizing this wonderful dog, but merely to remind F. T. that, notwithstanding Lit did beat Grousedale, his blood has been sufficiently esteemed to be preserved until the present day.

A FEW "POINTERS"

ST. LOUIS, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I derive great pleasure in the perusal of the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD, and the pleasure would be greater still were it not for the useless personal squabbles among the owners of certain dogs as to who has the best dog. Everyone ought to know that when a man has a good dog and that dog suits him he has the best dog in the country "living or dead," and that settles it; so what is the use of wasting time and valuable space that could be used for a better purpose than "chewing the rag?"

The fact that Topsy's Rod was twice defeated by Strideaway don't seem to sit well on the stomach of the gentleman from Hickory Valley. I would prescribe a seltzer and perfect quiet for a few days. I think he (Avent) gets into the money often enough at field trials to accept an occasional defeat in a gentlemanly manner. When his Antonio got the decision over Maid of Kent (and ninety-nine out of every hundred don't believe that he was entitled to it) the owner of Maid did not keep up the "rag chewing" process for the next twelve months. As to the insinuation that someone doped his dog, that is just a little too gauzy to wash under the circumstances. To show that he (Avent) is not averse to turning a trick in order to give his dog an unfair advantage I refer to the columns to the AMERICAN FIELD; when at the U. S. field trials (I believe it was) last Fall he had a bevy marked down and held his dog on slip with its nose pointing directly at them, as he supposed, with the wind in the dog's favor. But "the best laid plans of mice and men gang aft agley." Someone had "shoo'd" the birds.

I want to thank Mr. P. H. Bryson for his article on hunting to the gun, in a late issue. I think he hits the nail squarely on the head. What are field trials for if not for developing bird dogs? We do not want greyhounds; if we do we can buy them ready made.

It is often a source of surprise to the writer, when reading the account of field trials, to see that So and So's dog was not going nearly so fast after the first half hour or hour, as the case may have been. Now, I have a pointer bitch, which I purchased from Old Dominion (she is half sister to Mame S), that was never trained for a field trial, but if she can't or don't hunt as fast at the end of four hours, without any preparation, as she does at the start I will give her away; and I have refused a hundred for her (she is not for sale nor have I any puppies).

Another thing I don't like is the everlasting controversy about the July hounds; it has become monotonous, and still it is not settled and never will be. A year or so ago it was the Campbell setter, and who among your readers can tell, judging by the testimony, whether it was a red Irish, a white English or a red and white mongrel that the Campbell setter originated from? The only thing we do know is that they were dandy bird dogs.

Give your readers more pictures of good bird dogs and fewer of gun club officials, and I think they will be better appreciated. Everyone is interested in a good dog, while few, outside of a certain locality, care for the pictures of men unless they have a national reputation.

Agitate the prohibition of the sale of game entirely, and the market-hunters' occupation is gone, and true sportsmen will meet with better success when they get the opportunity to spend a day or two with dog and gun.

ASKING FOR JUSTICE

At the February meeting of the Pacific Kennel Club, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, The American Kennel Club was organized for the purpose of fostering the general interest in dogs throughout the United States, and

WHEREAS, A very large portion of the dogmen of the Pacific Coast are members (through their clubs) of said A. K. C. and are therefore interested in all of its acts and legislation [illegible]

[illegible] Kennel Club was led to join the [illegible] representation and belief that it [illegible] n, laboring for the best inter- [illegible] l kennel organizations of the [illegible] f location, and that the young [illegible] ve the same consideration and the same fostering care as was accorded to the strongest and most powerful, and

WHEREAS, The isolation of the Pacific Coast from other populous centers is such as to produce conditions which do not obtain elsewhere and cannot with justice be controlled in all respects by rules that may be just and advisable for other sections without seriously crippling its best interests, and

WHEREAS, Section 1 of Rule XV has in the past, does now, and will for many years to come work an injustice and a positive injury to this and other clubs on the coast, viz., by making it absolutely impossible for an exhibitor to advance his dog beyond that of a challenge class winner, the effect of which is to cool his enthusiasm. and by the realization of the evident injustice wrought by said rule, oftentimes cause him to lose his interest in shows and cease to patronize them. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Kennel Club be and it is hereby earnestly requested to so modify Section 1 of Rule XV, so far as it applies to shows held on the Pacific Coast and to dogs the bona fide property of residents thereof, that three firsts in the challenge class, one of which is won in a show of not less than 300 entries, shall entitle the winner to the title of champion.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the said American Kennel Club, requesting that it take immediate action thereon.

Similar resolutions have been adopted by all the kennel clubs on the Pacific Coast. The dog owners of the Pacific feel deeply the injustice to that section wrought by the 500-dogs and $500 rules, and they intend to leave nothing undone to influence the American Kennel Club to adopt some measure that will bring them relief. Had they communicated with the Western Kennel Club Company at Denver they would probably have found the Colorado fanciers ready and willing to join in the movement, for the latter, isolated as they are, are equal if not greater sufferers under the rules so strenuously objected to by the fanciers of the Pacific Coast.

NOTES

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of February 2 I read a note from the pen of Mr. Wm. Musson of this city, concerning a dog in his possession, and incidentally referring to a letter of mine appearing in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 12. Now this man Musson refers to me in most sarcastic and bitter language. He would fain have the readers of the greatest sportsmen's paper in America believe that I (T. W. S.) am some kind of a sneak hanging around his home trying to get possession of his dog. See Wm. Musson's letter. When Mr. Musson states I have been hanging around his house for some time I hurl this statement back into the teeth of the man who said it. It is intended to be misleading. I went to Mr. Musson's home twice, but I went like a man (not a sneak) and like a man rapped at his door and respectfully requested permission to see the dog. This was on a Sunday, at noon, when the family is supposed to be at home. The second time I examined him closely I was passing his home, though on the opposite side of the street. Mr. Musson's two sons, being outside, came over to the place where I stood, and the dog being with them I examined him closely. Is this what he is pleased to call hanging around his house? The fact is that more than a year ago Mr. Musson personally requested me to come to his house and look at a very fine dog he had and see what I thought of it; and at the same time he informed me he thought the dog had been stolen, though he did not think it possible to find out where it came from. Now I did not know either, but I proceeded to try and find out, which Mr. Wm. Musson should have done as soon as the dog came into his possession. I have never accused the gentleman referred to as being dishonest but have always referred to him in the most respectful language, and in my correspondence referred to him as being one of our most eminent citizens; but I do think he was, to say the least, careless in not trying to find the owner of a very valuable dog. I cannot help how much he and his family have become attached to the dog during the time they have had it in their possession. He should think of the sorrow of his rightful owner when he found his pet had been snatched from him, and of the anxiety of the children of that home who had fondled, played with and fed the dog from the time it was a little puppy. I have never requested or desired to get possession of the dog myself. The fact is when I became convinced I had found the dog's rightful owner I took the correspondence, which would prove who the owner of the dog is and my right to act in the case, and went to Mr. Musson's office, desiring to place the same before him and reason the matter with him, thinking if he was convinced of the facts in the case he could and would enter into correspondence with the dog's rightful owner and send the dog home; or if he did not wish to go to that trouble I would crate the dog and do that for him, and be the means of making one man and his family happy. Tell me, ye lovers of rod and gun, and the owners of the famous descendants of the once mighty Gladstone and Druid, is this not right, or is it low and unmanly? I am willing to leave my acts in this case to the judgment of lovers of man's best friend all over this fair land, and will abide by their verdict. Instead of this man looking at the letters in my possession and trying to find out the facts in the case, he flew into a towering rage like a big schoolboy. He utterly refused to look at or hear a word, and informed me I should never have anything to do with this dog. Finding he would not listen to reason I at once placed the case in the hands of the detectives, where it now is, and if Mr. Wm. Musson desires to do what is right in this affair he can get the owner's address from the chief of detectives of this city and can enter into such correspondence as he may think proper, and when he is convinced (which I think he will be) let him be fair about it, come off his mighty dignity, and send the dog back to its rightful owner. This gentleman has asked me what business I have sticking my nose into this affair. I will answer him briefly. It is my duty as an honorable man to find the owner of a lost dog (if I can) and return it to its owner. I am sorry to have to have taken up so much space in your valuable paper; but I felt in justice to myself I had it to do.

Des Moines, Ia. F. W. STOUTENBURGH.

IT has become such a common thing for the Westminster Kennel Club's list of entries to reach a new high-water mark each year that no one will be greatly surprised to learn that another record has been made. But, whereas last year's entries topped those of 1893 by only 29, this year shows an increase of 85 over last year's total, the figures for the three years being 1,492, 1,521 and 1,616. These figures, of course, include a large number of duplicate entries, but last year's catalog shows that 1,344 dogs were entered, and so it is safe to say that 1,400 dogs have been entered for the coming show. When such large lists of entries have to be handled it is often found subsequently that one or two corrections in totals have to be made, and should it prove to be so this year we will publish a revised list of entries in connection with the report of the show. At the time of going to press the latest revised figures are as follows:

Breed.	Entries.	Breed.	Entries.
Mastiffs	14	Boston terriers	31
St. Bernards	148	Basset hounds	4
Bloodhouuds	11	Dachshunde	46
Great Danes	29	Beagles	54
Newfoundlauds	7	Fox terriers	143
Borzois	22	Irish terriers	51
Deerhounds	3	Black and tan terriers	19
Greyhounds	40	White English terriers	9
Foxhounds	15	Dandie Dinmont terriers	11
Retrievers	2	Bedlington terriers	16
Chesapeakes	6	Scottish terriers	46
Pointers	111	Skye terriers	9
English setters	102	Yorkshire terriers	29
Irish setters	77	Toy terriers	2
Gordon setters	48	Pugs	8
Spaniels	123	Toy spaniels	39
Collies	91	Italian greyhounds	8
Old English sheepdogs	10	Schipperkes	7
Poodles	77	Miscellaneous	8
Bulldogs	60
Bull terriers	80	Total	1,616

The following shows the decreases and increases compared with last year's entries: Decreases—Mastiffs have dropped from 20 to 14; St. Bernards, from 174 to 148; borzois, from 30 to 22; deerhounds, from 18 to 3; greyhounds, from 42 to 40; foxhounds, from 21 to 15; retrievers, from 3 to 2; Chesapeakes, from 7 to 6; pointers, from 131 to 111; collies, from 114 to 91; Skye terriers, from 13 to 9; toys, from 12 to 2; pugs, from 22 to 8; Italian greyhounds, from 13 to 8; miscellaneous, from 27 to 8. Some of these decreases, such as in greyhounds and Chesapeakes, are merely nominal, but in deerhounds, toy terriers (other than Yorkshire) and pugs they are very severe; while mastiffs, borzois, foxhounds, Skyes and Italian greyhounds can only only boast just about two-thirds of last year's entries. The miscellaneous entries, too, are very few. On the other hand the breeds that show increases are these: Bloodhounds have gone up from 6 to 11; Great Danes, from 24 to 29; Newfoundlands, from 6 to 7; English setters, from 98 to 102; Irish setters, from 69 to 77; Gordon setters, from 44 to 48; spaniels, from 103 to 123; bobtails, from 3 to 10; poodles, from 57 to 77; bulldogs, from 55 to 60; bull terriers, from 52 to 80; Boston terriers, from 15 to 31; dachshunde, from 23 to 46 (just double); beagles, from 42 to 54; fox terriers, from 121 to 143; Irish terriers, from 43 to 51; black and tans, from 15 to 19; white English terriers, from 6 to 9; Dandie Dinmonts, from 5 to 11; Bedlingtons, from 7 to 16; Scottish, from 18 to 46 (excellent); Yorkshires, from 10 to 29 (excellent); toy spaniels, from 35 to 39; bassets, from 0 to 4. Here again some of the changes are inconsequential, such as in Great Danes, setters, Newfoundlands, bulldogs and toy spaniels; but terriers of all kinds show capital gains, and so do dachshunde and poodles, which must be very gratifying to the English judge, Mr. Jas. Taylor. We are glad to see such a sterling breed as bloodhounds showing a nice increase, but it is rather curious that not a single whippet has been entered for the $50 offered in prizes by the Westminster Kennel Club, especially as the little racers are supposed to be having something of a "boom" in the East.

I NOTICE an article in a New York cotemporary of yours, last week, suggesting to the bench show committees of two of our Western kennel clubs that they devote their attention to securing a special car to transport the Eastern dogs to their shows, and that they pay at least half of the expenses. Some months ago the AMERICAN FIELD suggested to exhibitors and handlers the advisability of taking action in this matter for their own benefit. But why should not the same suggestion apply to the Westminister Kennel Club, that they furnish a car and pay all the expenses of transporting western dogs to their show? Has it ever been done? Most of the western clubs are young compared to the eastern clubs, and we all know it is hard work for most—if any of them—to make "both ends meet," consequently why should they be called upon or expected to pay additional expenses? Why not suggest that every western club pay express charges on all dogs, railroad fare and hotel bills of all the exhibitors, handlers and attendants, in addition to liberal cash prizes? I think in this way many clubs would add to their entry. But how many shows would the clubs hold that displayed this generous policy? Would it tend to promote the kennel interest? If I wish to transport my horse or cattle to any horse or fat stock shows, or state or county fairs, do I expect any of these corporations to provide a special car and pay even half the freight or express charges, or has anyone ever suggested that if they did so they would have a much larger entry? The kennel interest is young and growing (?) in this country, and in my opinion should be encouraged by the sportsmen's papers in every way possible. This one-sided policy of your cotemporary does not in any way encourage a kennel club, and the fact that only a very few of the clubs are holding shows this year fully demonstrates that they have not met with the support they should have had. I notice most of the sportsmen's papers devote much of their space to kennel interests, consequently do they not in return receive much of their support from the same interest, and if the kennel interest is not encouraged and promoted will they not lose considerable of their income? I think the question to be considered is what can be done to promote the kennel interest of this country, for it certainly is not improving in point of dogs shows, and if such of the sporting press as referred to above continue to suggest that kennel clubs pay all expenses of transporting dogs we might as well give up, for we are just getting ready to hold a show here. The handlers indulge in considerable talk about the heavy express charges, etc., but what proportion of said charges do they pay? If I place my dog in charge of anyone to take him to any bench show, or on a circuit, am I not expected to pay all charges, entry fees, and also an additional charge to the handler for each show attended?

ENGLISH breeders of bull terriers have accepted the recent decision on cropping as final and came to an agreement at a meeting held during the Liverpool show, the week following the delivery of the judgment. The outcome is that the gentlemen present stated their intention to discontinue cropping, and invited Mr. Vero Shaw to draft a letter to the English Kennel Club, requesting that body to assist in putting a stop to the practice. The letter was signed by all the bull terrier breeders present, and has since been sent to others for their signatures. The White English Terrier Club, however, at a meeting held during the show, passed a resolution requesting the Kennel Club to place no prohibition or restriction on the cropping of terriers, but the question has aroused so much interest in England at the moment that the Kennel Club can hardly do otherwise than prohibit the showing of any dog, whelped after an agreed date, if cropped. The Umbria, which left Liverpool on February 2 had on board Messrs. J. Taylor and Sam and Sydney Woodiwiss, coming over for the New York show. Mr. Freeman Lloyd, who has recently recovered from a very serious illness, expected to follow by the North German Lloyd, which left Southampton Wednesday of last week. Mr. G. Raper, who has sent his dogs, hopes to be able to arrange matters so as to follow them in time for the show. The dogs entered by Messrs. Woodiwiss left London on February 2 and should reach New York about the end of this week. They are: Dachshunde, King Sol, Jane Austen, Wildgeon and Donna Belle; greyhounds, Chestnut Wonder and Real Jam; Shtoots, a schipperke; Sir Hector, and Sedgemere Piebald, rough and smooth collies; and Washington, a bobtail. Mr Raper's dogs are fox, Irish and Scottish terriers. A. C. Bradbury, who went over to attend the Liverpool show, is returning on the Civic with four greyhounds, two bobtails and two collies. Something of a novelty was witnessed at Liverpool show. After the collies had been judged by Mr. R. Tait the specials for this breed were awarded by Mr. C. H. Wheeler. This compound arrangement was due to the fact that some club specials offered could only be awarded by a club judge, and Mr. Tait is not one. It is pleasant to note that Mr. Wheeler fully endorsed Mr. Tait's awards.

LAST year, when the City of the Straits Kennel Club gave its second exhibition in the Auditorium in this city, the concession was freely made by those best competent to judge of the matter that, while there might have been, and, of course, had been, dog shows having a greater number of animals, there never had been a more meritorious one, a better arrangement for exhibitors and spectators, or more courteous and satisfactory handling of matters in general. The Auditorium is a spacious and commodious room without post or pillar, and capable of accommodating between six and seven thousand people; this clear floor space, with the great balconies on three sides, affords ample room and convenient arrangement for a great show, and it is confidently expected that the record of last year will be eclipsed when the time arrives for the third annual show to open on February 26. Last year Mr. Guy D. Welton was the efficient secretary of the club and his management of the show was generally commended. This year Mr. J. Wm. Garrison succeeds him, and it is not too much to say that the affairs of the club and of the dog show will be in admirable hands. Mr. Garrison has the executive ability, the perception and the suaviter in modo, fortiter in re, which are such admirable qualities to be found in the secretary's office. The premiums offered by the City of the Straits Kennel Club are liberal and well distributed in the various classes, which number one hundred and eight, somewhat less in number than last year. In addition various citizens of Detroit have offered specials for Michigan dogs, and our friends in Windsor have named several handsome prizes for Canadian dogs. The club is a strong organization, having for its avowed object the purpose of increasing the interest in sporting and non-sporting dogs, and of promoting and advancing their breeding.

Detroit. ASA SPADES.

ONE of the prettiest sights I have ever seen is the feeding of Gen. F. F. Myles' setters at his kenneis at Sunset Lodge, Lafayette, La. The yards are so built that there is a smaller yard which is entered by a gate from the large yard. All round this smaller yard is a platform six inches high and about ten inches wide, with holders for the dishes every five feet. At feeding time the kennelman goes to the gate of the outer yard and whistles. All the twenty dogs come to the gate and "charge," and when he opens it they form two and two in a regular unbroken procession in their right order. Each goes to its own place and "charges." The food is then brought out and a tin dish placed at each place. The dogs remain at "charge" till he whistles, then there is a sudden dash to their plates. No dog attempts to touch the food of another, and as soon as each has finished he (or she, as the case may be) "charges." A second whistle means "grab," and it is perfectly wonderful to see how all the other dogs know that Belle, Sue and May Gath are small eaters and how they run from all quarters to their plates. The General has a superb lot of dogs, and it is a great pity for the public's sake that he has retired from field trials. He has among others Enid (the dam of Wun Lung), Modoc (a field trial winner), and two ten-months old puppies that can discount any dogs I ever saw for finding birds. The dogs are all in good order and the kennel sweet and clean; and he has a treasure in Villéré, who, though a mere boy, will no doubt put some of his older competitors to the blush later on. I consider the sight of "feeding time" at Sunset Lodge would have amply repaid my trip south, even if I had not had such good sport as I have.

THE bench show committee of the Mascoutah Kennel Club wishes to be set right on the question of special prizes for local entries. The various Cook County mercantile firms offering these specials insisted on naming the conditions when they donated the prizes, and the bench show committee had the alternative of accepting the special prizes with the conditions or refusing altogether. They deny positively that they have offered specials with strings attached, as charged by a certain cotemporary, for the reasons above stated. The unjust charges as printed do not surprise us, it being a chronic condition of said cotemporary; but when the bench show committee of the Mascoutah or any other club can compel a donor of a special merchandise prize in Detroit, Chicago, New York or Boston to so word the conditions that it will be won, possibly, by a dog in some obscure hamlet, a thousand miles from either city, then the charge can be made that the club has a string tied to the prize if worded differently. If local entries are encouraged it will result, in the end, in a better show town and more money prizes.

ON my return from the South I find Mr. Mundy's interpretation of my expression so foreign to my thought and intent that I will explain briefly. We all know, and no one more keenly than our Southern people, that cotton at its present excessively cheap price cannot be raised at a profit, and that the price is ridiculous in its cheapness. I simply used the term five cent cotton as a figurative speech, expressive of what seemed to me the cheapness of a two-column challenge, provoked by a simple expression of opinion in a private letter—as a slur upon anyone it never entered my mind. I fail to see how anyone can put any other construction upon my wording. I have too many friends in the South, and my brother-in-law comes from one of the oldest families in South Carolina, to be guilty of the terms Mr. Mundy in his sensitiveness fancies. His charge of sectionalism in these days of state and personal amity is too absurd to consider.

A LETTER from Mr. Edward Booth, well known to scores of our readers, says: "Just a line to tell you that I am bringing out Duke of Lincoln, winner of fifty-four first and special prizes; he will be exhibited at the New York show. I consider him equal to any dog of to-day. I am also bringing Kingstonian Guide, by Champion Scottish Guide—Lady St. Gothard; he won first prize at Grimsby, and medal; also second at Darlington, besides others. The papers speak of him as a model St. Bernard, and he has a wonderful head; although as far as size goes he is somewhat small—a bigger dog than Lothario, though. He is entered in the novice class, and Duke in the open of course. I may also bring out another good dog (by Marvel), but have not yet completed the purchase. Duke of Lincoln beat Le Prince twice in England I shall arrive in New York about February 17."

MR. JOHN L. REUSS, an Englishman whose home is now in Redland, California, has just returned from a brief visit to the land of his birth and brought back with him on the Teutonic a brace of deerhounds, a light brindled dog and a red brindled bitch. The dog, named Earl Wolf, was whelped June 6, 1893, and is by Fingal II (Ch. Lord of the Isles—Hickman's Norna) out of Duchess of Brewood (Rossie Bede, late Gurth—Sheila IV); he was bred by a Mr. F. Hill. The bitch, Runa, was whelped April 12 of last year and is by Royal Doctor (Earl II—Blue Bell) out of Freda, by Ch. Strathmore (Odin—Brenda) out of Duchess II (Duke—Norna). There are a number of coyotes in the country where Mr. Reuss lives, and he expects to account for a good many of them when he has bred a pack of good deerhounds.

MR. E. W. JESTER desires information concerning the law which made dogs personal property and the subject of larceny in Pennsylvania. The law he refers to was Act No. 88 of the session of 1893, approved May 25, 1893, the seventh section of which says: "That all dogs in this commonwealth shall hereafter be personal property and the subject of larceny. . . ." The act is too lengthy to be given here in detail, but the portion quoted above is the exact phraseology of our law concerning personal property in dogs as it stands to-day in Pennsylvania. Any competent attorney in his city should be able to draft a proper bill in this matter.

ON February 11 a singular burglary was reported at the Fourth Precinct Police Station, Chicago. The burglars entered the house of Mr. James Brennan, No. 2926 Keeley Street, and after breaking open three doors to reach the room where the man slept carried away a white bull terrier dog weighing twenty-four pounds. As nothing else was taken, and the animal is a fighting dog, the owner is certain the burglarious entry was for the sole purpose of stealing his pet, which always slept in the room with him. Mr. Brennan had refused an offer of $100 for the dog recently. The animal has the letter "J" branded upon one of its hips.

REFERRING again to our handler's pr[illegible] which seems to be attracting quite a g[illegible] tion), we omitted to say in our [illegible] dogs owned in Denver and the [illegible] would not be allowed to compet[illegible] was our intention that only d[illegible] of this county should be enter[illegible] n, and this was done to assist handlers who had to come a distance at a large expense. We shall adhere strictly to our original intention, and no dogs owned here will be allowed to compete for this prize in any way.

INFORMATION concerning the doings of the Duquesne Kennel Club is not very plentiful, but word reaches us that the annual meeting was held January 31, when the following officers were elected: President, Mr. John Moorhead Jr.; vice-president, Mr. John Chapman; secretary-treasurer, W. E. Littell; directors, Thomas M. McKee, James O'H. Denny, W. M. Lorand, Dr. J. S. Phillips, William Arrott and H. M. Breckenridge. It is said the club will hold a dog show during the last week of March if a suitable building can be obtained, but as yet we have heard nothing from the secretary to confirm this.

WE are informed there are good prospects for the dog show being held at Atlanta during the International Exposition which opens September 18. President and Director-General Chas. A. Collier is quoted as authority for the statement that the building committee is hard at work designing a building that will accommodate pet stock exhibitions week after week. Hundreds of letters have already been received by the management asking that a dog show be given, and it is tolerably certain that one will be held. The date will most probably be during the first half of October.

THE Ephesians shouted great was Diana, but I will shout first last and always great is the AMERICAN FIELD as an advertising medium. I put an advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD and I received letters from New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maryland, Virginia, New York, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Kentucky, Minnesota, Ohio and Colorado—twelve states—and if these states don't show the extent of the circulation of the AMERICAN FIELD I don't know what does. All my grown dogs are sold. It does pay to advertise in the AMERICAN FIELD. Long may it live.

THE Southern Field Trial Club has decided to again open pointer stakes. The experience of this club with such stakes is said to have cost over one thousand dollars at previous trials, but in deference to the wishes of some of its patrons it has reopened Pointer Derby and All-Age Stakes. It is thought that an increasing interest in the breed will result in the club being able to offer larger stakes annually; of course the continuance of them will depend on the support they receive from the pointer men.

IN Lake View, a suburb of Chicago, a mysterious gang of dog poisoners has been depriving owners of their valued and in some instances valuable canine friends recently. On Evanston Avenue Messrs. Fleming and Johannason and Miss Brown all have suffered loss lately, and such indignation has been aroused that a close watch is now kept upon all dogs valued by their owners. If anyone should be detected in the mean act of poisoning a dog that person need expect no leniency.

THE Mascoutah Kennel Club has offered the following additional prizes: For the best exhibit of four bulldogs entered and owned by one exhibitor, $10; for the best bull terrier dog in open class over thirty pounds, $10. The attention of intending exhibitors is again called to the date for the closing of entries, Saturday, February 16. As the prizes and classifications are very liberal a large entry list should be the result.

THE votes for officers and delegates of associate members of the American Kennel Club were opened on February 6 and resulted in the election of the following for the ensuing year: President, H. B. Cromwell; vice-president, Edward Banks; secretary, A. C. Wilmerding; delegates, Dr. H. T. Foote, H. H. Hunnewell Jr. and A. C. Wilmerding.

WE are sorry to learn that Mr. E. G. Stults, of New Brunswick, N. J., has lost a favorite beagle dog named Buff. The beagle had the distemper and seemed to have recovered, but chorea developed later, from which he died.

No American painter excelled or even equaled him in depicting animated sporting sketches, or in faithful pictures of dogs, horses and other animals. Prints of Mr. Tracy's pictures are very plentiful, but the coming sale is the largest collection of his original works ever shown together. About 150 of his best and most characteristic paintings will be on exhibition from Monday, February 18, until Thursday, February 21, at J. B. Norman's auction rooms, 238 Fifth Avenue, New York, and the sale will take place on the eveniugs of Wednesday and Thursday, February 20 and 21.

HIS LAST COYOTE

PUEBLO, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Friday, February 8, I saddled my horse and taking my greyhounds Punch, Brownie, Speed, Sail and Rowdy, started for Senator Teller's pasture, eight miles west of this city, with the expectation of having a chase or two after the frisky hare, coyotes, or possibly a gray wolf, several of the latter having been seen in the pasture lately by the ranchmen living in that vicinity. I had not seen any game to chase, and was returning home at about 4:30 p. m., on the way passing the large reservoir in the pasture, to the north of which is a small "draw" in the prairie well filled with high grass. I started to go up it, hoping to jump a hare and see a chase before returning home, and had only proceeded a short distance when to my surprise out jumped a large coyote and started across the open pasture. Calling my dogs, I ran my horse up on the high ground, so they could sight him. Punch's quick eye at once caught sight of him and was after him like the wind, the coyote having about one hundred and fifty yards start. Putting the whip on my horse, I was quickly following, the other dogs being strung out between me and the leader (Punch). The coyote had not gone more than three hundred yards before Punch was onto him, and seeing that he was sure to be caught he turned in a short circle to the left. Punch, coming around with a great burst of speed, caught him and threw him. The other dogs were about fifty yards behind, and I about one hundred yards away. What was my surprise to see the coyote get up and start away across the prairie, considerably dazed by his fall but going pretty fast. Punch did not get up and lay quite still. I thought he was probably stunned by the fall he received in throwing the coyote. The other dogs had closed in around the coyote, snapping at him as he ran, but never having caught a coyote and missing their leader they would not take hold. When I got to where Punch lay I jumped off my horse and ran to him, knowing he must be pretty badly hurt. I noticed that his mouth and eyes seemed full of dirt, as though he had struck on his head, but I immediately began working with him, thinking him only stunned, and it did not dawn on me for several seconds that the dog was really dead. From the time he threw the coyote until I reached him could not have been over seven seconds, yet I believe the dog was dead when I reached him, for the only effort he seemed to make after I reached him was a slight movement of the head. He had undoubtedly broken his neck in falling.

The other dogs had returned from the chase in the meantime, and I do not know what became of the coyote. The accident not only spoiled my day's sport, but for many others, as he was my fleetest and favorite dog, having been my companion in many a happy day's sport. He was a beautiful greyhound, fawn and white, was afraid of nothing, having killed a coyote a short time ago single handed. He was one of the best field dogs I have ever owned, and I have never seen the dog that could lead him at the finish of a course. Mr. Hayman, of your paper, and others will probably remember his course with Rear Admiral at the Altcar Club's meet at Goodland, Kan., last February. He was from the St. Patrick Kennels, Denver, was four years old, and by St. Patrick—Ticket. I have two puppies by him out of Judy, of which I have great expectations. I buried him a short distance from where he fell, but no doubt a sense of sadness will steal over me when, in my future hunting trips, I miss his graceful form from the lead of the pack.

FRANK A. WITHERS.

NOTES

A RUMOR reaches us to the effect that a new coursing association is being organized to take the place of the corporation, or whatever it is, that for the past year has been dragging along in St. Louis. It is said that forty members have agreed to contribute $10 per annum, so as to enable them to hold meetings for pastime, caring nothing for gate receipts. If some such plan as this is carried out, the park enlarged and improved, and objectionable characters not admitted to membership, there is no reason why some fairly good sport should not be had; and with the gate money feature in abeyance there would be less likelihood of meetings being held every Saturday, a practice that quickly ruins good greyhounds when the same dogs are run week after week. There is now some good blood owned in St. Louis, and in course of time the city should contain a lot of well-bred youngsters; occasional puppy and sapling stakes would afford them opportunities to show their quality, they would not get severe trials, and if not run too frequently would be none the worse. A club well officered and conducted in a proper manner (not necessarily in extravagant style) and for sport's sake would do a good deal to popularize coursing in St. Louis and should attract a desirable class of people to the sport. We understand the new club anticipates holding a meeting about the end of March, when special attention will be paid to sapling stakes.

A PLEASANT letter from Mr. John Grace contains the information that he has taken a nomination for the first American Waterloo Cup, which we are very glad to hear, but unfortunately he is not likely to attend the meeting. He intimates that Mr. Martin Kerrigan may make the journey—and a very long one it is—with a small string of greyhounds, and is already laying his plans with that object in view. Mr. Kerrigan and the California greyhounds will be heartily welcomed, of that we feel certain, and likely enough they will be very formidable competitors for the honors that are to be won and lost on the Dakota prairie next October. Mr. Grace says that Mr. Kerrigan's new coursing park, which is to be opened on the seventeenth of this month, is the best he has ever seen, and that coursing is going to be booming in California this year.

THE Dixie Coursing Club will have a meeting on February 22 at Kane Island, Tex., which is on the line of the "Katy" railway. The program offers three events, viz., the Members' Cup, for all-age greyhounds owned by members, at $1 each; the owner of the winner to receive and hold for one year a silver cup valued at $100. Puppy Stakes, open to all puppies, at $5 each; winner to receive two-thirds of the stakes, runner-up to receive one-third, ten per cent. deducted for expenses. Open Stakes, open to greyhounds of all ages at $5 each; winner to receive two-thirds of the stakes, runner-up one-third, ten per cent. deducted for expenses. Mr. Harold Elderkin will judge, and Mr. J. H. Nason, the club's secretary, will slip; entries must be in the hands of the latter by February 20. We hope they will enjoy good weather and good sport.

WORK on the stud book is progressing surely, if slowly, thanks to Mr. Williams' efforts. Three weeks ago Mr. Williams wrote for addresses of club secretaries, whom he wished to press into service; we gladly furnished him the addresses of a dozen or more secretaries, and he now writes that only two have responded. This is not giving the keeper of the stud book the support he deserves, and we would urge all secretaries to assist him in any manner possible. It is usually uphill work to start a new thing, and Mr. Williams finds the publication of the first volune of the stud book no exception to the general rule, but it is a matter of such importance to coursing that everything should be done to facilitate his work.

THERE is some time yet before the closing of entries (March 1) for the Altcar Produce Stakes, and of course it is altogether too early to hazard a guess at what the total will be, but twenty entries had been made by Friday of last week, and that sounds very promising. There is always an inclination to hold off until the last minute, and a large majority of entries are always made the last day or two, therefore we think twenty a very good number to have been received by the secretary at the date mentioned, and it ought to satisfy any doubting Thomases that the total entry will be large and the stakes correspondingly valuable.

MR. VIDLER this week reports some sales of young greyhounds and deerhounds, and writes: "Both Dr. Moore, of Tribune, Kan., and Mr. J. A. Perrott, of Helper, Utah, will be additions to our coursing ranks next Fall. Mr. Perrott's dogs will be shipped to Huron, S. D., right away."

WE are asked to announce that Mr. W. Stephenson, of Traer, Ia., and Mr. W. Angell, of Oakes, N. D., will be intrusted with the judging and slipping for the North Dakota Club's meeting in April. Both are new comers in the field.

THE Los Angeles Coursing Club will hold a meeting on February 22—a good way to honor the memory of the father of his country, who would most assuredly have been a good courser had the opportunity presented itself.

MR. A. P. SLOCUM has had the misfortune to lose, from distemper, all but one of a litter by imp. Jim o' the Hill—Roy's Canary.

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. J. H. Alexander, Haughville, Ind.

RIFLES

SALEM, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Mr. J. Campbell, of Norway, Ont., seems to be having some trouble with his

Winchester .40-110-260 express. The trouble seems to be from excessive fouling. This will always occur—in guns using express charges—under the following conditions:

First, from allowing the bore to become rusted, although the coating of rust may be very light and seemingly of no importance. Second, from using an inferior grade of powder, or powder that has been exposed to the air for a long time. Third, from using improperly lubricated bullets. Fourth, in making a long string of shots in a very hot, dry atmosphere, or a very cold atmosphere containing little or no moisture. Some one of the above causes nearly always leads to the complaint of excessive fouling. Mr. Campbell may rest assured that the trouble was not caused by improperly beveled lands or defective rifling, for he may place entire confidence in the Winchester company giving the best form of rifling, either for cannelured or patched balls.

The target made by Mr. Campbell at 200 yards with relubricated bullets is very fine indeed, viz.: five shots without cleaning in a 6¾x3 inch space. I call that very fine shooting with the bullet and charge of powder he used. That his shooting at 200 yards could have been improved by using a solid ball is evident to all who have given the flight of express balls at that distance any considerable study.

Mr. Campbell has made a very grave mistake in his effort to get the trajectory of his rifle at 150 yards. The attempt to get the trajectory of any ball in this way is not only misleading to the one who is doing the shooting but to others who are not familiar with the flight of balls. The actual trajectory of the .40-110-260 at 100 yards is 2.07 inches; at 200 yards 8.95 inches, with factory shells. This can be improved a little by using Curtiss & Harvey's No. 6 powder. The factory shells give a muzzle velocity of 1,555 feet, and the powder used in loading them, I believe, gives a pressure of about 32,000 pounds. Curtiss & Harvey's powder is supposed to give a pressure of about 40,000 pounds, and would no doubt bring the muzzle velocity up to about 1,800 feet and give a somewhat lower trajectory. The smokeless rifle powder gives a very high speed of ball, but, after experimenting with it more or less for the past two years, I am still unable to get good work from it in anything as large as a .40-caliber; and I am led to believe that the cartridge companies have had a like experience, for I notice that the Winchester company are only loading it in the small calibers. This powder would make the .50-110-300 Winchester a perfect rifle for big game could the powder be obtained that was both safe and reliable. Nitro powders seem to be about perfect for use in shotguns, and I see no reason why the powder manufacturers cannot produce a reliable rifle powder as well.

Like Mr. Campbell, I would like to see the rifle department of the AMERICAN FIELD receive more attention from the votaries of the sporting rifle. Surely, "P," Vandike, "Boone," and others, have not all gone to the "happy hunting grounds." To these men, in a measure, we are indebted for the almost perfect sporting rifle of to-day; still there are many points yet that these old veterans could throw light upon. To me it seems that articles from these men are as letters from a personal friend, for they have all done much for me in bridging over the bog of despondency in rifle matters.

J. B. BROKAW.

NOTES

CAPT. WM. P. SCHAAF, of the Missouri Rifle and Pistol Club of St. Louis, Mo., has a movement on foot, it is said, to make St. Louis the headquarters of the rifle and pistol clubs of the West by forming a western association of riflemen. The plan, as suggested, is to have a big tournament in St. Louis next May, open to all clubs in the Mississippi Valley and the West, and at the close of the tournament to have a meeting of the sportsmen present and organize the association, the organization to embrace all sharpshooters, rifle and pistol clubs.

A RIFLE match has been made between Mr. M. Braun and Mr. Ph. Wagner, both members of the North Shore Rifle Club of Chicago, to be shot at the above club's range No. 1274 North Halsted street, on the evening of February 21 and 28. Each man is to fire 150 shots, off hand, on the German ring target, 25 yards distance.

CLEVELAND, O.—Scores as given below were made by members of the Cleveland Rifle Club, at a recent contest, Knenzer winning the club badge: Munz 87, Richter 82, Berchtold 85, Miller 92, Reich 74, Gaiser 88, Jones 81, Seelbach 81, Weber 83, Bender 76, Knenzer 93.

RIFLEMAN.

THE Winchester Repeating Arms Company shipped last week to China, via London, 1,500,000 rounds of 43-caliber Manser rifle ammunition, which is the third shipment to China the Winchester company has made since the war between China and Japan commenced.

A NEW rifle club was recently organized at Manchester, N. H., and the following gentlemen elected officers for the ensuing year: President, Dr. D. S. Adams; first vice-president, Miron W. Hazeltine; second vice-president, Edward I. Partridge; secretary, F. W. Smith; treasurer, D. H. Dustin.

A RIFLE club has been organized at Warren, O., by ten sharpshooters.

CINCINNATI, O.—The following scores were made by members of the Cincinnati Rifle Association on February 10. Conditions: 200 yards off hand at the Standard target. Weather cold and clear and a white blanket of snow covered the ground, making a blinding glare which annoyed the shooters considerably. The event of the day was the shooting of a match between twelve members of this association and twelve members of the St. Louis Rifle and Pistol Club, the result of which will be made known next week.

OPPOSED TO HANDICAPPING THE EXPERTS

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In every issue, almost, of the AMERICAN FIELD and the other sportsmen's papers published in this country appear articles on the question of handicapping agents of gun companies, sporting goods dealers, etc., who shoot at tournaments, and, indeed, some of the writers go so far as to suggest that these men should not be allowed to participate in the several tournaments held throughout the country.

I take it that the gentlemen who enter these protests have never stopped to think of the days, months, and even years, together with the untold amount of cash these so-called "experts" have spent in practice and at tournaments, learning to get their eye on the flying Blue Rock at the right time and place. I venture the assertion that Messrs. Heikes, Elliott, Parmelee, Grimm, Budd, Brewer, Carver, McMurchy, Du Bray, Fulford, Morfey, Money, Wagner, Van Dyke, and dozens of others that I could mention, have spent more dollars learning to shoot the "gait" they do, than any two out of three of the gentlemen who have so vigorously entered their protests, and who are now kicking so hard. I want to ask every gun club management of the country that gives a tournament like the Knoxville, Memphis, Cleveland, Chicago and New Jersey shoots what they would think if they should wake up on the morning of the first day of their tournament and find Heikes, Brewer, Van Dyke, North, Du Bray, Elliott, Grimm, Budd, McMurchy, Hobart, Wagner, Carver, Fulford, Keller, Skinner, Young, Bingham, Bennett, Money, Miller and many more as clever, jovial, jolly good fellows as they are conspicuous by their absence? For one, I should feel like I was attending a funeral instead of a first class tournament. The very men who are now so hotly protested against because they happen to represent the several sporting goods companies of the country are the very gentlemen who are to a large degree responsible for all the magnificent shoots throughout the country. Take the Knoxville club: S. B. Dow as president, T. C. Eldridge as vice-president, J. C. White as treasurer, and our own Rogers Van Gilder, secretary. All these men are among the very best citizens of the town. Then take the Memphis Gun Club. Where will you find better citizens in that town than Tom De Vine, president; Bennett, Poston, Neely and others? And at Chattanooga, where Du Bray and Paul North get in their work; where will you find in these United States better people than ex-Congressman Bates, Pritchard, Woodruff and others? Better people do not live than they.

Why not handicap a business house that has been in business for years, and has spent thousands of dollars building churches, school houses, charitable institutions, and advertising its business? I say why not handicap them, so as to let the under dog who is complaining against them have a chance. The same argument is good in every line of business, from the hawker and pedler on the street corner, to the largest wholesale dealer in the land.

The Knoxville Gun Club invites every man who ever shot at a target to send in his ten dollars by March 1 to R. Van Gilder, secretary, and to come to our shoot in May, when three thousand dollars will be added (we now have eighty-seven on the list), and attend "the" shoot of the age, where everybody and everyone that attends will be cordially received, courteously treated, and more than welcome. We want every man who knows how to shout "pull!" to attend our shoot.

JNO W. CONNER.

THE MANSON GUN CLUB

MANSON, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The Manson Gun Club of Manson, Ia., was organized five years ago, and among the many clubs of this state it ranks with the foremost. It was the first club organized in Calhoun County since the days of glass ball shooting, but since the Manson boys came to the front three other clubs have organized in this county, to say nothing of clubs that have organized in adjoining counties. The Manson club holds weekly shoots at Blue Rock targets, except during the severe weather of Winter.

The club members, while few in number, are the right kind of sportsmen, and the club can boast of having several of the best shots in the West. At the state shoot at Independence, last year, D. R. Clark, of the Manson club, broke 20 targets straight for the state cup. Shooting off the tie he broke 19, and Hageman of Independence 19, the other two with clean scores dropping out. In the second shoot off Mr. Clark scored 17 and Mr. Hageman 18. Mr. Clark shoots a lightweight Parker gun and is going to make all of them hustle the coming season.

Mr. H. A. Kline is the best live bird shot in the club, and on several occasions has succeeded in making a score of 25 straight. He shot a match last April, at the club's fourth annual tournament, with John Georgson, who then held the badge representing the championship of the state. The match resulted in a tie. The tie was shot off and the contestants tied again, when, the birds being all used up, the match was declared a draw. Mr. Kline uses a Spencer repeater in all his matches and handles it with ease on double targets and live birds where quick work is required.

Mr. W. J. Foley is also a fine live bird shot, and a terror on targets. In fact it is hard to find a poor shot in the club.

Manson is favorably located for lovers of the gun. Quails, prairie chickens, jacksnipes and wildfowl are abundant in season in this vicinity, and good bags can be made almost any day.

The Manson Gun Club will hold its fifth annual shooting tournament on May 1 and 2, 1895. The tournament is open to the world; nobody barred. The club uses Blue Rock expert traps and targets, and King's patent live bird traps. The club's shooting grounds are only three blocks from the hotel. A good line of special prizes will be awarded and arrangements will be made with the Illinois Central Railroad for a reduced rate, the same as last year. The programs will be ready for distribution early in March.

SAYS HIS CLUB IS NOT TO BLAME

HAMILTON, CAN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I notice in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 2 in a correspondence from Rochester, N. Y., that Capt. Brewer feels rather sore about the way he was treated when in Hamilton. Now I wish to state that the match which Capt. Brewer participated in with Mr. Cockburn, of Toronto, was made between those gentlemen, and entirely apart from the Hamilton Gun Club's tournament, and although it was shot on the grounds of the Hamilton Gun Club it had nothing to do with the club in any way. From the remarks made by this Rochester gentleman it would seem that Capt. Brewer had some ill feeling against our club. While I did not see the match made, I saw it shot, and I think the matter rests entirely between Capt. Brewer and Mr. Cockburn. They were shooting under old Dominion rules and both gentlemen should have made themselves acquainted with those rules before the match was shot. If Capt. Brewer wishes to vent any ill feeling I think it would be much better if he would direct such towa[illegible] and his friends, as this, it seems to me, is the proper [illegible]

I wish it distinctly understood that the matches [illegible] on that day were not under the auspices of the Ham[illegible] Although they were shot on the club's grounds, they [illegible] matches between the gentlemen who participated in the [illegible] club should not be blamed for any irregularity or misunde[illegible]

NOTES

MR. ED. HALLADAY, of Battle Creek, Mich., asks in, the AMERICAN FIELD of January 26, an explanation from the Lansing Rod and Gun Club for not seuding a cup off red by our club at the time of the contest for the state championship trophy, on August 24, 1894. Circumstances beyond our control left us, as the boys say, "in the hole" They were these: First, we had hacks at the depot to transfer the Battle Creek boys to our shooting grounds, a mile or more distant. This was at our expense. Second, we were charging three cents each for targets, the usual and customary price. The Battle Creek boys made a vigorous kick to our secretary at the price and we were compelled to reduce the price to two cents each. Third, they shot at 250 targets in the team race and did not pay for, or offer to pay for the same. The Lansing Rod and Gun Club did pay for them, however. Our club has not had a meeting or shot at any targets since that time. The writer hereof paid all bills but that of getting this cup, and, in speaking to some members of the club about the cup for Mr. Halladay, I was requested to write the Battle Creek Club for pay for the 250 targets, which at their price would amount to five dollars, and to get the cup and send it. Being a timid man and a poor collector, I neglected to do so. I now inclose to the AMERICAN FIELD my personal check for $2.50, the price the cup was to have cost, which the editor will please deliver to Mr. Halladay on request. I am sorry to be compelled to make this explanation in a sportsman's journal, and, while it is, perhaps, a poor one, it is all I have to offer. I would not detract one iota from the shooting ability of Mr. Halladay; however, no one saw him make a clean score but Battle Creek gentlemen. The referee, spectators and others must have been blinded just at the moment of firing.

Lansing, Mich. JASON E. NICHOLS Secy.

THE effects of the recent snowstorm and blizzard did not prevent a goodly crowd of pigeon shots from journeying out to Larchmont, on February 9, to take part in a contest for a special cup offered by "J. K. Palmer," the winner of the recent amateur championship. The conditions were at 25 birds with an optional entrance fee of $25 or $12.50, with handicap allowances as follows: Twenty-eight yard men, one miss as no bird; twenty-seven yard men, two misses as no birds; twenty-six yard men, three misses as no birds. After an exciting contest lasting three hours, Fred G. Moore, J. Seaver Page, and Mr Knox tied, each killing 23 ont of their 25 birds. On the shoot off Mr. Moore won, Mr. Knox was second, J. Scaver Page wss third, and Mr. Hopkins fourth. In view of the stroug wind and the blinding effect of the snow on the shooters' eyes the scores were remarkably good. In addition to the cup offered by "Mr. Palmer," Mr. Moore. after the club had deducted the usual 10 per cent. of the entrance fee, took 40 per cent. of the money, Mr. Knox received 30 per cent., and J. Seaver Page 20 per cent.

THERE is talk of the shooting contingent of the New York Athletic Club forming a guu club. The athletic club has an excelleut snooting resort at Traver's Island where contests between members of the club could be indulged in and he greatly enjoyed. Among the better shots of the athletic club are the following well-known gentlemen: F. W. Lawton, Fred M. Hausling, Otto Sarony, A. E. Colfax, A. Schmidt, J. Howard Gray, J. D. Foot, L. Loomis, Dr. S. M. Nash, J. H. Abeel Jr., H. A. Manderville, Robert Lefferts, W. G. Brokaw. Arthur T. Sullivau, Dr. G. Van Schaick, Douglas Smyth, A. L. Clark, W. H. Pinckuey, R. C. Fisher, O. Van Cortlaudt, J. Cattus, F. Cattus, G. M. Meyer, George Moore Smith, D. Miller, J. B. Sheriff, L. L Lawton, J. Brisbane and D. I. Bradley.

THE program of the Forester Gun Club's fourteenth annual Winter tournament, to be held at Davenport, Ia., on February 20, 21 and 22, is to hand and in its make up sustains the reputatiou of that club for giving first-class shoots. The events are divided between live birds and inanimate targets and are so arranged as to continue the interest until the last gun is fired. No one is barred and any contestant in a tie may draw his pro rata of the purse, but dropping for place will not be tolerated by the management. The target shooting will be from known traps, unknowu angles, and the live birds will be shot from five unknown ground traps. Lunch will be served in the club house on the grounds. Revised American Shooting Association rules will govern all program events.

ON the third day of the Forester Gun Club's fourteenth annual Winter tourname nt (February 22) at Davenport, Ia., Dr. W. F. Carver and Mr. C. W. Budd, of Des Moines, Ia., will shoot the last match of their series of three matches at 100 live birds for $100 a side each match The first two matches of the series were shot at Des Moines, Ia, Dr. Carver winuing one and Mr. Budd one, and this match is to determine which shall have the honor of winning the deciding race. The grouuds of the Forester Club are especially good for trap shooting, and as the club always has good birds when a big race is on, a shooting match worth looking at is sure to be witnessed by all present.

ASSISTED by the interstate Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association, the Valley City Gun Club of Grand Rapids, Mich., will hold a tournament on May 30 and 31. A letter from Mr. C. F. Rood, secretary of the club, says that it is the intentiou of his club to make this tournament the biggest little shoot held in the West this year and that the club will be pleased to welcome to the "Furniture City" of Michigan on May 30 and 31 trap shooters from all sections of the country.

THE 100-bird match for $100 a side, which was shot between T. W. Morfey, of Paterson, and Frank Class, of Morristown, on the Morristowu Driving Park grounds on Thursday last, resulted in a victory for Class. Each shot at 100 selected live birds at 30 yards rise, with a 50 yard boundary. There was a blinding snowstorm and heavy winds dur ng the entire match, but neither man seemed to mind the weather, and both shot in good form. Class killed 95 and Morfey 90.

MR. AL STOUT AND D. WILSON on the one side and Huber and White on the other side have arranged a live bird match to take place on February 19, for $500 a side, 20 birds a man, Hurlingham rules. In case of a tie they are to shoot at 5 birds each to decide. Our boys are full of snap and take great interest in their trap work, and I will soon present the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD with a score that will stand for a record breaker

Wilmington, Del. C. M. P.

THE Rochester (Pa.) Gun and Field Club will hold an all-day shoot on the club's grounds on February 16. Fifteen events, all at inanimate targets, are scheduled for the day, and on the program is printed the following resolutiou which was adopted by the club on January 8: "Any shooter that willfully drops a bird for place shall forfeit all his interest in the purse, and will be debarred from shooting on the club's grounds hereafter."

It is r[illegible] Elliott, of Kansas City, Mo., now [illegible] of Utica, N. Y., have arranged [illegible] 100 birds per man, for $100 a side [illegible] er on the result of the three [illegible] t on Al. Heritage's grounds at [illegible] n 21.

THE Leavenworth (Kan.) Gun Club, whose team recently won the state championship cup, has accepted a challenge from the Metropolitan Gun Club of Kansas City, Kan., for a race for the trophy, and the mateh will be shot on February 22. The Leavenworth club thinks its team abie to defeat a team from any other club in the state.

MR. R. S. WADNELL, of Cincinnati, O., general agent for the Central states for the sale of E. I. Du Pont, De Nemours & Co.'s gunpowder and loaded shotgun cartridges, writes us claiming May 7, 8, 9 and 10, 1895, as the dates for the Du Pont tournament at Cincinnati, and also saying that liberal cash prizes will be added to the purses.

THE Interstate Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association has made arrangements for holding a tournament at Wilmington, N. C., ou May 9 and 10, under the auspices of the Eastern Dog and Game Protective Association.

ELMER E. SUANER,
Pittsburg, Pa. Manager I. M. and D. A.

A DISPATCH from Elkhart, Ill., says that the report that the old veteran trap shot, Capt. A. H. Bogardus, died in Austell, Ga., ou February 4, is untrue, as he was in Elkhart on the day that he is reported to have died in Austell, in the best of health for one of his years; and further, that he has not been South this Winter.

THE Elizabeth Gun Club will hold an all-day tournament upon its grounds at Elizabeth, N. J., ou May 2. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the New Jersey Trap Shooters' League will decide its month y contest, which should be an event full of interest uot only to members of the league but also to all other sportsmen present.

AS will be seen by reference to the announcement in the fixtures, and also by a communication from Secretary Shallcross, published elsewhere, the Pennsylvania State Sportsmen's Association has changed the dates for its touruament from October to August 20, 21, 22 and 23.

IN the race at Omaha, Neb., on February 8, between Frank Nicolai, of Sutton, Neb, and "Plummer" Read, of Omaha, 100 birds per man, 30 yards rise, 50 yards boundary, for $100 a side, Mr. Nicolai scored 81 and Mr. Read 77, the former winning the match by four birds.

THE West End Gun Club of this city is in excellent shape financially and with a steadily increasing membership the prospects are that lots of powder will be burned by its members during the present season.

Ottumwa, Ia. F. J. SCOTT, Secy.

THE White Plains (N. Y.) Gun Club will have an all-day shoot at its grounds on February 22—Washington's Birthday. Business will commence at 9 o'clock in the morning and continue as long as there is a squad to shoot, or until darkness puts a stop to the sport.

THE Parkersburg Gun Club of Parkersburg, O., is arranging for a big live bird shoot on Washington's Birthday, February 22. An invitatiou has been extended to all of the expert trap shots of the Ohio Valley to be present and take part in the day's sport.

SPORTSMEN in the vicinity of either Maplewood or Elizabeth, N. J., should bear in mind that the Maplewood Gun Club will have an all-day shoot on February 22, and that the Elizabeth Gun Club will have a two days' touruament on February 27 and 28.

IN the contest at New Dorp Park, Staten Island, N. Y., on February 4, for the Clinton Rod and Gun Club's badge, 7 live birds per man, Dr. Emil Schrader, standing at 28 yards rise, made a clean score and carried off the honors of the event.

THE Nebraska State Sportsmen's Association's annual tournament for 1895 will be held at Omaha on June 13, 14 and 15. The association will add $500 in cash to the purses, thus assuring all who wish to attend stakes worth competing for.

A GUN club with 30 members was organized at Warren, O., ou the first of this month. The club will probably be heard from frequently during the coming Summer by the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD.

AT the regular monthly contest of the Vernon Rod and Gun Club, held at Dexter Park, L. I., ou February 2, Dr. Littlefield won the regular club competition ou a clean score.

THE eighteenth annual tournament of the Missouri State Fish and Game Protective Association will be held at Kansas City, Mo., from April 22 to 27 inclusive.

THE Big Four Gun Club of Fonda, Ia., announces that it will hold a tournament on April 16, 17 and 18.

THE Henry Shooting Club of Henry, Ill., will hold its Spring tournament on May 7, 8 and 9.

THE Elwood (Ind.) Gun Club expects to hold one or more tournaments the coming Summer and Fall.

THE FARMER CITY TOURNAMENT

FARMER CITY, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD: Wednesday and Thursday were two fine days for holding a midwinter tournament, and well did the shooters from the surrounding towns improve the time by blowing to "smithereens" 3,000 inanimate targets at the fair ground in this city.

The feature of the first day wss a special match betwcen Capt. A. H. Bogardus aud Mr. C. W. Morrison. Urbana sent the largest delegation, which was composed of representstive business men. All were sorry they could uot stay the second day. These Urbsna gentlemen will, the coming June, give one of the largest tournaments held in the state this seasnu. They promise $500 added money. Mr. "Tramp" Irwin was present and took a hand in most of the events. The highest average was made by him and Mr. Linell of Pontiac. Irwin used a Parker gun with Du Pont Smokeless powder; Linell a Lefever with Americau Wood powder.

In this great level Illinois country nesrly every gun club can have good shooting grounds, this place being especially favored with excellent grounds. The background and all the surroundiugs are very fine for target shooting.

The mauagement was nnder the direct supervision of J. M. Reed and G. Steucel, aud the way they treated the shooters will be sure to insure a good turuout at their next shoot. The scores follow:

SNOOT No. 1.—10 single Blackbirds, entrance $1: "Tramp" first money with 10; Rosencrance and Clarno second, with 8; Hait and G. Stencel third.

SNOOT No. 2.—15 single Peorias, $1 50 entrance: "Tramp" first, with 15; Rosencrance second, with 12; Hait third, with 11.

SNOOT No. 4.—20 Blackbirds, $1.50 entrance.

SPECIAL MATCH

As a drawing card a match had been arranged between Captain A. H. Bogardus and Mr. C. W. Morrison, this being the second one of a series, at 50 live birds each for a purse of $100. The first match was shot at Lincoln, Ill., ou Christmas Day, when Mr. Morrison was victorious by the score of 46 to 45 But it must be understood that Capt. Bogardus shoots at 50 birds to Mr. Morrison's 40, and that the first ten are scored dead to the latter. These matches deserve more attention from the shooting fraternity thau they receive; they should become popular everywhere throughout the country. The rules under which this match was shot give a bird some chance for its life The rules are: The gun to be a 12-gauge; must be held below the elbow until the bird is on the wing; use of one barrel only. A bird must not be killed inside a circle drawn ten yards from the traps; then a boundary of 80 yards from the trap in all directions. I hope the time may come when the shooters will thank Capt. Bogardus for his efforts to make this style of shooting popular.

Capt. Bogardus uses in these matches a Winchester repeater, Blue Rival shells loaded with black powder, and No. 7 shot. Mr. Morrison uses a Smith gun aud black and nitro powder, turn about. Both men made some good kills, and some misses that looked unnecessary. But it is easier for a bystander to see how a pigeon could be killed than it would be to kill the bird when looking down the rib of a guu barrel. W. "Tramp" Irwin of Peoria, was referee.

The Captain started ont and killed nine out of first ten, so when Mr. Morrison went to the score he was one bird in the lead. He downed his first two birds in good style, bnt lost the third and also the sixth. Bogardus scored straight on his second ten and was one ahead at the twentieth round. Each man lost four birds in the next ten, and in the fourth ten each lost two birds, while in the last ten Bogardus lost three to Morrison four. Thus the old veteran added one more to his long list of scalps.

SECOND DAY

The atmospheric conditions on this day were as fine as a Wluter day could be, but the shooters did not come in great numbers. However, those present kept up the "pull!" "bang!" "dead" or "lost," until 4. p. m., when the supply of Blackbirds had about vanished.

TRAP AT SEATTLE

SEATTLE, WASH

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—On January 20 a most interesting and largely attended live bird shoot took place here. The attendance was, in fact, the largest ever seen at a shoot ou the Souud, and the fact that every shoot brings new men to the front aud draws ont a larger and more enthusiastic attendauce than the one previous shows that live bird shooting is as yet only in its infancy here.

Fully 250 spectators were ou the grounds, aud the weather being favorable, the day's sport was greatly enjoyed by all. The interest centered in the Barlow vs. birds match, Barlow wsgering "Stevens" that he could kill 82 out of any 100 pigeons the latter might select. The match was for $100 a side, Barlow to shoot at 100 selected pigeous, American Shootiug Association rules.

Mr. Barlow is a member of the Tacoma Rod and Gun Club, Tacoma being his home, but he is at present residing at Port Orchard. He is cousidered one of the best wing shots in the state, target shooting especially being his stroug hold. He lost this match, however, losing 19 out of his first 61 birds aud then withdrew.

The birds were a good lot; the best ever trapped ou the grounds. Those used in the match were selected and trapped by "Steveus" and Capt. E. T. Miner, who had half of "Stevens'" bet.

Mr. Barlow, although making no long runs, made several beautiful kills and was frequently applauded by the spectators. Mr. W. A. Eberly, of Tacoma, one of the oldest and best live bird shots iu the Northwest, handled Barlow, aud by his splendid retrieving saved him several birds. Quite a delegation of shooters came over from Port Orchard and Tacoma, those from the former place hiring a special steamer for the occasion.

There has been a great stir in shooting circles here lately, more matches having been arranged and shot during the last three months than for five years before. As a result of this shoot a match for $500 a side has been arranged to be shot in Tacoma on February 17, "Stevens" of this city and Ed Barlow of Port Orchard, being the contestants.

Among those present at the shoot on January 20, I uoticed the following: W. A. Eberly, W. F. Sheard, E. A. Kimball, Lanning, Sawyer and others of Tacoma; T. A. Bringham, Byrou Barlow, Ed Barlow, Smith aud several whose names I do not recall, from Port Orchard: Tucker, of Port Blakeiy; Calhoun and Thomas, of Black Diamond, and Louis Hipkins, of Renton. Seattle sportsmen were out in force, among them being "Stevens," Capt. E. P. Miner, W. A. Hardy, Fred Charles, Dr. P. A. Purdey, A. K. Churchill, Joe Schlumpf, J. P. Ruppe and brother, S. T. Keisey, Noble Wallingford, Theo. Haller, W. Morton, Walter Baker, C. F. Treat, Frank Boarman, Oscar Jones, Maurice McMicken, George Fisher, George Willey, Frank Atkins, Starr Ballard, W. E. McKee, R. S. Dutcher, McIntosh, Stormfeldt, Bromley and Hathaway.

Three 7-bird races, one before aud two after the match, and a miss aud out made up the sweeps of the day, the scores of which I append.

THE UTICA SHOOT

UTICA, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Inclosed please find scores made at the shoot held here this week.

From a financial point of view the target events were a failure on account of the extreme cold wave that reached here on date of shoot, the thermometer the first day registering from 6° to 10° below zero, and on the second day from 10° to 24° below. The firing points were protected and we shot out of windows as it were when it was was impossible to keep warm with a big red-hot stove at our backs. The wind blew at a rate of 30 miles an hour.

Live bird day was a compiete success. Cold to be sure, with a stiff wind from the northwest. The birds were a grand lot, and were trapped from the King fast traps, which made them dart away like rockets. The main live bird event was at 20 birds, handicap rises, $10 entrance, birds extra, and an optional sweep on first fifteen of $5, to be divided with the three high guns. The reader will note that the men that were in the optional sweep are marked with a * on left of their names, their handicap following their uames on the right. The scores:

SECOND DAY

While the weather was not so cold on this day as on the day before, a driving snow, and a high wind blowing from right to left across the traps, made the targets very erratic in flight, and anything but ragged scores was out of the question. During the afternoon a flock of about a dozen pintail ducks passed over the grounds going southeast. Time was called in the middle of an event and the crowd iuvited out of the tents to witness the strange sight.

THE WELLBORN TOURNAMENT

WELLBORN, TEX.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I bad hoped to be able to give you a report of one of the grandest trap shootiug events that ever took place in Texas, but circumstances of one kind and another caused such disappointment that I feel almost ashamed to send such a report of a Texas shoot. In fact I feel warranted in saying that there are very few sportsmen in Texas that can hit a flying haystack, and wheu a man gets so he can break 80 per cent. of the Blue Rocks he shoots at, or kill 75 per cent. of his live birds, he is looked upon as an expert and is ruied out of tourtuaments. If not this, and it is known that such a man will be in attendance at a shoot, nearly all the other shooters stay away. Take for instauce such ciubs as the San Antonio, Dallas, Houston, Vernon, Waco and Austin, there is not a man in either of these clubs wil[illegible] to turn out and shoot against 75 and 80 per cent. me[illegible] of the small attendance the shoot closed the seco[illegible] visitors, E. Brown, of Burton, and A. F. Wilso[illegible] preseut. Following are the scores for the two SHOOT No. 4 —10 live birds, $7.50 entrance, nine entries: Batte 10, Newsom 10, Brown 8, Barrow 8, A. W. Royder 9, J. B. Nabors 8, J. P. Royder 7. W. Z. Nabors 7, T. H. Royder 7.

SHOOT No. 5.—15 Blue Rocks, seven entries: Wilson 15, T. H. Royder 14, Barrow 14, Brown 13, A. W. Royder 13, J. B. Nabors 12, Newsom 12.

SHOOT No. 6.—15 Blue Rocks, $2 entrance, six entries: J. P. Royder 14, Batte 14, Browu 13, Newsou 12, F. B. Goodrich 11, B. F. Jones 11.

SHOOT No. 7.—10 live birds, $10 entrauce, five entries.

Brown .....2102201 21*—7	T. H. Royder .....2221*20121—8
J. B. Nabors.....2212022012—8

In this event a side bet of $10 was made between Barrow and Brown, Barrow betting Brown he would not kill eight birds within bounds. Brown returned the compliment and bet Barrow $10 that he would not kill that number either. It was agreed that Barrow and Brown should shoot first, and the toughest old birds were selected. It will be seen that both bets were lost, though Browu had killed seven and had his tenth bird to shoot at.

It was now nearly sundown and it was decided, as we were mostly home shooters, to quit for the day. It was easily to be seen that Brown and Barrow had it in for one another, and it was therefore no surprise to hear that a match had been arranged between them for $50 a side, at 50 live birds per man, to be shot before the tournament closed.

As no new shooters put in an appearance on the second day, a few minor Blue Rock events were shot to give tardy attendants time to assemble, and then it was agreed that Brown and Barrow should display their skill, or lack of skill, and the race resulted as follows:

Barrow.....1*21112102 12*1122012 21102*121* 1110221210 1021121220—39
Brown.....2012212022 *120221202 12120222*1 2*22011201 2102122102—38

Another match was then arranged between them—no one caring much about shooting minor events—at 100 Blue Rocks per man, for $25 a side. In this race Brown defeated Barrow with a score of 80 to 78.

Thus closed our shoot, the club being greatly dissappointed in the attendance of neighboring sportsmen.

FRED HOEY WINS AT MONTE CARLO

Fred Hoey, the well-known American trap shot, who is now participating in the International shoot at Monte Carlo, is holding his own remarkably well against the crack marksmen of England, France, Russia and Italy.

On January 12, prior to going to Monte Carlo, at the Gun Club's grounds at Notting Hill he won a number of sweepstakes. Going to Monte Carlo on January 21, he entered the Prix de Diane event on the following Wednesday and with a clean score of eight divided first and second prizes with M. Lo. The Field of London, speaking of Mr. Hoey and the contest, says:

"The wind was blowing half a gale when the shooting for the Prix de Diane began this morning, and, as there was a bright sun shining in the faces of the competitors, it is not surprising that the number of kills was not so large as usual. As has been the case in nearly all the preliminary competitions, the first and second money was divided, Mr. Fred Hoey, who has only arrived within the last day or two, sharing the prizes with M. Lo. There was, however, a good fight for third prize among Mr. Roberts, Count Voss, Chevalier de Knyff and Signor Riva, all four of whom had missed their eighth pigeon, and after the third round in the ties Signor Riva was found to be the only one who had killed all three, so that he became entitled to the third prize.

The Prix de Diane was a £40 event added to a sweepstake of £2 each, distance 27 meters, with fifty-two entries. The scores in this event were as follows:

Mr. Fred Hoey (divided first and second prizes of £119)	11111111—8	Mr. Blake	11110...—4
		M. Lip.	11110...—4
M. Lo (ditto)	11111111—8	M. Gourgand	11110...—4
Signor Riva	11111110—7	Mr. J. Denoy	11110...—4
Mr. Roberts	11111110—7	M. Descbarmays	1110....—3
Count Voss	11111110—7	M. Bethune	1110....—3
Chevalier de Knyff	11111110—7	Count Trautmansdorff	1110....—3
M. Van den Bosch	1111110.—6	M. A. Ginot	1110....—3
Signor Galette	111110..—5	M. R. Gourgand	1110....—3
Signor Mainetto Ghidoli	111110..—5	M. Doyen	110.....—2

M de Montpellier	111110..—5	Signor G. Oliva	110.....—2
		Count de Robiauo	110.....—2

Ties for third prize. Signor G. Riva, Count Voss, Mr. Roberts and Chevalier de Knyff, shot off miss and out, the first named winning on three straight.

On February 4 Mr. Hoey entered the Grand Prix de Casino event, in which the prize money amounted to 20,000 francs, with the entry fees of 200 francs each added. There were ninety-four competitors. In this event Mr. Hoey missed two out of his first four birds, which shut him out from being one of the winners, Signor Benvenuti (Italian) winning first, scoring 16 birds out of a possible 17; MM. Drevon and Descharmays (French), 15 birds each, and Signor Calari (Italian) 14 birds.

Mr. Hoey, on February 6, competed in the supplementary handicap, in which there were fifty-four entries, and with a score of 23 straight, captured first prize all aloue, Gaetti winniug second prize, with a score of 22 out of 23.

WAWASSETT VS. WILMINGTON

WILMINGTON, DEL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Following are the scores of a shoot on the Wilmington Rod and Gun Club grouuds on Monday, February 4, between three members of Wawassett Guu Club and three members of the Wilmiugton Rod and Guu Club.

There was a gale of wind blowing at the time and the snow was drifting, while the thermometer registered five degrees above zero. Although the Wilmington boys were defeated by four birds, there were seven birds out of the 150 of the Wilmington Rod and Gun Club's that were not shot at, owing to an arrangement being made that a gun being at safe the bird should be scored lost. This occurred seven times to the Wilmington team and twice to the Wawassett team and this evidently caused the defeat of the Wilmington boys, as a bird cannot possibly be broken without it is shot at, yet I do not think the Wilmington Rod and Gun Club has any excuse to offer for the defeat of its team. We will have another race under the same conditions to decide a series of three matches. Owing to the illness of Mr. C. Springer, Mr. R. Miller was substituted in his place on this occasion. Each man shot at 50 targets, the scores belug as follows:

Answers to Correspondents

We are willing always to answer any question that we can answer and prescribe for dogs or other animals in these columns, but we can not answer questions or prescribe by mail. In all instances where it is necessary that a sick animal should be prescribed for by mail, we refer the owner to Professor R. J. Withers, No. 627 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Cal., to whom one dollar must be inclosed to pay for his services.

KENNEL

R. T. S., Detroit, Mich.—Ans.—Our reply to your query may be "apparently erroneous" to the owner of the dog, nevertheless it was perfectly correct. We do not know what its owner may have called the dog, but it was exhibited at Cincinnati, 1884, as Hugo; its number in the catalog was 67, it won in the open class, and the particulars concerning it given in the catalog consist of, "six and a half years; full pedigree; imported. "The dog was not registered, so we cannot give you any further information.

J. ST C. S., Toronto.—Ans.—Guy, the dog that was second in the open class for Gordon setter dogs at Toronto last August, is not registered. He was entered as the property of the Woodbury Kennels (Fred P. Kirby, agent), Woodbury, N. J.; as date of birth, breeder's name and sire and dam are not given in the Toronto catalog it is very probable that nothing is known concerning the dog's breeding.

J. D. F., Springfield, O.—Ans.—Give him the one-sixtieth part of a grain of the sulphate of strychnine and five grains of the citrate of iron and quinine three times daily; also apply soap liniment to his loins daily. It would better not to work him until he has made a complete recovery.

C. T. W., Salt Lake City, Utah.—Ans.—We think the trouble arises from lack of exercise and imperfect alimentation. Change the diet by feeding turnips, carrots and beets. Give each one the one-eighth part of a grain of the sulphate of iron twice daily.

MRS. W. M., Newark, N. J.—Ans.—Anoint the rough dry scabs daily with pure oil of tar, also apply it to the eruptions about the legs. Discontinue the use of soap, and groom him daily with a moderately stiff brush. Feed but once daily, then at night.

W. C. M., Burton, Kan.—Ans.—Conception did not take place, and the phenomenon was simply the sympathetic action of the organs of generation. Try her again.

G. E. S., Mt. Kisco, N. Y.—Ans.—Canker of the ear; cleanse the ear with tepid water and then apply tincture of iodine; continue this treatment until healed.

W. H. M., Marengo, Ia.—Ans.—Tincture of belladouna is indicated, but we cannot prescribe without knowing the age of the dog.

P. K., Hector, Minn.—Ans.—Without making a personal examination we cannot give a prognosis. Apply tincture of iodine daily.

N. S. B., Chicago.—Ans.—It may possibly arise from indigestion and we advise you to consult some local veterinarian.

F. T., Chicago.—Ans.—Write to Mr. F. S. Webster, 44 Broad Street, New York, for a copy of the Pointer Club's standard.

C. B. P., Bar Harbor, Me.—Ans.—There is no pointer registered under the name of Kent's Moud.

O. H. M., Columbus, Ind.—Ans.—Give one dram of the fluid extract of cascara segrada.

MISCELLANEOUS

LANCEWOOD, Mount Kisco, N. Y.—Kindly prescribe for my fox-hound dog about four years old. He eats all he gets and is fat and strong, runs well and stays all day; but every morning he has dried matter on his eyelids and can hardly open his eyes; they are full of matter (thick white stuff), and over the iris and pupil there is a white substance or skin forming, and it seems to affect his sight at times, perfect every other way. (2) What is the drop of the .32-20 and 44-40 at 200 yards? (3) Mention good reliable pickle for setting hair and preserving fox, coon, and other hides prior to being mounted. (4) Advise best caliber rifle for fox-bunting in a hilly country where a hunter would be apt to get shots at about 200 or 300 yards, and would have to shoot running quite often. (5) Name good fox load for fox-hunting, long shots, 12-bore, full choke gun. Ans.—(1) Take fluid extract of goldenseal one ounce, sulphate of zinc twelve grains, rose water three ounces mix and apply twice daily. (2) .32-20, 11 32-100 inch; .44-40, 15 27-100 inch. (3) Mr. Fred Kaempfer, taxidermist, 217 East Madison Street, Chicago, offers the following: I put all hides before I mount them in a pickle of salt and alum, which not only sets the hair tight, but also puts the hide itself in excellent condition for mounting. I prepare the pickle as follows: Take three parts of common salt (used for cooking) to one part of alum, which dissolve in warm water in the following proportions, say about 1½ pounds of salt and ½ pound of alum to one gallon of water. The pickle must be strengthened from time to time and salt and alum added if getting too weak; but when pickle is crystallizing add more water. I never use corrosive sublimate solution, for in my opinion it injures the hide in various ways. Small hides should remain in pickle at least two weeks, and large ones a week longer. [illegible] are not ready to mount the skins after [illegible] does no harm to leave the hide [illegible] mine the hide occasionally and [illegible] When you remove the hide [illegible] re, soft water (cold), which will [illegible] that may still adhere to the hair [illegible] ide remain from twelve to eight-een hours in the water, then remove it, let the water run off and then give the skin the usual coating of arsenical soap for preservation previous to mounting the specimen. The smell of the arsenical soap will pass off in a short time. Be sure to remove all greasy and fatty substances from the inside of the hide before same is put in the pickle." (4) A .32-40, using a specially hard bullet and nitro powder. (5) 3¾ drams of any of the nitro powders excepting Walsrode and 1⅛ ounce of No. 1 shot.

J. P. B., Brooklyn, N. Y.—(1) Can you tell a party going South, who wishes to get some quails for stocking purposes, how to snare them? (2) Do you handle a book that tells how to trap quails? Ans.—(1) We cannot, except you were to buy a net for the purpose, and that would cost half as much as the quails would if bought from some one who deals in them, unless you wanted a large quantity. (2) We have no such book as the one you mention.

TRAP

W. W. W., Louisville, Ky.—A, B and C shoot a match at 15 targets each, one money. A being the best shot handicaps himself by allowing B and C each to add two birds to his score. A breaks 11; B breaks 13, and the 2 allowed makes his score 15; C breaks 14 and the 2 allowed him makes his score 15. Is it a tie between B and C? or does C win the purse? No handicap between B and C. Ans.—It is a tie between B and C.

A. B. L., Coalfield, Ia.—A bets B two to one that C beats D in a target match. The shoot results in a tie and the stake is divided. B claims he is entitled to draw half of the stake money between him and A. Is he right or does he draw only the money he put up? Ans.—The match resulting in a tie neither man wins, therefore each is entitled to the portion of the stakes he put up.

Information Wanted

IN a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, A. H. W., of Theresa, Wis., asks for information about the Ithaca gun. I once owned a 10-gauge gun of that make which I used in Arkansas shooting ducks and large game for two years. I found it to be all that the makers claimed for it, strong, durable and a close, hard shooter. If A. H. W. wants a gun that will cut down big, strong ducks and geese at 60 yards, he could not make a better selection than an Ithaca. However, I have one suggestion to make, and that is for him to order the gun targeted with No. 6 shot. Most American guns are targeted with No. 8 shot, and while they will make an excellent pattern with No. 8 shot they will not do so well with larger sizes. If A. H. W. will order a 10-gauge Ithaca to be bored to make a close pattern with No. 6 shot he will have a gun that will surprise him in its killing powers. I never saw a gun of any make that would shoot harder than the Ithaca I used in Arkansas. I once took a chance shot at a wild turkey flying across a stream fully 75 yards away, and broke both of its wings, using No. 4 shot and 4½ drams of black powder. The man who buys an Ithaca gun will get full value for his money.

Nashua, Pa. J. A. B.

WILL not some brother sportsman tell me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD how best to keep Tennessee quails through the cold weather in this cold section of the country? I have tried for several years to save them by keeping them in confinement during the Winter months, but my efforts have proved a failure in every instance, for do what I will the birds all die. The coop I placed them in was about a foot high and fairly roomy, with smaller coops inside this for the birds to go in at night, and at one time for a few days placed some in a cool room in my greenhouse, but still they die. I feed corn and wheat and supply them with clear spring water, fine gravel and fine bits of hay and hayseed and keep plenty of feed by them all the time.

IN answer to F. A. C., in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 9, I would say that an 8½-pound 10-gauge gun will do better shooting both as regards pattern and penetration than a 12-gauge gun of same weight, and the recoil of the 10-gauge, with same powder charge, will be the lighter. A 12-gauge gun, 30 or 32 inch barrels, will not burn more than 3¼ drams of powder. If more than this amount is used a portion of the charge is unconsumed and therefore wasted, while a 10-gauge gun will burn from 3¾ to 4 drams. An 8½-pound 12-gauge gun should stand more hard shooting according to its caliber than an 8½-pound 10-gauge gun, and the same rule would apply to a 12 gauge and a 14-gauge gun of the same weight.

Matlock, Ia. "LONGFELLOW."

I HAVE had a similar experience to that reported by G. Y. P., Buffalo, in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 12. I purchased 500 Nitro Club shells last Fall and had them all loaded before I discovered that a large percentage of them missed fire. Had I known of this defect before I had them loaded I should certainly have returned them to the makers. At first I attributed the misses to my gun and got a new spring from the factory, but the misses still continue. I would like to know if others have had similar experience with these shells.

Warrens, Wis. A NOVICE.

IN answer to J. H. B., New York, in AMERICAN FIELD of January 5, I will say if he will communicate with me I shall be pleased to give him, or others interested, the results of some experiments I have made in the last few years and put him in communication with other parties who have bred quails in confinement. As I am a dealer in game birds I do not wish to encroach on the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD to advertise my business except in a legitimate way.

L. L. BUCK,
328 S. Second Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WILL someone please tell me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD how to care for and what to feed young quails and prairie chickens? I have often hatched them, but the little idiots would never eat anything, and, of course, soon died. Farmers, who often find their nests when plowing in the Spring, throw the eggs away, as they say the quails and prairie chickens are like the Indians and cannot be civilized.

Lemont, Ill. J. B.

WILL some brother sportsman please inform me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD what the prospects for shooting are in the immediate vicinity of Tallapoosa, Ga.; kind of game if lands are all posted, how a visitor would be received there, and if there is a gun club or rifle club at Tallapoosa? I am thinking of locating there if it is a place where I can enjoy myself occasionally afield with dog and gun.

Danvers, Mass. SPORTSMAN.

IN reply to Reader, who, in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 12, wishes to know a good waterproof mixture for leather boots, I would say: Melt in an earthen pot six parts of spermaceti, add twelve parts of caoutchouc cut very fine, and when this is dissolved add twelve parts of tallow, four parts of lard, eight parts of amber varnish. Mix and it is ready. Apply with a brush. It gives a good gloss.

Butler, Pa. J. WEISENSTINE.

FOR the benefit of Reader, of Milwaukee, Wis., who in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD wanted to know a good waterproof preparation to apply to leather boots, I would say: Take one pound of beef tallow, one pound of hog's lard, one-fourth pound of beeswax and one ounce of dry lampblack. Melt the first three together, then stir in the lampblack and apply to the leather while warm.

Mechanicsburg, O. S. M. H.

WILL some reader of the AMERICAN FIELD, who may know, inform me through its columns whether there is any book published which treats of the rearing and feeding of bullfrogs? If so, what is its title? If any reader can give me information about frog rearing, he will confer a favor by so doing in the AMERICAN FIELD.

Towson, Md. H. M.

IF J. F. N., of Port Byron, Ill., who, in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 26, asks for a good receipt for tanning skins with the fur or wool on them, will get or have his newsdealer get him a copy of the American Agriculturist of January 26, he will find what he wants on page 101 of that paper.

Nashville, Tenn. AMICUS.

CAN any reader of the AMERICAN FIELD furnish me through its columns with any information relative to the value of fishes raised in artificial ponds, their growth, commercial value and profit to owner?

Mitchell, S. D. F. P. S.

WILL some brother sportsman give me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD a receipt for a preparation for bluing gun mountings, such as lock plates, trigger guard, hammers, etc.

Rutland, Ia. H. B.

IF J. F. N., who, in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 26, wants a receipt for tanning skins, will write to C. D. C. Williams, No. 1910 Republican Street, this city, he can get what he wants.

Seattle, Wash. WASH.

WILL someone accustomed to hunting bears please tell me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD what breed of hounds makes the best dog for hunting bears?

Wyant, Ill. J. E. K.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—Edwin Milton Royle's charming comedy-drama "Friends," closes its engagement at the Schiller Theater with the present week. The success of the Camille D'Arville Opera Company, in "Madeline, or the Magic Kiss," was something phenomenal and in two engagements, of a fortnight each, kept the theater crowded to its utmost capacity. Next week comes another most popular and attractive star, Louise Beaudet, at the head of her great comic and opera bouffe company. Louise Beaudet, it will be remembered, was the bright particular star of the great "America" organization at the Auditorium during the World's Fair year. This season, supported by a magnificent company, she will produce for the first time in Chicago the comic opera, "The Dragoon's Daughter," which has made an immense success. This new opera is by I. W. Norcross Jr. and Herman Perlet. The story is romantic and amusing, the music extremely pretty, gemmed with delightful melodies for the principals, embellished with bright and catchy choruses, and, it is said, brimful of fun and admirably developed in provokingly funny situations for the comedians. It will be put upon the stage lavishly with entirely new scenery, original and picturesque costumes and elaborate stage equipments.

HAYMARKET THEATER.—A magnificent production of Dickens' "Oliver Twist," with a star cast, including Elita Proctor Otis as Nancy Sikes, and a perfect stage setting. Altogether the most perfect production ever seen in Chicago. Next week, Hallen and Hart in "Later On."

ROYAL ENGLISH WINTER CIRCUS AND GERMAN WATER CARNIVAL.—The biggest and best show in Chicago. A complete change of program this week. See the eighty handsome girls in the xylophone and new ballets, and Romulus, the strong man. Two performances daily, at 2 and 8 p. m.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Last week of Mr. Richard Mansfield, in his select repertory, including "Scenes from the Life of Napoloon Bonaparte," "A Parisian Romance, and "Beau Brummel." Next week—Hoyt's "A Texas Steer."

AUDITORIUM.—The Chicago Orchestra, Theodore Thomas conductor, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, in a popular request program; Mr. August Yunker, viola soloist.

MCVICKER'S THEATER.—The success of the season. Mr. James A. Herne, in his own beautiful play, "Shore Acres." Usual matinees. Next week, the same.

CHICAGO OPERA HOUSE.—The beautiful Lillian Russell, in "The Grand Duchess." Saturday matinee only. Next week, Lillian Russell in "La Perichole."

THE LINCOLN.—"The Limited Mail" and Beatrice, the great contortionist. Matinees Thursday and Saturday. Next week, Neil Burgess' "County Fair."

HOPKINS' THEATER.—A continuous performance, from 1 to 11 p. m., of the greatest vaudeville specialties ever seen or heard in Chicago.

COLUMBIA THEATER.—Last weeks of Rice's "1492," with new songs and specialties. Usual matinees.

LYCEUM THEATER.—Russell Bros'. Comedians. Next week, Stroho Vaudevilles and Mlle. Fougera.

ALHAMBRA THEATER.—"Man Without a Country." Next week, "The Span of Life."

MADISON STREET OPERA HOUSE.—The London Belles. Two big shows daily.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under 'Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

Excelsior Dog Cakes

As their name implies, are the highest grade in the world, and five gold and silver medals corroborate the fact. They are economical and nutritious and are used by the leading kennels in the United States and Europe.

The Swiss Mountain Kennels have the following to say about them:

SWISS MOUNTAIN KENNELS, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healthy trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,

THE ART OF SHOOTING.

LONDON, FOURTH EDITION, 1892. PRICE $3.00.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average if not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which gives pleasure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of whose followers I am indebted for many pleasant days.

PRAIRIE CHICKEN SHOOTING, 1894

BY EMORY

"The Sheridan ride of twenty miles away was soon over, and the coveted Winchester was reached. Wagons were unloaded, horses were stabled, supper was engaged for a later hour, at a farmhouse near by, and up stairs, which meant up the ladder, was secured as a resting place during the coming night for the more timid of the ladies in the party, and strawstacks near the house were secured for those having the courage to endure or enjoy a night out of doors. Then certain of the field trial dogs —rabbit chasers—were chained, and Whitewell's Fritz and the Colonel's Faust and Joseph's Bill and Kidd's Ponto were slipped, and to the nearest stubble-field they went, followed, of course, by the gentlemen of the party. In the first field entered, Fritz found a covey on the one side, and Bill one in a remote corner. There was no flushing of birds there. Ponto and Faust, on seeing Fritz on a point, backed him at a long distance, while Bill retained his birds and his point. What a beautiful sight it was! Two coveys of birds in one field, apparently awaiting the presence of the sportsmen, evidently not desiring to remain in North Dakota during the coming Winter months, but preferring to die while in youth and without sin, by the weapons of man, rather than be frozen or starved, or trapped and have their necks wrung, a little later in life.

"Oh my, what a covey of birds Fritz had! In front of him and on either side of him were the heads of an hundred grouse protruding above the stubble as if to ask the dog, 'What are you here for? Why don't you let us alone while we are at our supper?' When the several members of the party were ranged in line, and the warnings were given, 'You shoot to the left, and you to the right, and you take those that rise at the right center, and you those at the left-center,' the dog was told to 'Hold up!' which, in English, you know, means 'Go on; flush the birds.' But the dog would not move an inch. He had not been trained for field-trial work, or he would have long since flushed the birds. 'Shoo!' said the Preacher; and 'Shoo, shoo, shoo! why don't you get up?' came from other lips, the birds the while evidently thinking the men with guns were farmers who begrudged them the stray wheat they were eating, and they rose easily, fairly spotting the space above with animate life. Each man selected a double, and each bird shot at took a tumble, and the score was eight birds brought to bag.

"The birds flew but a short distance and dropped into the borders of a dry slough, and the men with guns visited Bill, who seemed to have had a regular Board of Trade corner on the birds he was pointing. From that covey, not a large one, eight more birds were brought to bag. 'Why,' said the Preacher, 'one might as easily hit a chicken as he could a barn; they seem to stand as still in the air as targets nailed to a door. How I do wish the Colonel was here; he might learn to shoot, if he were!'

"Twilight came, and all returned to camp. When the dead birds were counted, the number was declared to be fifty, though it was a sort of Ananias story, as there were many more. And this a short hour's work for four guns.

"Supper was eaten, dogs were fed and housed, stories were told, but not of massasaugers nor of rattlers, blankets were spread on the sides of the strawstack for those who desired to 'sleep out,' and an early retirement was the ending of the first day's real outing, some of the party climbing the ladder to the attic of the farmhouse, and the others trying to make peace with those melodious chorus singers, the mosquitoes, outside, by covering themselves with the meshes of finely woven nets. There were no specters, no ghosts, no massasaugers, no rattlers; nor was there the bark of wolf, nor approach of fox, nor screech of owl, nor odor of a mephistis—family Mastelidæ. Each and every one of the party was dreaming of the pleasures enjoyed the day just past.

"Robertson is a snorer. Oh, how he did snore while sleeping in the strawstack! At about 2 o'clock, a. m., the fire seemed to have gone out of Rob's furnace, and the steam to have run out, as the snoring had ceased, when Joseph whispered:

"'Rob! Are you awake?'

"'Yes; what is it, Joe? Is it time to get up?'

"'No; but you are a terror; you've done nothing but snore, and I have scarcely slept a wink all night, I haven't. But say, Rob, we shall kill lots of birds to-day; what shall we do with them?'

"'Take them to St. Paul and give them to your friends, of course.'

"'No; that won't do. The law says you shall shoot but twenty-five birds to a gun. But that would be two hundred and fifty birds, as we have ten guns: You've got two, the Preacher has two, and so have Kiddersen and I two each, and the others have two. But the law says the birds must not be shipped out of the state, and they can't go in our car.'

"'Then what's the use of shooting them? We've fed the multitude out here, and the multitude don't want any more grouse, I guess. What do those newspaper men want, I wonder? There's no more harm in having our friends East, whose ancestors came here two centuries ago, eat grouse than to have people just over from Norway eat the breasts only, and throw the rest of the bird away, is there? Take them home, Joe.'

"'Can't do it! Can't, Rob. Those newspaper fellows and legislators are humbugs as game preservers, of course they are. They say that you shan't kill but twenty-five birds to a gun in a day, but they let you carry and use a whole arsenal of guns, and kill twenty-five birds with each;—that's nonsense! And that you shall not carry a bird home with you, even for a sick friend. Now, that is dead wrong. But we won't break the law, Rob, though it is awfully tempting; nor had we better kill more than twenty-five birds to a man. Those same paper fellows advertise guns and ammunition, and targets and shoots, and give the scores made just to make money for themselves, and to make shooters, and tempt them to go shooting in the field, even when birds are out of season. They are the fellows who do the mischief. Saying a man shall not kill but twenty-five birds a day to a gun, or to all his guns, don't cover the ground. But if the laws would prohibit a man shooting more than, say, two hundred birds of any one kind in a season, then that might be more reasonable, and less birds would be killed. Do you know the next racket those newspaper men will play on the lovers of field shooting to protect their little game? It is an old fad being revived, and they have the cheek to do it. They have a department in their papers headed 'Hunting,' and sometimes they fill several columns to give prominence to the subject. Shooting parties must save the game birds for the carnivoræ, they must! Foxes do so love eggs and game birds, and hunters do so love the chase, that birds must not be killed by shooters, but must be saved as food for dear Reynard! And it is ten to one that next Winter legislatures will be asked to pass laws protecting wolves and foxes and skunks during breeding season, and at no time must they be trapped or killed with gun, under penalty of imprisonment behind the bars for a time! Hunting is English, you know. But they won't get into the law a clause which will interfere with their following a fox with a pack of hounds until the poor creature has been run to his death. There is a 'heap' of sport in killing Reynard that way, maybe! Oh, but it must be so nice to follow a pack of hounds when they are following a drag! Gentlemen and ladies on horseback, vying with each other as to which shall be 'in at the death' of an aniseed bag! And is it not real luxury to rob a fox of her cubs in the Spring time, let them become pets to your little ones during the Summer, and then turn them loose to be pursued by a pack of hounds, followed by our darling ladies and selves until poor Reynard, who supposes the race to be half play, slackens his pace, and is overtaken by the ferocious dogs, and killed? Rare sport that, Rob; rare! It must elevate one's humanity to be 'in at the death' and chop Reynard's brush off, and present it to the best looking lady of the party, as a trophy of the hunt! But, never mind, Rob, we won't take any grouse home, nor kill more than twenty-five birds to a man.'

"'Well, I guess we will, Joe! Don't you know there are certain laws nobody is expected to keep? For instance, everybody, from priest to layman, smuggles goods across the line, even if Uncle Sam does say Six months in the county jail; and even those newspaper fellows, who preach so much better than priests do, smuggle guns over, or kill birds in one state when it is unlawful to kill them in an adjoining state, and carry them home—if they can buy up the baggagemen. The birds must go with us, Joe.'

"'No, Rob, I've got control of the private car, and no birds go in it. But let's get up, call the Preacher and Kiddersen, and let the other fellows sleep if they will, and we will take a short shoot before breakfast is ready.'

"And up they got, went out half a mile, killed lots of birds, and returned just early enough to see and appreciate a table not only loaded with edibles common to camp life, but also garnished with those choice delicacies not common to a city menu, cottage cheese, buttermilk, switzerkaise, bologna sausage, hogshead cheese, and stewed onions. Gracious! what appetites! How everyone did eat! When the party separated, several days later, they dare not kiss each other good-bye, each one's breath had such an unsavory odor!

"After breakfast, the horses were hitched to the wagons, 'All aboard!' was the order, and off toward the Mecca we went. When a half-mile out, pockets were filled with cartridges, the dogs were slipped, and all were quickly on foot in the field. The sun was now high above the horizon, and the sky was cloudless. Why could we not have a single drop of rain to moisten the grasses, if not the ground, that birds might emit at least a particle of scent whereby the dogs might more easily find them? Still, where grouse are as numerous as they were on those grounds, we had not long to wait until the dogs found a small covey and several birds were killed, the ladies securing their share. No one even suggested marking down scattering birds, as it was more easy to find unbroken coveys than singles.

"Toward midday a large cloud appeared in the southwest, the direction from which most storms and cyclones approach. Was it a signal of danger, or not? Was it of wind only, or hail, or rain? Where were the lightning flashes? Was that rumbling sound thunder, or from the roll of distant car wheels on a track of iron? The dogs were working to perfection, but the ladies hied to the wagons, that they might be in readiness to drive quickly to a farmhouse near by, in case the approaching cloud became a dangerous menace to their safety. At the same time Kiddersen's dog Ponto came to a beautiful point in front of the long grasses which margined a dry slough; and the other dogs quickly backed Ponto—some of them more than a hundred yards away. What a beautiful sight! Each man approached Ponto, forming in line, front face, ready to shoot when the birds should arise. On came that menacing storm cloud, and the ladies, one and all, cried to their husbands and chaperons to hurry to the wagons, that they might escape a seemingly certain drenching.

"'Why don't you flush those birds? Don't you see that cyclone coming? Can't you hear the ladies call?' shouted Kiddersen to the Preacher, who was near st to Ponto.

"'Why don't you flush them yourself? It is your dog that has them under his nose, and it is not my wish that is in such a hurry to escape a shower bath,' was the Preacher's retort.

"The funnel-shaped cloud swayed to the right, then to the left, and then, suddenly dropping, in one's imagina [illegible] at least, from the height above, it came toward and [illegible] apparently breaking in its fury as it [illegible] in which the terrified Mrs. Kid[illegible].

"[illegible] Hubby, hubby! Come! Save me! Oh! oh! oh!' shrieked that lady, as she sawed the air with her arms, in her efforts to protect herself; and then fell prostrate to the bottom of the wagon.

"The cloud seemed to have ceased its forward course, and settled around the horses and the occupants of the wagon, fairly obscuring Mrs. Kiddersen and the driver from view. A stampede of the horses, in fright, followed. Then ran Kiddersen at a 'two-forty' gait, quickly followed by all others save the indignant Preacher, who remained near the dog Ponto, hoping to get a shot, and the team was overtaken, reins grasped, and horses stopped.

"'Oh, my sweetheart! my sweetheart! Speak to me! Speak! Can't you speak? Have they killed you, my sweetheart? Speak!'

"The cloud had passed by, or, rather, the wagon had escaped from under the cloud; but the face, neck, and hands of 'my sweetheart' were covered with thousands of flying prairie ants, torturing the good lady with their sting. The Preacher—not on his knees praying for those in danger and adversity, as he should have been—was shouting at the dog Ponto, who was just then exercising his muscles in a footrace after another 'jack!' It seems that, finding himself alone, deserted by those who had gone to save a friend from the ant cloud, he had flushed the supposed covey of chickens, and found, instead of a covey of grouse, a single long-eared bunny.

"'Confound that dog!' said the Preacher, as he 'hoofed it' to the farmhouse where were the rest of the party, grouped in the shadow of a strawstack; 'hubby,' bathing the neck, face, and hands of 'his sweetheart,' the others making a spread for luncheon.

"At 5 o'clock, the party renewed the journey, finding many birds, and each killing to just the lawful limit per man, arriving home—the private car at the Mecca—in time for an early supper.

"During their two days' absence, the invalid, Colonel Prostrate, unable to go with the party, had so far convalesced as to have walked a mile or more from the Mecca, with gun, and Dr. Ludwig Platon (the physician who had successfully attended him during his illness) as companion, and had just returned, with the first grouse killed by him on the outing."

This ended the two days' shooting, as written by Bessie.

Dinner over, everyone, save the Colonel, was tired and cross. The early evening, however, was devoted to giving a summary of the success of each during the week and then came the inquiry, "Have not we had enough of this?"

"That is rich!" said the Colonel. "You have all had your fill, and got tired and want to go home, and here I have been sick in bed, with nothing better to do than to moralize over the iniquities of bird shooting. It is a shame to kill birds anyhow, and I thank my lucky stars I did lose a short section of the side support to my spinal column. Why, I got a letter to-day congratulating me on my good fortune in meeting with an accident, since it had proved a barrier to my killing game. You see I had loaned a lady a book named 'Black Beauty,' in which is related the story of the daily life, from birth to old age, of a beautiful and blooded horse. Did you ever read it? No? Then you must. But if you do, you will never kill another bird. Fact is, it made such an impression on me that for a while after I read it I couldn't hit a barn door with an open cylinder shotgun. Just you listen to this letter she writes me: [illegible] of it, only; I won't read all.

[illegible] is a very good book to go to sleep [illegible] relation. It does not quiet the [illegible] them. Furthermore, it is a [illegible] pefies, like a fine after-dinner [illegible] easier in its atmosphere of luxury and security. It is not a good book for you to read. It is like Mr. Wilkinson's letters, though he waked me up with a start, when he struck the question of strikes. Such life as is depicted in "Black Beauty" is the very hotbed of crime. The man who owned that horse could have disowned his son for a marriage he objected to, sent him into the world without a penny, stifled with a word the grief of the mistress of the house, gone out and fed "Black Beauty," and forgotten the son forever. Such a man could keep slaves and see no wrong. It is a beautiful life that the book depicts, but it is a swamp, and the false lights flash everywhere, and sleep comes on—the sleep that will end in death, mental death.

"'Oh how easily the brain becomes dulled to the more delicate influences of life; how quickly leprosy touches the finger tips, undreamt of, until one accidentally draws them across the candle flame, and in agony exclaims, "Too late! too late!" It is for this that I deprecate your shooting birds. That, too, brings the leprosy to the brain, and, once there, it is only by a miracle that it can be uprooted!

"'I know nothing of shooting birds, and the customs and license of the field, and am but too content with my ignorance; but I should be very angry if I saw you strike a hunting dog with a whip, for any cause, as you confess you have done, and may do again. You might find my anger correctional; I hope you would. I should be afraid you would grow more wicked. Better stop this side. Such ebulitions of temper are ever a distinct danger. They mean that the higher brain centers are not acting; and yet the keeping of them steadily and unintermittently active is all that secures anyone from cruelty and crime. The lower brain centers dictate the blow; the higher ones say, "No." This is true as to all of us. Don't sell your birthright. Stop this side of the dog, that no temptation—no physical and temporary disability—may ever carry you further 'We know not what's before us, what trials are to come.'

"'It hurts me to think of you butchering those beautiful birds for pleasure. How cruel the expression of your face must be when at such work. How can you? Is kindness and delicacy of feeling and sympathy so common in the world that you can afford to tamper with your brain? Read Thoreau's exquisite book, "A Week on the Concord and Merrimac," and get once again the true, the exact, standard of measurement. O the beauty of the bird idea! Its soft plumes, its strong wings, its nest, its leafy home, its joy in nature and in life! Compare with that idea the idea underlying your shooting. Which of the two has the more vitality, the more life, the greater power to give joy?

"'As no flower grows without roots and stalk, if not leaves, as the meadow grasses and weeds alone make possible the expanse of daisies and dandelions and buttercups, which will not grow where there are not roots, stalk, leaves, grasses, and weeds, holding within them all the chemical elements of the flower, and alone making possible the flower, so vegetation, insect life, animal life, hold within themselves the chemical constituents of human life. Therein is the basis of the respect we owe the less highly evoluted worlds. Therein is the meaning of the saying: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me." They are the black and rayless diamonds, fresh from the mines, out of which a king's crown is to be fashioned. The great trees are sought by the rarest birds, and, in some vague and undetermined way, the beautiful animals and the insects make our brains unfold and take on a higher evolution. The wild geese in their sad, poetic, migratory flight, sailing far above us, calling to us, perhaps at early dawn; the sweet and delicate thrush, hidden in leafy bower; the whippoorwill, as the sunset's gold fades from the western sky; the mockingbird, alone on the treetop, where scarce a leaf rustles, in the southern moonlight! why are we enemies of them all, or of their silent, songless kin, the game birds? They all need us, and for us to be without the half-world of which they are so large a part would be to make of our earth a beautiful face, from which had been plucked the soft shadows of eyelash, of eyebrow, the feathery fringe of hair about the brow. The patience of the cattle, the courage of the horse, the affection of the dog, are the same—the identical patience and courage and affection that we possess. It is not as highly evoluted as ours, but it is that out of which ours is "werved" (as my old Swedish servant girl so sweetly, in her broken English, spoke the word). This is the view of the animal kingdom old Greece took; and, in worshiping the animals, it was the idea—the spirit—of the beast that they worshiped. In this light, how deep the thought in "A Kentucky Cardinal" (a story in a late Harper's Magazine), that the birds are ever saying in their different ways, "Why persecutest thou me! Why persecutest thou me!"

"'The outcome of underestimating the power and beauty of this half-world is, with you, bird-shooting. You are willing to kill painlessly; but your sense of its value is blunted and stunted by your adoration of civilization, for you do not perceive that this half-world is the glorious background and framework of civilization. You fail to catch the spirit of these frail beings, else you would reverence it too deeply to destroy any manifestation of it for pleasure. You would be angry with me if I walked with you in the fields, and wantonly tore half the leaves from a rose, a wild, worthless rose, and broke its stem, and left it to die. I imagine my turning to you with a sneer, and saying, Why, there are tens of thousands of these weeds all about us; they will die to-morrow, or be trampled under the foot by some stray animal; how ridiculous your sentimentallty is! Whereupon, I would strike at several of them wlth my walking-stlck, as we passed. What would you think of me? Would you be convinced? Would lt be any excuse that I was practising to see how well i could aim, and that the rose could feel no pain? No. It is the spirlt of the roses that you dld not wlsh to see vanish. The world was all the more beautlful for every patch of wild roses we passed and left blooming and perfect. The perfume and color went with us; the sense that lt exlsted just back of our slght, that lt would remaln so existent for even one more hour, touched the heart wlth joy. What should touch the heart more than to see a bird salling in the air? We know that the blrd is not so free as lt seems, that lt may llve but an hour, but lt is the idea of the blrd. We look, and look, and turn away, and walk on, believing that it still salls, that it is forever to sail, forever to be free. Hark! A gun? No, we will not turn. That bright thing that a moment ago gladdened and glistened in the sunlight, dead! bedraggled in the dirt at our feet! its strong wing broken and motlonless; its proud head touching earth! No, we will not turn. For us lt shall still sail there ln the sunlight, high above us, free as alr, proud and full of joy. Hush! It ls but a speck now, it is recedlng, it ls already beyond our power of vision to follow lt! Where is it now, that bright bird?

" 'Hark! hark! The lark sings at Heaven's gate.' "

All stories have an end. Thls shall soon have one.

"Well, I guess you all see now what butchers you have been and you do really want to go home!" exclaimed the Colonel. "I haven't kllled but a single bird, and yet, just for the moment, I am glad of it. So much for that lady's day-dream of a perfect world, in whlch there ls perfect justice. But the spell passes."

Sunday came. The good Dr. Platon also came again. Bless his dear soul! He dld so wish hls patient to try the strength of the repalred rib that he urged the Colonel to take one day, 'just one,' in the field; and the Colonel, forgetful of the dream, consented, and did take "just one" day—Monday—among the grouse. Never mlnd about the "bag" he made; leave the story of that for others to write about. This only did Kiddersen and the Preacher who went with him, say: "He's bad medicine for the birds to take."

Tuesday morning, homeward bound. When nearing St. Paul, the Preacher asked the Colonel if his prejudices were such "that he could not accept an invitation to accompany the same party in December on a few days' outing among the partridges of Tennessee?" and the Colonel responded:

" 'When the devil was sick, the devil a saint would be;
When the devil got well, the devil a saint was he!'

"I intend to be in the best of health in December, Mr. Preacher; hence I accept, with thanks."

PRAIRIE CHICKEN SHOOTING, 1894—"OH, BUT IT MUST BE SO NICE TO FOLLOW A PACK WHEN THEY ARE FOLLOWING A DRAG!"

THE PROPOSED ILLINOIS LAW—DEBATE BEFORE THE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

The committees appointed by the directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association and the Produce Exchange of Chicago, respectively, to go to Springfield to petition the Illinois legislature, as reported in last week's AMERICAN FIELD, met in force at Illinois' Capital City Wednesday, February 13, each side determined to fight to the bitter end for its rights. The AMERICAN FIELD, in its managing editor, was there also, and was the only journal out of all the sportsmen's journals in America which took enough interest in this pivotal fight for the preservation of game in our United States to secure a verbatim report of the speeches delivered before the Illinois legislative committee on game and fish The AMERICAN FIELD has pointed out the weak points in this law time and again; it has called the attention of the Illinois legislature and the sportsmen of the state and country to these defects, and we sincerely hope the legislature will not persist in putting the law on the statute books without these necessary changes for the proper protection of game being first made.

The committee representing the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association was composed of W. L. Shepard, president; Herman B. Meyers, secretary; R. S. Mott, chairman law committee; L M. Hamline and C. S. Wilcox. Others present were: U. Y. Hindert, of Minonk, Ill., second vice-president; Chas. E. Felton, Geo. W. Strell, W. A. Pratt, F. S. Baird, M. R. Bortree, and several others who came into the committee room later. Mr. W. L Shepard, president, accompanied the committee more in the hope of effecting a compromise and avoiding a seeming wrangle before the legislative committee, than to fight the entire bill, realizing that if the legislative committee entertained a suspicion that sportsmen were divided all hope of better legislation would fall entirely. Wednesday morning he tried to effect a meeting or caucus, for this purpose, but in this laudable aim he failed, and to his great regret the opposing forces met before the lawmakers to fight it out. We regret this equally with Mr. Shepard, as otherwise a good law, equal to all, would have resulted.

The Produce Exchange of Chicago was represented by Geo. W. Barnett, Geo. S. Sloan, F. M. Smith, W. Morrison, H. M. Brown, W. E. Whitcomb, W. Lynn and J. Hart.

The legislative committee was presided over by Representative Geo. Halleck, chairman of the House committee, and Senator E. J. Dwyer, chairman of the Senate committee on game and fish.

The different speakers delivered their arguments with much force and tact, Messrs. Mott and Barnett securing the closest attention of their auditors by the manner of their deliverance and absence of remarks of a personal nature, and Game Warden Blow by his earnestness and pointed remarks in defense of his character as a state official: Senators Berry, Bogardus, Wells, Fitzpatrick and Evans, who followed the arguments closely, were not reluctant in asking the speakers to define more explicitly certain statements made by them. There were over one hundred interested listeners and spectators present in the room beside the legislative committee. Following is the report of the proceedings:

The joint meeting of the Senate and House committees on fish and game was called to order promptly at 2 o'clock p. m. in the state capitol at Springfield, Wednesday, February 13, by Chairman of the House committee, Representative Geo. Halleck, who spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN:—We desire to be courteous to every interest represented here to-day; I think we all realize the importance of this legislation. We have no right to take any interest in any particular bill here to-day. There are four interests come here to-day to be heard; that is, the rights of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Asssociation, individual citizens, the commission merchants from South Water Street, and State Game Warden Blow. Gentlemen what is your further pleasure?

Senator Fitzpatrick moved that the [illegible] represented name a person to speak [illegible] such person be allowed fifteen minut[illegible]

This motion was amended by [illegible] the speeches to ten minutes' dur[illegible] motion was withdrawn and eac[illegible] owed fifteen minutes' time.

Mr. R. S. Mott, chairman of the law committee of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association said:

MR. CHAIRMAN:—I have had handed to me copies of three bills. I desire to say that I have examined them slightly. I find in two of these bills there is practically nothing to discuss. One bill, that introduced by Senator Dwyer, Number 117, is the bill upon which the discussion will be had. This bill seeks to amend our present game laws; it is substituted for them. I understand that the game dealers represented here are in favor of this new bill; also that Game Warden Blow is in favor of it. I suggest that we hear first from the game dealer, and then I will speak for the Illinois Sportsmen's Association.

It was here decided that Mr. Geo. W. Barnett, representing the South Water Street commission merchants, should speak first. This was contrary to the original understanding, which was that the sportsmen should open the debate, the commission men follow, then the sportsmen again, then Game Warden Blow, and any others interested.

Mr. Geo. W. Barnett: Gentlemen of the committee, I very much regret that it has fallen to me to make the opening argument, and to speak for the interests of Chicago as represented by the commission merchants, as it has been termed here, and yet, sirs, I feel gratified that our representatives accord us this hearing. We come before you as plain business men. We make no pretensions to legal technicalities. We are men who have been engaged in the business for years and for the purpose of making a livelihood. We are of the common people, so to speak, and men who must necessarily devote their time to matters outside of addressing legislative bodies or attending to legislative matters. We have confidence in the legislature of Illinois. You were elected, gentlemen, by the people to legislate for them, and the chairman has stated distinctly and wisely when he said that you legislate for the full state and not for any one locality.

This question is put before you: We come and ask that this bill that bears the title, "Senate Bill Number 117," in its general principles shall be passed, shall be enacted and become a law of the state of Illinois. It seems to us that it embodies the principles of right and justice—not to any particular one but to everyone within the borders of the state. As it appears to us it protects the game of the state of Illinois absolutely. Its conditions, as we understand them, are stringent and ample for the protection of the game of this state.

There are two or three points that we advocate especially in this matter, and the first, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, is this: We hold that if game is killed at any time within the state of Illinois it should become an article of commerce, and if anyone has a right to convert game into food that food should be utilized and not destroyed. So that if at, any time, anyone in accordance with the provisions of this proposed act shall kill game, it becomes then the privilege and right—that it is the right that that game shall be converted into food and bought and sold just as freely as it is killed. The sportsman starting out at the beginning of the season is at liberty to shoot, kill and destroy as much as he pleases, as much as he is able to, but he claims that it must not, under severe penalties, be disposed of in any shape. The fact, as we understand this, is that it simply preserves the game for sport—that is all. The main provision we advocate is the removing of restrictions that appertain to the handling of game coming from outside the state.

Senator Berry: Mr. Barnett, is it not a fact that this bill, containing the clause "coming from the state of Illinois," will not protect game? With that clause in, may not game be sold the year round, and would it not open the way for Illinois game, as well as game from every state in the Union, to be sold at any time of the year?

Mr. Barnett: I do not understand it so.

Senator Berry: But that is what it means, or, in other words, it can be done without detection, and therefore does not protect game. I think you will concede this.

Mr. Barnett: I do not look at it that way. As I have before said, we are law-abiding citizens, and when we will not sell or handle Illinois game we mean, by that, that we shall do all in our power to protect the game of the state and assist in bringing violators to justice. What more could be asked? We believe that you will see this and legislate for the good of the whole state. We ask you, gentlemen, that this bill shall be reported on these lines so that there shall be the same privilege granted to citizens of the state of Illinois that are accorded to citizens of other states. We hold, further, that the provision that is in this bill for the support of the game warden is a just one—Section 9, I believe—and that it is the right and it is the duty of the state to provide for the support of its servants in a clear, definite and distinct way without making his compensation contingent on fees or fines. When that becomes assured he can act in the interests of the state with perfect freedom and carry out the wishes of the legislators in enacting the laws.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you will please understand that I do not speak of Chicago as entitled to more consideration than any other part of the state. That city is built up by the citizens of Illinois; you have a pride in that city and you cannot help it. The second city on the American continent, the first in the affections of the people of the American continent, we do not believe you will do anything that would be to the injury of that city. This bill is in the interest of the common people—of the industrial classes, and in the interest of those who are poor, as well as our own particular interests. We hold that by the enacting of this bill we shall have opportunities and be placed on the same footing as Eastern c[illegible] That is what we ask, simple justice, and we think [illegible] right to demand this of those who are ap[illegible] elected to legislate for the people of the state [illegible] We can see no reason why this should not be done, this act shall not pass. Pass what penalties you [illegible] for the protection of Illinois game, and I say the game dealers, for whom I have the honor to speak, pledge themselves, and their word is as good as that of any man's on the face of the earth, that they will do all they can to [illegible] law that may be enacted. I do not know [illegible] take [illegible] of my limited time now, but we [illegible] right and as justice at your hands.

[illegible] criticisms on this bill. For four [illegible] of this bill was circulated through the state, and five thousand letters were sent out to invite criticisms and amendments, and every point that was suggested has been incorporated in this bill, so that it does seem to us that we ought to hear from the objectors to the bill and measure so that we may know what objections there may be.

As a matter of right it should be lawful to sell when it is lawful to kill.

We say this legislature has no right to legislate as to foreign game, believing if we protect the game within our own borders, if it makes proper enactments that shall protect that game, that then this body has transacted its functions and done its whole duty. Let us have free and unrestricted commerce in that which is legal in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and other great competing states, and we are sure that you will have transacted business properly and done your duty. I thank you for this opportunity of thus presenting the bill and will merely say in closing, "It should be lawful to sell when it is lawful to kill; we should have unrestricted right to sell game from other states, and the state should pay its servants fixed salaries, and exact faithful performance of their duties."

Mr. R. S. Mott: Gentlemen, I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that we have laws in this state against practising medicine without a license and against selling liquor without a license. That proof of the practice of medicine and selling of liquor is prima facie evidence under our criminal code, and it is for the man who has the best evidence in his possession to present it. Our present game law puts that burden on these South Water Street merchants. That is where the game of Illinois is sold. This bill relieves them from that burden. They know where the game comes from; they can produce their bills of lading and bills of sale, but they want us to come down and determine where the game came from and prove it. That is the meat in the cocoanut of this bill. In discussing this measure I shall address myself to the question of the sale of game. Now, the gentleman says we want the privilege of selling all game killed outside the state of Illinois. If you don't want to sell it prohibit the killing of it entirely, we don't care. I will quote what was said when I examined Mr. Barnett about a week ago. He stated he had been in business for about twenty-five years on South Water Street. I said, "Where did you get your game, Mr. Barnett, fifteen years ago?" "Largely from central Illinois and southern Illinois, and a great deal from St. Louis, Mo. Much game was shipped here from St. Louis." "Do you get any game from Illinois now?" "Oh, no, there is no game in Illinois; it is all shot off." And that is the reason why they are perfectly willing you should pass such a law that no game should be killed in this state. There is no game practically through Illinois. Game, if properly protected, can propagate and grow. They realize the condition of every other country which has not protected its game. Even in India, one of the greatest of game countries, they protect their game. We had no game laws to protect the buffalo. Twenty years ago they were scattered around in Kansas, Texas and other states, but they are all killed off excepting in Montana, Dakota and the National Park, up to 1883. Now we have a little remnant of buffalo in the National Park protected by the United States soldiers. To-day you must go to Idaho to get elk. Take the bighorn sheep. Sixteen years ago, in the Bad Lands and in Missouri, the bighorn sheep were tame; they were not afraid of man and you could approach them. To-day there are a few in the peaks of Colorado—that is all. Now you say we are working for our own interests. I deny it. I tell you that the sportsmen of this country have been instrumental in bringing about nearly all of the game laws put upon the statute books of the various states. We as a class, going out hunting for game, see the wanton destruction of all this game. We go into the states and territories, where two or three years ago game was plentiful and we find none. We know from following the history of that game what the outcome will be. Our sporting papers that we read give us this history of the game laws in other states. We know the result there and we come to you and say for the benefit of the entire people to protect this game. Yet in the interest of the sportsmen we have come to you to ask you to put laws on your books to prohibit the shooting of game. Is that selfishness? We have asked you to impose that restriction for years. Is that selfishness? We say to you to day if you will pass a law absolutely prohibiting the shooting and sale of game of any kind in the state of Illinois, the sportsmen's association will be with you heart and soul.

Now, game was a necessity in the early part of this century. It is now a luxury. Prairie chickens cost $6.25 a dozen in the January market in Chicago, while a few years ago they were from two to three dollars less per dozen. It shows that our game is going; we must stop it. I asked Mr. Barnett where he got his game from during the last few years. He said "Minnesota is cleaned out, only a few deer come down and that is all." Every two or three years you have to go farther west to the remotest districts of our country. Now laws prohibiting the sale of game are absolutely constitutional. They have been found to be so in Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Maine and Idaho. There is nothing unconstitutional that may be urged against the passage of a law here against the wholesale killing of game. I asked Mr. Sloan where his market for game was when Chicago was the greatest game market in the United States? He replied: "Montreal, Canada." Canada says you cannot take a pound of game out of that country. It is keeping its own game and drawing on the United States. Why do we have cold storage warehouses? Because more game is killed in the lawful season than the people want to use. H[illegible]ving it once in cold storage then, under this bill [illegible] all the year round. That [illegible]re, ought to be in its natural [illegible] slaughtered for our South [illegible]merchants who are shipping [illegible]hat is what this bill wants to do. Take our Illinois game; they want to sell that. For years we have said no, and what is the result? Every man knows that the supply of quail has increased in the last few years. The sportsmen stepped up and said "we want a law absolutely prohibiting the killing of quails." Now they talk about a man going out and shooting more game than he can use. The man is a hog who does that. Iowa used to be a good state but now you get nothing there. Maine has an income of three or four million dollars from visiting sportsmen who are allowed to visit there and shoot and pay for the game. Gentlemen, I say this bill is vicious from start to finish. All I want to say that may be argued here is that game, wild game, is the property of the entire people. That when a man goes out and kills it it is his, and he should dispose of it as he sees fit. Nature gave us the land. Is land free? Has not the government stepped in and said this land belongs to the whole people? Air is free, but you cannot enjoy the air over my land without paying for the privilege; you commit a trespass if you come there. And so with game; it belongs to the state. You may kill it but you shall not kill it and sell it. I thank you for your attention.

Mr. Barnett: The gentleman misquotes me as to Illinois game. I said it was shut off.

F. S. Baird: Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee—In appearing before you to-day I do not appear as an officer of any society or association. I simply appear before you as a citizen of Illinois who is interested in the subject of game protection. I have given this matter a great deal of attention as our friends well know. In appearing before you to-day I have no interest in the matter, no more than the protection of game. I have no interest in South Water Street but I merely appear here in the interest of the Illinois game. You will pardon me if I use a little plain language here. Some of you know I am accustomed to that. It does not make any difference where it hits. We are here as a people of the state of Illinois interested in preserving game. In the first place this bill is wrongly entitled. It should be entitled "a bill for the destruction of Illinois and other game in the interest of the game dealers." I will show show you that before I am through. Our law is very plain. The bill presented here, Number 117, extends the time of killing game sixty days. Under our law now you can kill prairie chickens from the fifteenth of September until the first day of November. Under this bill you can do the same up to the first day of January, thereby extending the time for killing the game sixty days. You can also trap game during the entire year. This bill also provides that you can sell game during the entire open season. Now, gentlemen, is that not a bill for the purpose of destroying Illinois game? There are some very peculiar features about this bill. This bill, gentlemen, is one of the finest drawn bills ever introduced in the legislature. It is one of the most iniquitous bills ever introduced in this house. There is not a clause that puts a fine upon the South Water Street game dealer. This bill says you shall place a license here to shoot upon the land of a man, but if a man goes out to shoot a rabbit or quail he is liable to a fine of ten or twenty-five dollars. There is nothing in this bill that provides for South Water Street to obtain a license to sell game. It was not gotten up for that purpose. This bill has a trespass law in it. We have a law here which says if I go on a farm to kill game you may arrest me; you don't have to prove you are the owner of the farm. South Water Street men go to work and in one year pay one dollar for a license, and they have four months to kill your game and sell it on the market. How long will Illinois game last under those circumstances? There are some peculiar ear marks here. There is a provision here that you shall pay the game warden $7,900 a year—for what? (A voice—"fifteen hundred dollars.") You have to pay it; that is absolute. All right, the chief game warden gets fifteen hundred dollars a year. He has eight deputies who get eight hundred dollars apiece. There is not anything here that says what he shall do but draw eight hundred dollars and the chief fifteen hundred dollars. There is no law against it. Gentlemen, there are some peculiar features in this bill, and I am here as a citizen of Illinois and I am responsible for the statements I make. This bill was revised by the attorneys of the South Water Street game dealers, because one of their attorneys told me so. He says it is a good bill for South Water Street; and they put in here a little "sop" for our state game warden. He will get $7,900 for doing nothing. (Voice—Eight wardens.) Gentlemen, I say this is the most vicious bill ever introduced in this house. Here you can sell eggs of robins or other song birds but you cannot kill them. You cannot kill a bird. There is not a fine or penalty against any dealer on South Water Street, but there is a penalty compelling a farmer boy to license his gun before he can shoot. There is also a penalty for trespass. We found out in prosecuting the South Water Street game dealers it was impossible to prove where birds came from. South Water Street cannot do a thing illegal in this bill. This bill repeals every law on your statute book. What are you going to do about it? This is class legislation for one class only. The sportsmen in Illinois are in favor of protecting game. They do not want our present laws repealed. That is the most incomplete bill ever drawn by any man in the world.

There are three things this bill does. It allows South Water Street to sell game all the year round, and allows them to have Illinois game four months in the year, and pays the state wardens $7,900 a year. The game warden was appointed here under the statute to enforce the game laws of the state of Illinois. Is he protecting the game when he asks you to pass a bill so that game can be trapped and sold four months in the year? He says he is a poor man. Very well, he may be a poor man. Then how could he afford to be down here for the past six weeks in the interest of this bill? Who has been paying his expenses?

Senator Fitzpatrick: Mr. Chairman, as this joint committee met here to-day to listen to arguments for and against this bill, and not to listen to personal attacks, attacks on a state officer and unsubstantiated, and as we have another committee meeting at four o'clock, I move that the debate be confined to the bill, else we will have to adjourn without having obtained the information desired.

Chairman Halleck: The gentleman will please confine himself to the bill before the committee.

Mr. Baird: That bill was gotten up by South Water Street men and they got the game warden to come here and introduce it. (A voice, "Prove it!") I understand that a purse of $110 was raised by South Water Street men to pay for printing this bill. So I say this bill is wrongly entitled. It should be a bill entitled for the destruction of the Illinois game and other game in the interest of the game warden. Our present laws are as good as any other state's laws. A man who knows enough to let well enough alone is a pretty smart man. They come down here to ask you to wipe out all our Illinois game laws; in fact to put up a premium here on rascality. Gentlemen, maybe I have taken up my time. These gentlemen know me well, as I have prosecuted them a good many times, and hope, by the aid of God, to do so many more times. If they violate the law they must take the chances. If you pass this bill you cannot repeal it for two years, and by that time everything will be down in Water Street. These men from Water Street came down here to make money. I have no interests here except to protect the game of Illinois. The bill originally was much worse than this bill and it ought to be killed. Before leaving you I wish to say that Mr. Bortree is here and I would thank you to give him a hearing.

Senator Evans: Mr. Chairman, I believe Mr. Barnett asked to have a few minutes to answer any charges made. I move five minutes be granted Mr. Barnett and Mr. Bortree.

Chairman Halleck: Gentlemen, you have heard the motion. Are you ready for the question?

Mr. Baird: I believe five minutes too short.

Several senators and representatives: Question, question!

Chairman Halleck: All in favor of granting each five minutes say aye. Unanimous. Carried.

M. R. Bortree: I will state briefly what I have to say. It was found necessary within the last year or two to form a national game protective association. Such an association was formed in nearly every state in the country, and we now have about two hundred and fifty members. The object of this association is to enforce the laws of every state and to have the legislatures in every state make their laws correspond with those of the surrounding states. (A voice: "Can we get them to do it?") We are accomplishing a great deal of good. Our laws prohibit the sale of game and the exporting of game out of the state. I will say that our friends on South Water Street are doing an unlawful business, and this association is trying to stop this business, and this great state of Illinois should see that the statement made in the Supreme Court decision should be enforced, for in order to protect the game the law must be enforced. Therefore, for the preservation of game we should make strict laws and we should then enforce them. (A voice: "That's so.") They speak about game being shipped out of Chicago. This thing, unless it is stopped, means the total destruction of all our game. Now, the legislation asked for here is backward legislation. The laws are going to be put through and enforced in other states. Our friends in the game business should not be in the game business any longer unless they receive it from the states where it is lawful to receive it from. (Chairman Halleck: "time.") I have much to say to you, but I am sorry I cannot say it, my time having expired.

Game Warden Blow's name was called, and a general hum of voices and a movement for good places to see this official defend himself and explain the bill resulted.

State Game Warden Charles H. Blow: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in appearing before you to-day as a public officer, like yourselves, my motives and interests here are for the benefit of the people of this state. They have been telling you that I introduced a bill before this honorable body allowing the trapping of birds the whole year round, which is not the fact, which every man in this room who can read can prove to his own satisfaction. (Reads from bill, "Section 1 It shall be unlawful at any time of the year to trap, net or ensnare, etc.") Mr. Mott stated that game in cold storage ought to be in its natural haunts. So say I, and that is where I intend to keep it. Prevent its being killed and it won't get into cold storage. That is the basis of this bill, and with eight wardens the game of the state would be amply protected. Mr. Baird stated that the warden's salary would come out of the state treasury; this is not the truth. It would come from the people who derive sport from the killing of state game; he also stated that there is nothing in the bill defining the duties of wardens; wrong again; he also stated you could sell the eggs of robins and other birds. How could you do this when the bill reads you shall "not destroy or molest the nests of or remove or destroy any egg or eggs, etc.?" Gentlemen, why do these people come before you and deliberately tell untruths? I am surprised.

Mr Baird: Mr. Blow, I would like to ask—

Warden Blow: Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

Chairman Halleck: Mr. Blow has the floor, gentlemen, and any question you may wish to ask time will be given you when Mr. Blow is through. Mr. Blow, proceed.

Warden Blow: I have served two years in the game warden's office and have become acquainted with the wants of the people. I have been over every county in this state and have asked the wishes of the people in this matter and have been called upon to serve the people in this capacity. I say, gentlemen, all who are interested in the protection of game, let us harmonize and make laws for the people which we can all obey. I have received several hundred letters, which I shall leave with you, showing the demands of the people, in which one man asks for one thing and another man another thing, and I shall place those letters before this honorable committee if you wish. I am not a lawyer; I am a poor public servant of the people, and cannot use the fine language these men use in attacking me. I say, protect the game alive. Some say give us a warden in every county; I say if I had eight wardens in the state of Illinois under my charge I could protect the game and stop all illegal traffic of game. We must all stick together and legislate for our own interests. I say, gentlemen, this is a serious question; every sportsman, every grocerman and meat market man, and every loyal voter in this state looks to you for a wise game law, which we haven't at present. I do not think I should be branded as a criminal because I come to you asking you to make a law on which we can all harmonize! I claim that the sportsmen have no more right to come down here and demand class legislation than the South Water Street men as game dealers have a right to come and demand the same. I am a public servant like yourselves, and it is for this reason, and in the interest of game protection, that I have been here two days each week for the past six weeks, and not every day of each week as Mr. Baird has stated. Why don't he ask me who pays me to travel all over this great state to arrest violators? and I have been from Cairo to the Wisconsin line; from the Mississippi to the Indiana line. He is not fair in his attack. Anything I can do toward a public benefit I will do, as I am here at your pleasure. Unless the game is protected in the forests alive there will soon be no game. They say you must not use a bird after a certain date, no matter whether killed legally and sold legally; you must not use it in your family or in the hotel; you must not sell it, nor keep it, consequently you have to throw it away.

They talk about the farmer's interests in this bill and the poor farmer boy being taxed. Is there any bill on your law books of this or any other state that protects the farmer's interests better than the one I represent? I say the farmer who legally kills game after having fed it from his produce, if he feels like sending it to the market, as an American citizen, he has a perfect right to do so. I also say that the sportsmen have the latest devices known to science for the extermination of game. They are interested in this subject, to-day, to the extent of saying that they shall go out in the lawfully constituted open season and kill three or four hundred birds, and the pot-hunter, as the farmer is called, or his son, may kill fifty birds with his muzzle-loading gun, but the farmer must not sell one of those birds, because, who says so? Nobody, but a few of these so-called sportsmen. I say they have no right to ask for such class legislation. They must compromise with these people, whom they are against, and prepare a bill which will suit the requirements of the people at large. I care not what salary they pay the wardens, as these suggestions of mine are with pure motives. This is the place where this discussion should take place, and I have no fear of the favorable results of this committee in favor of the people's interests. Make the bill read as you please. What I want is simple justice, not $1,500 a year for the warden, or $800 for my deputies. You can strike out of this bill what you see fit and make up your minds after you have heard both sides of this question what you think is for the best interests of the people. I am not ashamed of my record, and these men have told the world in the press that I was the most efficient officer in the state of Illinois. The Illinois State Sportsmen's Association once indorsed that bill to a man. Is there a man who has arrested as many persons as I have for violating the game laws? I never missed a week during the Summer months but that I arrested and prosecuted ten men, and now they want to blacken my character. Is this the reward a hard-working public servant should receive? It is enough for me to be called a money blood-sucker when I arrest a violator and get the fees. Wherever I have gone in this state there were a lot of people saying all I came for was the fees, not to enforce the laws. Is that pleasant for a man to run up against every time he makes an arrest? I say, pay your wardens, whoever they are, and save them from this disgrace, being called blood-suckers. They have jumped on this bill without reason.

Mr. Chairman, again I say my motives are pure and that I was never a game dealer, neither did I ever belong to the game dealers' association. They are telling me to try and get us a just law. I told them to help me and we will hope that this meeting will prove successful. Let us come down to loyal Americanism and pass such just laws. I thank you for your attention.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am grateful for the five minutes accorded me to close. Previous to this time, there were no objections to the bill under consideration that have reached the game dealers, and now it seems that objections are more technical than anything else.

I regret exceedingly that the commission interests have been so wantonly attacked, for certainly there has nothing been said that could warrant such an attack, which, of itself, falls to the ground, its own answer. This bill has been attacked simply because it has been favored by the game dealers of South Water Street—certainly an unjust accusation. It has been claimed that a fund has been raised for the purpose of pushing through this bill. We admit we subscribed $110, I think it was, to help pay the printer and the postage for sending five thousand copies of the proposed bill to as many sportsmen throughout the state, inviting comment and amendment. Several hundred replies, as you have heard, were received to this. We do not deny our part in this matter—it has been open and aboveboard. We claim only our rights, what we are assured belong to us. We will not stoop to recrimination. We are citizens of the state of Illinois and you legislate for the entire state. We again reiterate our position, we claim "that if the sportsmen have a right to kill game, of this state, we have a right to sell it." Make the restriction as to killing and selling run parallel, and we will cheerfully obey the law, but we do not believe you have a right to legislate in favor of a privileged class. We believe we have the right to sell game from other states and thus be placed on an equality with other large cities, and finally we believe that the great state of Illinois should pay its servants for services performed and that they should not be compelled to depend upon fines and fees for their compensation.

And now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, one word further, and I have done. Sneers and insinuations have been made that South Water Street is offering a premium for violation of law for malicious slaughter of game, and one would almost think that a game dealer was guilty of every crime in the decalog; but, sir and gentlemen, I say to you, without fear of successful contradiction, that while there may be, and probably are, some engaged in business on that street who are not honest, I hold that as a class, those men are the peers for honesty and integrity of any business or profession on the face of God's green earth, and I resent, with all the vigor of which I am capable, the imputations that have been cast upon the men of Chicago and South Water Street here at this time. I make no exception when I claim that we are the "peers" of any profession or class of business. I thank you, gentlemen, for your patient hearing.

While Mr. Baird and others were seeking recognition to speak, Senator Fitzpatrick moved to adjourn; Chairman Halleck put the question, which was carried unanimously, and the question of game legislation in Illinois hangs in the balance.

St. Paul, Minn.

Editor American Field:—I understand that a bill has just been introduced in the Illinois legislature, backed up by the game dealers of Chicago, to make legal the sale of game during the entire year in that city provided the game is not killed in the limits of the state.

If this bill should pass it would be a fine law, would it not? The result would be that the market-shooters of Minnesota and the Dakotas would shoot at all seasons of the year and smuggle their game through to Chicago. I think Chicago is wide open enough now, without keeping an open market for game, and just so sure as this bill becomes a law Minnesota and the Dakotas will get up and pass a bill requiring every non-resident to pay a license of $25 per season for shooting in these states, and when he takes out that license to also make an affidavit that he will not sell a head of the game he kills, and to give a bond that this agreement will be carried out. This can be done, and we in the Northwest will see that it is done. Chicago and Boston always have been the curse of game protection, but it hardly seems possible that the sportsmen of Illinois will allow such a bill to pass.

DEER SHOOTING IN NORTHERN MICHIGAN

BY J. MC. N.

The splendidly written and exceedingly interesting article in the Christmas number of the American Field captioned "Deer Hunting in Northern Michigan" has made me reminiscent. Besides, I am apprehensive lest the writer's panegyric upon our devastated pine forests will lead the reader to believe that the buck and doe of former years have shared the same sad fate of the "shanty boy" and become a memory.

The writer of the article I refer to is a very dear friend of mine. In his company many of the happiest hunting hours of my life have been passed. One of the finest trophies in my collection is the head of a magnificent buck, with the largest and most perfect pair of antlers that I have ever seen, that fell a victim to the unerring aim of G. H. S— at a distance and under circumstances which if related here would be cataloged by the credulous with the stories of Sinbad.

It will surprise many of your readers to learn that although the slaughter of deer in this vicinity by pot-hunters, deer-butchers for lumber camps, Indians and others, has been as outrageously large as it has been criminally illegal for the past ten years, yet deer were never so plentiful here as they were the past season. Over a score were shot within a very few miles of the city limits, and had the redoubtable "Jim, the bear hunter," been with us last Fall he could have glutted himself with the gore of large game and thus rejuvenated a reputation which must now be suffering from the paresis of old age. No less than twenty bears were killed within a radius of twenty-five miles of this city last Fall.

One pleasant day last October, G. B. G—and the writer took a run to a favorite place some three and a half miles from the city, looking for woodcocks. There is a large swamp eighty rods from the clearing. In crossing the "slashing" a large female bear with a half-grown cub started up and struck out for the swamp in a lope which was at once brisk and business-like. Four charges of No. 8 shot and a howl of pain were the only courtesies exchanged before Bruin and her babe disappeared in the dark recesses of the swamp. A friend, an ex-police judge, known to the sporting fraternity as the "Foreign Potentate," has a farm about three miles from the city. A corner bordering on the swamp has a slaughter house erected thereon. The keeper complained of losing much meat, and suspecting a neighbor, had desired his arrest. The judge investigated. He set a large bear trap, nicely covered, near the swamp entrance. Next morning he went out to the farm and found a fine young bear struggling to get free and howling furiously with pain. He furnished his friends with bear meat the Sunday following and this story:

Early on the morning of November 1 last, G. B. G—, Revs. F— and O— and the writer started for Hubbard Lake on a general hunting expedition. The distance is about thirty miles from the city. We had a large two-horse wagon loaded with guns, ammunition, provender and camp equipage. We had had no snow and the weather was of the Indian Summer variety. The ride to the lake over old "tote" roads and through a sparsely settled farming district was made in a little over seven hours. Arriving at the lake we were met by O. C—, an old hunter. We selected one of the old lumbering camps for our dormitory, and O. C—'s tent for our dining-room. Just before dark, having concluded to go fish spearing that night, I took a run out with O. C—, after some pitch pine roots. This, when split and inclosed in a large wire net at the head of a jackstaff, is far superior to our modern gasoline jacklight, on the water. While O. C— was cutting the pine, I walked up an old, unused "tote" [illegible] shotgun, flushed eight and got five [illegible] I was informed that a mile distant [illegible] grove of black oak, and that an hour [illegible] of grouse came there for an evening [illegible] this to be literally correct.

Hubbard Lake is as handsome a sheet of water as our country affords. It lies like a dimple upon the rugged face of the earth. Upon all sides are towering bluffs and hills which look for all the world like miniature mountains. Its waters are pure and sparkling, filled with bass, pike and pickerel, and, curiously and wonderfully enough, the handsomest whitefish I ever saw. No one can tell how they came there, but there they are in abundance. The lake is nine miles long and four miles wide, and was once the scene of the heaviest lumbering operations of our now millionaire lumbermen. It is a picturesque location of the finest fishing grounds in the Summer, and the best grouse and deer shooting in the Fall, that is to be found in the lower peninsula of Michigan. Around the foot of the lake are a score of large logging camps, deserted and gradually yielding to the decay of time. Barns and feeding places, and a great dam at the head of the North Branch of Thunder Bay River which cost thousands of dollars, and which was used for "flooding the drive" in the Spring, a crumbling roadbed nine miles long, over which powerful locomotives once drew millions of white pine; the wreck and skeleton of a large tug once known as the "Bull of the Woods," and used for towing great rafts across the lake, now bleached and blackened by sun and storm; these are all that are left of the magnificent forests of pine which the greed and avarice of civilization pillaged for pelf.

Sitting around our campfire smoking, after a short turn around the lake with a jacklight, during which time G. B. G— demonstrated his utter inability to handle a spear, O. C— informed us that we would start at 4 o'clock the next morning over the north bluffs, for "Indian Joe" and his father, "Broken Jaw," camping hard by, had seen many "signs" and had secured two saddles there the day before.

Long before daybreak we had stowed away some nice venison steaks and were on our way to the bluffs, following the runway. Six miles from camp, in the heart of this barren waste of wilderness, we came upon a little log hut on the bank of a creek. Inside and already astir was the hermit of these forests, known as "Uncle Billy." Here he lives all alone, year after year, ten miles from the nearest human being, and practically forty miles from civilization. Eighty-six years of age, ruddy of cheek, with long hair as white as snow, a bunk, a bed, two old chairs, a table, a stove, a few cooking utensils, an old breech loading shotgun and a Winchester rifle; a dog, a cat and and six chickens (all living in the house), constitute "Uncle Billy's" chattels and companions. He has not been to the city for over six years, and has no desire to. For months at a time he never sees a human face. Twice a year one of our millionaire lumbermen, for whom "Uncle Billy" had worked for many years, sends him a load of supplies. He wants nothing, he says, but the solitude of the forest. He has shot many a deer from the window of his cabin, and complained to us that recently they had destroyed many of the vegetables he was growing in a little garden a few rods away.

The day was unproductive, save in "signs," which were disgustingly plentiful. Returning just at dusk, we took a turn at the "oaks" for grouse. Unfortunately for our bag, G. B. G— got in the lead, and the terrific cannonading which greeted our ears for an hour previous to our arrival sounded like the driving in of a skirmish line previous to a great battle. Father O— insisted that "dozens must be killed," but I was not so sanguine. An estimate of George's destructiveness, based upon some experience, did not conjure up any visions of "dozens" or parts of dozens to my mind; I was sure that the ratio of escape to the ratio of capture, like the divine injunction to the lawgivers, was as ninety-nine to one; and I was not mistaken. Arriving, we found George laboring under much excitement, and, with a vise-like grip upon two dead birds, he told of the many he had killed and could not find, and of the countless numbers he had hit which he knew were dead somewhere. Before returning we secured a dozen fine birds and voted the day not altogether lost.

Sitting around our campfire that night, discussing the plans of the morrow, a rider came to the door with a telegram for Rev. F—, bringing it over from Ossineke, the nearest railway station, about twenty miles away. It announced the sad and sudden death of his brother, and filled our little camp with gloom and grief. It was decided that Rev. F— and George should leave early the next morning, Father O— and the writer to remain and finish the hunt. We were sorry to lose George because he was the only professional hunter in the party. As a game architect he was a cyclonic success. He could [illegible] artistic plans and specifications for the destruction of more game than would supply the great [illegible] Chicago. It is well for the game that his murderous ful "hunts" were all performed after dark and around the campfire. Nor was he easily discouraged, for, a [illegible] emptying both barrels at an easy bird, or bombarding his Winchester a bold buck that questioned his [illegible] than one-half of the road, with barren re- [illegible] smile a sinister sort of a smile and [illegible] wang to his voice, "well, you [illegible] way." We remained four days longer. [illegible] days we had splendid sport. Although the rain tied us up for nearly two days, we managed to shoot and hang up a splendid buck and a nice fat doe, and brought home forty-eight of the finest grouse that ever delighted the eye of a hunter.

We went again later on and were even more successful, many amusing incidents occurring which may, perhaps, be related at another time.

The woods and plains last Fall were filled with hunters, and hundreds of deer were killed and shipped from this point. Venison sold in our markets during the open season for from five to six cents per pound, and the finest grouse were sold for thirty cents per pair. A settler from the Hubbard Lake country told me last week that his field was filled with deer tracks freshly made, which reminds me of what I originally started out to say, that deer are more plentiful to-day in this vicinity than they were years ago.

MARYLAND SPORTSMEN AROUSED

The sportsmen of Maryland have at last become aroused to the fact that if something is not done by them to put a stop to the terrible slaughter of ducks that takes place on the Chesapeake Bay every year by non-resident sportsmen, there will soon be no ducks there for anyone to shoot and seeing this they will endeavor to get their legislature to pass a law making present abuses impossible. Among those from Baltimore interested in the movement are ex-Mayor Latrobe, J. D. Mallory, William Linthicum, James Malone, Edward Hall, James Busey, Charles Bancroft, Jerome Durham, and members of the Carroll and Spesutia Island clubs.

A writer speaking of the law as it now stands says: "The present law permits the shooting of wild ducks from November 1 to March 31, and prohibits fowling at any other time except from the shore. On the Susquehanna flats, near Havre de Grace, where the canvas-backs, redheads, and other ducks gather to feed on wild celery, fowling is restricted within certain lines and limited to certain days of the week and to certain hours of the day. Elsewhere gunners may shoot every day in the week. As the law stands, anyone, whether a resident of the state or not, may, on payment of $20 for a license for the season, have the use of an outfit which consists of a sink box, either double or single, and may put out as many decoys as he sees fit. At the opening of the season market gunners pay their $20 assessment and place their outfits on the flats. On November 1, the opening day, wealthy sportsmen from other cities appear on the flats in their 75 or 100 foot steam yachts, and for $150 a day for the three days' shooting in the first week secure every outfit possible. Then the slaughter commences, and it is a poor shot that cannot secure from 100 to 200 ducks to an outfit. Not satisfied with the three days' shooting, these sportsmen get up steam on their yachts and, during the intervening days, follow the ducks out into Chesapeake Bay and bang at everything with feathers upon it. Many have been the complaints of the local gunners about these invasions, and they have been especially loud from those who pay high rentals for shores.

"The next Maryland legislature will be asked to pass a law prohibiting any boat from visiting the state waters with gunners on board or the firing of a gun from the deck of a craft not owned by a resident of the state. The proposed law will also limit the number of licenses issued, and will provide that licenses can be used only by the persons in whose names they are made out; and that shooting on the various waters of the state shall be restricted to three days in the week as on the Susquehanna flats. It is proposed that private watchmen or detectives shall be employed to arrest night shooters, men in sneak boats, or visitors from any other city or state. Those interested in the passage of such a law are now at work sounding the opinions of candidates for political offices.

"It has been estimated by a resident of the flats that there are no fewer than twenty-five New York sportsmen on the flats each day during the season shooting out of sink boats, blinds, or from the decks of sloops and yachts There is not less than $250,000 invested in rentals, club houses, and outfits by the residents of this state, and they will make every effort to protect their interests.

"The Maryland sportsmen are determined to push the law through the next legislature, and if they succeed, outsiders, as in the oyster-dredging business, will be forced to look elsewhere for their sport or livelihood.

"It has been said by many that the scarcity of good ducks is due to the appearance of the big German carp in the [illegible] last few years. The supporters [illegible] the carp looks upon the wild [illegible] vas-back loves to live, as a dainty [illegible] stroyed the entire growth of [illegible] arnes, who has spent the last forty years on the Susquehanna flats, says that this theory is entirely untrue. The carp is never found on the flats or in shallow water, where the celery grows. 'It is these big steam yachts,' says Mr. Barnes, 'that follow the ducks all over Chesapeake Bay that have been the cause of driving them away.'

"A meeting of those interested in the proposed law will be held shortly, and a permanent organization effected to urge the passage of the bill to prevent non-residents of the state from shooting."

THE PROPOSED INDIANA GAME LAW

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It was with much dismay that I read Mr. Hyatt L. Frost's communication in last week's AMERICAN FIELD, for I fear it may prove disastrous to the plans I had laid as set forth in the same issue. I had hoped to have the several members of the legislature receive a large number of letters urging the passage of those bills, and I fear that the communication of Mr. Frost may prevent some from writing, thinking it of no use now that the measures are dead. But they are not dead!

Mr. Frost wrote me that he had sent said article to the AMERICAN FIELD, he having obtained his information from some newspaper. Upon receipt of his letter I hied myself to the State House, where, by the way, most of my time has been spent during the last two weeks, there to learn from the committee that no action had yet been taken upon the bills in question, and I was again assured that no action would be taken until I was given a hearing. I am unable to say when this will be, but at an early date. Mr. Frost is right, however, when he states that the support has not been what it should have been. House Bill 146 is, at this date, in statu quo. I have done everything possible to stop it entirely, and I do not think it will pass.

There seems to be a misunderstanding among northern sportsmen about the snipes and woodcocks. These measures, as they now stand, I should hardly recognize as the originals. There would be no law protecting, at any time, snipes or plovers; woodcocks will come in season July 1, squirrels July 1 to December 1, and prairie chickens September 1. It will be unlawful to sell any native birds—quails, grouse, pheasants, prairie hens, or wild turkeys—at any time.

The bill to protect fish provides a close season for black bass, during which period it is unlawful to have any in possession for any purpose. It provides that it shall be unlawful to "take fish in any manner in any of the waters of Indiana except by the usual mode of angling, i. e., with rod, line and fishhook, artificial fly, spoon spinner, minnow, or other lure or bait; or with hand line, or set lines, either of the two last named to have attached thereto no other device with which to catch fish than plain baited fishhooks."

The fish and game commissioner bill abolishes the office of Commissioner of Fisheries, and provides the office as set forth in the title, giving him police powers and authorizes him to confer the same upon such deputies as he may desire. Brother sportsmen of Indiana, send in your communications to your representative at once, mentioning numbers and titles of bills, as published last week.

I. WALTER SHARP.

EDITOR AMEICAN FIELD:—I was mistaken in stating in last week's AMERICAN FIELD that Mr. Sharp's three fish and game bills had been killed. I had known that the bills were in the hands of the Committee on Rights and Privileges and read the statement that this committee had slaughtered thirteen bills on January 31, and the principal ones related to schemes for the propagation of fish and game. Just after reading this statement in one of the Indianapolis dailies, I received a letter from Mr. Sharp in which he expressed grave doubts as to whether the bills would get out of the committee favorably reported, and indicated that he was discouraged; consequently I had no doubt that it was his bills that had been killed in the committee. I am glad to say, though, that a recent letter shows much hopefulness on his part.

STRICTER ENFORCEMENT OF THE GAME LAW NECESSARY

WASHINGTON, D. C.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I read with surprise the article by Chas. H. Lerch, of Easton, Pa., in the January 19 issue of the AMERICAN FIELD. That the gentleman is sincere and well-meaning in his effort to preserve game birds I have no doubt, but his proposition "that the nests of game birds must not be molested and the eggs must not be taken from them even for scientific purposes," and "that the term 'for scientific purposes' be stricken from the laws," is as unjust as it is absurd.

The proposition assumes three ideas that are essentially false: First, that the naturalist has no rights which the sportsman is bound to respect; second, that the naturalist has no interest in the preservation of game; and, third, that such a proposition, enacted into law, would favor such preservation to an appreciable degree.

It would seem that Mr. Lerch is unfamiliar with the act of May 14, 1889, which provides for the collection of birds and eggs for scientific purposes, and hedges the granting of such privilege with such safeguards as to effectually prevent improper parties from obtaining it. I am not in favor of indiscriminate collecting by boys merely for the sake of collecting, and to the detriment of the feathered tribe, but there are those whose work in this line is on a truly scientific basis and perfectly legitimate, who do not abuse the privilege of collecting, and to whom the denial of the privilege would be most unjust. In my own collecting, in which I have entered almost every county in the western half of Pennsylvania, I have never yet found it necessary to take the eggs of any game bird, nor to shoot the birds themselves out of season; and I assert without fear of successful contradiction that the number of game and wild birds sacrificed by those holding regularly authorized certificates from the county prothonotaries, entitling them to collect for strictly scientific purposes, is infinitesimal compared with the number wantonly destroyed by so-called sportsmen—in reality pot-hunters—who shoot out of season, to say nothing of those who obey the law. What is needed is not prohibition of the collecting privilege, but stricter enforcement of the law as it stands.

In regard to the killing of wild birds a most egregious blunder exists in the act of May 14,, 1889, referred to above, being no less than the omission of an alternative penalty of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine imposed. Game Warden J. W. Hague, of Pittsburg, says that this has rendered the law practically inoperative so far as it relates to non-game birds, and that he hopes to have the defect remedied by the present legislature.

THE CHOICE OF A GUN

LOUISIANA, MO

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It is with pleasure that I assure I. Jim, of Oil City, Pa., that if he selects as his choice of gun an L. C. Smith he will never have cause to regret it. Having owned nearly all the standard guns of both home and foreign manufacture, and having devoted years to shooting, I believe I am competent to choose intelligently.

The main features in a good gun are simplicity, durability, shooting qualities and balance. All these points are embodied in the Smith gun, it standing alone in point of never shooting loose. The safety on the Smith gun is the simplest and best, either automatic or independent, and as to one not being able to cock the gun without a key (I. Jim's objection), why the forearm can be used much easier. By clamping the stock under the right arm, applying foreend as though on gun, and giving a downward pressure, the tumblers can be brought to cock. I have one of these guns which has been in use for over three years, and I have fired about twenty thousand loads of nitro powder through it without a snap or one penny spent for repairs, and to-day it is as tight and sound as a new gun. This is a record to be proud of, and one the writer has never seen equaled.

J. W. BARRE.

HONOLULU, HAWAII.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In the AMERICAN FIELD of December 22, 1894, I. Jim, in speaking of the L. C. Smith gun says that he does not like to carry a key around to cock the gun with should the hammers be snapped down.

I have used this make of gun for years and I think them the best guns made. I never have any trouble in cocking the gun to put the barrels on. Take a pocket knife, put the blade under one of the cranks and over the other, press up on handle of knife and the lock is easily cocked. Reverse the position of knife and cock the other lock and there you are. The gun can also be cocked by the fore end, or by pressing the cranks against a block of hardwood and bearing down on stock.

NOTES

By reason of this remarkable old-time Winter, with the temperature hanging around zero, I have no doubt but what it has destroyed thousands of quails. By special inquiry I learn that many frozen quails have been found in the upper Ohio Valley. Many of our sportsmen in and about Wheeling have taken the precaution to order live quails, which they have arranged with farmers in different localities to take care of for them until the killing weather is over and then liberate them, and the result of this action will be that the sportsmen who have invested their money this way will have the pleasure next Fall of knowing where they can get some sport within a reasonable distance of their homes. If sportsmen generally would follow this plan, we would never hear of the general scarcity of quails, which is so often complained of after severe Winters. I have done this for several years and find the results to be very gratifying, as wherever a few pairs of quails have been liberated in the latter part of March I have never failed to find from two to four good bevies within an eighth of a mile of the same location in November, and as it is seldom that quails are liberated on posted land, the result is that all gentlemen sportsmen are benefited thereby. I always make it a point to inform the farmer exactly what the game laws are, and I notice they take great pleasure in seeing that no game is killed during the close season, but order pot-hunters off of their places double-quick. There are plenty of live quails to be had from different dealers, and a few dozen will produce large results. I hope to hear that many of the sportsmen in the upper Ohio Valley have done the same as I have and thus help to keep quails here in fair numbers.

Wheeling, W. Va. G. O. S.

THE old adage that "where there's a will there's a way" is pretty thoroughly demonstrated by the dealers here in illegal game. They take an egg case, put in a couple of racks of eggs, then fill in the intervening space to within a few inches of the top with trapped or illegally shot quails, then put in a couple more layers of eggs, nail up the case and ship to the commission man in St. Louis, Chicago or New York. One shipper here, who has been practising this deception, consigned his goods to the Hogan Commission Co., North 3rd Street, St. Louis. He buys all the birds he can get and never sells any here, which is good evidence that he has a market for them somewhere else. I think he also ships to New York; but there are two or three of us camping on his trail and he will have to be smarter than I think he is if we do not trap him. Venison has been sold illegally by a party here and he will have to answer to the grand jury of the county for the misdemeanor. Why it is that men who, as a rule, are law-abiding in every other respect think it all right to violate the game law just so they are not caught at it is more than I can explain. The game law is as much a law as any law on our statute book, and should be respected by all decent people, but I am sorry to say that down here it is not, though the people are paying more attention to the law than they did five or ten years ago.

Siloam Springs, Ark. GEO. ADAMS.

THE Fish and Game Commissioners of New Jersey have had introduced into their state legislature five separate bills for the protection of fish and game, four of the five relating to fish exclusively. In the game bill the open seasons are as follows: Hares, rabbits, quails, ruffed grouse, gray, black or fox squirrels, European pheasants, European partridges, grouse and woodcocks, October 31 to December 15, inclusive: penalty for violation $20; snipes, reedbirds, railbirds and marshhens, August 31 to December 15, inclusive; penalty $20; upland plovers or doves, August 1 to September 30, inclusive; penalty same as above. Song and insectivorous birds are protected the year round. Destroying the nests or eggs of any wild bird is punishable by a fine of $20 for each and every nest disturbed. Persons hunting geese, ducks, brants, or other web-footed wildfowl must place their boat, blind, sinkbox or other floating vessel used for such purpose at least one hundred feet from any bank, marsh, meadow bar, or seaweeds, and must do their shooting between one hour before sunrise and one hour before dark from no other craft or boat, if such be used, than one propelled by one or more paddles. The open season for geese, ducks, brants, etc., is from August 31 to April 21. Trapping, snaring and netting of any game bird is prohibited, and a fine of $20 is provided for shooting on Sunday.

FOR about three weeks past we have had the coldest weather I have seen since my residence in the state, and I have been in Texas forty-one years. I do not know how the birds have stood it, but fear that it has been very trying on them. I left home the last of October for Montague County, where I generally do my shooting. I went through the country in my buggy, taking with me six dogs; was gone a month. I had beautiful weather, found birds quite plentiful, and had a nice time of it, with the exception of having to worry over two gunshy dogs. I can break a dog of this fault, but life is too short, and there are too many dogs, and rather than be annoyed, I think it best to give all such a load of shot at short range. Unless a dog possesses superior merit otherwise, it is hardly worth one's time to break him of this fault. I was located about five miles east of the Fort Worth & Denver Railroad and stopped with a very nice family. Everything was as neat as a pin, no children to annoy, and the cooking was of the very best. It seems now that I can taste the nice biscuit, butter, sausage and other good things that Miss Mattie and Miss Vashti Fryer would prepare. I live in the hope of repeating the trip next Fall. Long live the AMERICAN FIELD, the best sportsman's paper on the continent.

Dallas, Tex. MUZZLELOADER.

I WISH to second the suggestion made recently in the AMERICAN FIELD by Mr. G. R. Rucker, that Mr. Armin Tenner write a book for sportsmen. I have followed, very closely, his reports in the AMERICAN FIELD on the various powders, shells, wads and primers, in the exhaustive tests conducted by him, and have been impressed with his manifest abilty and the spirit of fairness shown toward manufacturers. He has given the sportsmen of the country a fund of valuable information that no one else has supplied, and I feel certain that a book embodying the reports of his many scientific tests of loads and guns would be greatly appreciated by the shooting fraternity. As the suggestion first came from Mr. Rucker I will not dispute his right to buy the first copy of such a book, but will ask Mr. Tenner to book my order for the second copy to leave the press, if he will only write the book.

Lincoln, Neb. J. H. AGER.

I HAVE purchased an expert trap and some Blue Rock targets and am going to organize a gun club here, believing that such an organization will help in seeing that our game laws are respected. I have been a regular reader of the AMERICAN FIELD for the last five years and do not see how I could get along without it. If more of our sportsmen read it regularly they would have more respect for the game laws, for its teachings are wholesome; and the matter of sportsmanship is presented to one in such a firm and dignified manner that one begins to think and act in keeping with what he has read before he is hardly aware of it. Let the editor persevere in his work of making sportsmen out of game-hogs, pot-shooters and market-hunters and in years to come the sportsmen of this country will bless the name of the AMERICAN FIELD, and also that of its present editor.

Siloam Springs, Ark. GEO. ADAMS.

A BILL has been introduced into the Pennsylvania legislature, from Lycoming County, providing that the open season for deer be limited to one month, the month of October. Considering the sadly decimated numbers of this noble animal in this state there can be no doubt of the wisdom of such a law. Also, in connection with game depletion, I regret to say that the weather of the last two weeks has played frightful havoc with our birds. If reports be true, I fear that many quail and pheasant hunters will return home from their next Fall's crusade empty handed. Now, if ever, does the game of this state need rigid, vigorous protection, for the "surplus" has been reduced at a most alarming rate, due to no small extent to the lack of a conscience by those hunting it.

Pittsburg, Pa. C. A. R.

A FARMER living near Sioux Falls, S. D., drove into that town a few days since with sixty prairie chickens in his sleigh which he sold to a marketman. While he was waiting for his money he noticed a member of the Sioux Falls Gun Club talking very earnestly with the man to whom he had sold the chickens, and supposing that the conversation was in reference to the birds and the illegality of having them in possession at this season of the year, he slipped out of the market and, jumping into his sleigh, turned the heads of his horses homeward, and started out of town at a lively pace. The gun club will make an effort to obtain the farmer's name and if it can be had will prosecute him to the full extent of the law. The marketman is also in hot water, for if the gun club men choose to proceed against him they can also have him fined heavily.

MR. WILLIS H. OSTRANDER of Merced, Cal., has invented a double-barrel, breech-loading shotgun which holds four cartridges in position for immediate use. A company has been formed in San Francisco, of which Judge Currey is president, and Thos. O'Brien secretary, with works at Boston, Mass., for the manufactre of the gun. The gun is said to be as symmetrical as the ordinary double barreled breech-loader and weighs less than eight pounds. The ejecting device is said to work perfectly under the most trying circumstances, and with the two shells in the magazine the gun can be carried in perfect safety, yet be ready for use at any moment. With interchangeable barrels the gun can be made into a rifle, making it available for all kinds of game. Sportsmen who have examined the gun are very favorably impressed with it.

MR. CHAS. PAYNE, of Wichita, Kan., passed through Chicago on Monday last, en route to New York, with thirty deer, all young except two, that he had sold to a party to be shipped to London, England, to be used in a private park. The deer were nicely crated, a pair in each crate, and Mr. Payne says if they are fed and cared for according to instructions that he will give on his arrival in New York, he sees no reason why the entire lot should not cross the water and be in good health on their arrival in London.

WE had splendid quail shooting last Fall, and lots of large bevies and a great many small ones were left over; but we have about eighteen inches of snow and this zero weather is rapidly killing birds off. Every day the farmers report finding dead quails—sometimes whole bunches frozen. A few farmers report the birds eating [illegible] their stock, so we will have some few [illegible]

Astoria, Ill.

A JOINT meeting of the director[illegible] Sportsmen's Association and a [illegible] Water Street was held at the Sh[illegible] House, Chicago, last Tuesday evening, for the purpose of agreeing upon a compromise game bill for Illinois. The prospects are favorable for such a measure, and a final meeting was called for Friday, February 22, at 2 p. m., when a bill satisfactory to all is anticipated.

LAST week Saturday a box of snowbirds was seen in front of a South Water Street, Chicago, commission house. Game Warden Blow was notified and he went at once to the place designated, and although he searched the premises thoroughly no birds could be found. The party had probably been informed that he would be prosecuted and put the birds out of reach of the warden in time to save himself.

ONE day last week Philip Henrici, a Chicago restaurant keeper at No. 108 Randoph Street, was arrested on complaint of Mr. M. R. Bortree, president of the National Game Bird and Fish Protective Association, for having quails in his possession for the purpose of selling. Mr. Henrici gave bond and his case was continued until February 20.

WEEK before last I went out for a rabbit hunt and succeeded in getting eight. During my tramp I found six prairie chickens and a large number of quails frozen to death. The prairie chickens were all found within a circle of not more than twenty-five yards in diameter.

Champaign, Ill. HENRY BEHRENS.

MR. HACKENBURG, a member of the Pennsylvania legislature, a few days since offered a resolution, which was adopted, that 10,000 copies of the new game law of the state be printed for general distribution throughout the state.

GAME is still abundant in this section, especially quails. There are also deer, ducks, rabbits, squirrels and turkeys. All sportsmen are welcome.

Hobgood, N. C. S. W. EVERITT.

WE have had an unusually severe Winter here and I fear it has killed many of our quails. Partridges, owing to the illegal snaring that has been done, are scarce.

OPINIONS ON FOXHOUNDS

BALTIMORE, MD.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—If Mr. Avent was seeking notoriety when he wrote the article which appeared in the AMERICAN FIELD of November 24 under the above caption he certainly must have achieved it; but it is notoriety of a kind that a sportsman (in the proper sense of the word) would eschew. I think the many readers of your hunting columns must have held one and the same opinion on that article by the time they had waded through it—unless they became disgusted and passed on to other and entertaining matter. Mr. Avent's article was not even interesting, except to show how hard he can "blow" when given liberty to do so. And Mr. Avent must not blame those of us who have never met him and can only judge him by his writings if we size him up as the worst kind of a "blowhard," who, not content with singing the praises of his own, will belittle others' hounds in the hope of deluding your readers into thinking his are something superlative. No doubt [illegible] he was working in a fine lot of free adver[illegible] little runty black and tans (that is about the [illegible] refers to other people's hounds), but he was give[illegible] rope, and I should think anyone who read that [illegible] would fight shy of purchasing hounds from Mr. Avent. A ten-dollar hound would be apt to be described in such glowing terms that it would appear (to anyone unacquainted with Mr. Avent's very flowery style) cheap at a hundred.

However, in reading Mr. Avent's latest contribution, in reference to his jousting with Mr. Thos. Hitchcock, I have come to the charitable conclusion that Mr. Avent must not be censured too severely; surely he cannot help exaggerating and magnifying, and does not realize that he is so doing. He must be of an excitable disposition, and when writing for the AMERICAN FIELD he probably gets so worked up that his effervescing enthusiasm draws a very long bow. There are some men who can romance and exaggerate to a marvelous degree and yet never hurt anyone's feelings or make one feel disgusted, but the article in the AMERICAN FIELD of November 24 stamps its author as not one of that class.

Let us turn to Mr. Avent's article in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 12, and pick out some of his idiotically extravagant statements. He says of Mr. Hitchcock's horses: "His hunters are all thoroughbreds of the very best blood, and some of them are the most noted racers and jumpers in America. He races them all the Summer and Fall and hunts them during the Winter after the hounds, so that they are always in the pink of condition." Allow me to say that Mr. Hitchcock's hunters are not "thoroughbreds of the very best blood," though they are undoubtedly good hunters; also they are not noted racers, not a single one of them—a hunter in a flat race (except one for such a class of horses) with thoroughbreds would be worse off than Willis against Hunter, and there is not one of the horses Mr. Avent names that is within fifty pounds of a really first-class steeplechaser—but I repeat that they are good hunters; also, Mr. Hitchcock does not race them all Summer and Fall, though he runs one occasionally at little semi-private meetings run under the Hunt and Pony Racing Association's rules; also, Mr. Hitchcock knows too much to treat horses in the manner described by Mr. Avent; also, if horses were so treated they would never be "in the pink of condition," far from it, they would be so infernally stale they would not be worth throwing a leg over. I do not suppose your readers are deeply interested in Mr. Hitchcock's horses, but I have taken up the remarks concerning them just to show what a splendid romancer Mr. Avent is. I dare say those who know him never pay any attention to what he writes.

Mr. Avent is quite right when he says he expects Mrs. Hitchcock is one of the best lady riders in America, but when he says "she can ride any kind of a thoroughbred horse over all kinds of jumps in a skillful manner" he credits her with being able to perform miracles, and nothing less. There are some thoroughbreds that no human being could ride "over all kinds of jumps;" and there are some that forty demons could not make jump. No doubt Mrs. Hitchcock was riding a clever hunter and jumped some fences, and as she did not fall off and the horse did not fall down Mr. Avent (who probably had never before seen a good lady rider fencing on a thoroughly trained hunter) was astounded and rushed into one of his usual wildly extravagant statements. But Mr. Avent surpassed even himself when he said that a lady was knocked senseless for five or ten minutes and then got up and demanded a horse upon which to continue the chase. Just think of it! Upon my word I think that is the most absurdly extravagant statement I ever laid eyes on. "Five or ten minutes." What a beautiful disregard for time! Five minutes, or ten minutes, what does it matter? What difference is there between five minutes and ten minutes to a writer like Avent? What's the odds, if twelve or fifteen seconds are stretched to five minutes or ten? Pshaw, such trifles do not disturb an Avent Let us divide the time exactly at seven minutes and a half, then let the reader sit in a chair and do nothing but watch a clock while seven minutes and a half pass away, and then let him ask himself whether man or women would be likely, after being knocked unconscious for that space of time, to get up and ask for a horse to follow hounds with. Although Mr. Avent may not know the difference between five and ten minutes, he ought to know the difference between seconds and minutes; there is as much or more difference as there is between hunters and racehorses.

It is a good thing Mr. Avent thinks it is "useless to try to explain to Mr. Smith how such hounds as old Hunter can go on a range and trail a fox that has been gone twenty-four hours as fast as the hunter wants to canter on a thoroughbred horse." It would indeed be useless; he might as well try to explain that when scent is breast high these wonderful hounds can go faster than a thoroughbred can gallop; just as useless as it would be to try to explain how Hunter could hunt over five or six miles while Willis hunts over half a mile (Willis would have to be considerably slower than a slow beagle), or how he could jump [illegible] fifty red foxes to Willis' one; [illegible] for the readers of the [illegible] try to explain to Mr. Avent that they [illegible] as to believe all his guff.

G. T. WHITMORE.

POSEYVILLE, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In your issue of December 29 I read, from the pen of W. J. Spears, of the great hunt at Watson, Miss., and to read of such grand sport penned in such an unprejudiced manner, as was done by Mr. Spears, is indeed soul stirring to any genuine fox-hunter. How I would like to have been with all of those gentlemen at that meeting! But as it is impossible for me to meet all of the grand old hunters (men that are hunters in the true sense of the word) it does me good when I receive the AMERICAN FIELD and read such an article as that written by Mr. Spears.

Such articles as were written by J. M. Avent a short time ago are fishy to fox-hunters of experience. And, so far as I am concerned, I would prefer the cross on Willis (the July) and would consider it a wonderful improvement on his great (?) foxhounds unless they were considerably to the good of a pair that he sent to a man at St. James, Ind., some two or three years ago.

I would not have referred to Mr. Avent's article, but when a man has the good of his fellow man at heart he should stand by the truth. All experienced fox-hunters know that there is not a foxhound living that can carry a trail twenty-four hours old as fast as a good gallop.

We want to read of more real good fox-hunting and not so much boasting and free advertising of foxhounds. I have foxhounds from the Bourbon Kennels, and I have bought hounds from W. C. Goodwin, J. W. Norris, Jeph. Shanmer, W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Gibbons & Co., T. H. Clelland and Thad. E. Murphy; and of the Walker strain and of Ben Wilson, and I owned a pure bred English foxhound. Also I have bought many foxhounds from other men of lesser note, and I find there are many good hounds among all of them; some are better than others, but on an average they show up well, and while I think a great deal of my own hounds I think there are many others (with the same handling) equal to mine, and I am glad there are. What I would rather see or read of is a spirited fox chase, and less braggadocio; with love to all and malice toward none I will now close this part of my subject and will try to describe a grand chase we enjoyed Monday, December 4.

It was a fine hunting morning when the writer and five hunting brethren started for our creek (which I described once before) with twenty-seven foxhounds, and I will say there was not a puppy or a broken down dog among the twenty-seven, and all save one were white with black or lemon spots. I think other colors just as good, but white is to my liking. Not long after we reached the creek the pack was trailing; not "as fast as good horsemen could ride," but at a lively clip. After trailing some two miles they came to where Mr. Reynard had been aroused from his slumbers, and in an instant twenty-seven game red fox foxhounds were in full pursuit, and up the creek they sped for about four miles to a chain of hills, where they made a double and back down the creek they came with heads up and dashing over logs, brush and cane. On they went down the valley to another chain of hills called "Simpson's," and as the woods had been burned over the pack was at fault for a while; but soon a young hound (presented to the writer by Dr. J. W. Norris, and named Cleveland) found where the fox had gone, and after a little more bother with the burnt ground they had him going on down the creek for four miles. He made another double at Barter Hills, and as they came by the writer a little hound owned by William Davis was to the front; and Davis (like C. W. Spears to old Prompter) shouted at the top of his voice "Hurrah, Roy!" But Clara, the greatest bitch ever owned in Southern Indiana, was busting him wide open, and twenty-five others were trying for the front. I want to say that it was a lovely scene. On they went, their white forms looking like angels; down the valley and along the creek they went for four miles farther, until they reached Bishop hills and made a double. As they made the circle they passed by Davis, John Wilson and the writer, with Clara to the good, and two young hounds out of Clara and by a hound from the Bourbon Kennels straining every nerve to pass the old lady; fourth was Colonel, out of Clara and by Glide (a Goodman hound); fifth was Cleveland, out of Jingo and by Fiddler (owned by Norris), and in a bunch were the other twenty-two, all trying to get to the front. As they passed, the veteran old hunter, John Wilson, remarked: "I have been hunting sixty years, but that is the grandest sight I ever saw."

On they went down the creek for a few miles farther, when they came to the canebrakes—a terrible place—and for some time the running was tedious and slow. After some time Mr. Reynard concluded to move on down the creek, and the hounds were soon aware of the fact that he had left the cane and were off after him in full pursuit. On they went for about three miles, and leaving the creek they took to the farms. Reynard, finding that to be a disadvantage to him, soon was trying to regain the creek; but he had made a mistake and gone too far, and when he was almost within sight of the Wabash River and the creek the mad pack was almost upon him, so he went to earth with the great Clara grabbing for his brush.

We were now twenty miles from home and it was getting late, but we concluded to dig him out and carry him home, so we soon had him out. We turned him out on New Year's Day in a large pasture-field, only to be picked up again by a red hound we call Grant, bred by Capt. Thad E. Murphy, of Macon, Ga.; he is the only hound we own that is not white or spotted.

The above run was a grand one, and the more so because every hound that started was in at the finish; a thing seldom seen in so long and hard a run when there are so many hounds.

LEROY C. WILSON.

NOTES

THE following interesting item we glean from a letter to us from Mr. E. A. Burdette, writing from Asheville, N. C., where he has been spending the Winter months: "There was a meet of the Swannannoa Hunt Club hounds recently, at their country club house, two miles from Asheville. It was intended to have a bear hunt, but as the bear was not forthcoming a drag hunt was given instead. There was a large attendance in carriages and about seventy people on horseback, thirty to thirty-five following the hounds. The hounds, numbering twenty-five in the pack, ran in good form and gave a lively chase, covering about two miles. The hunt was followed by a barbecue and spread at the club house. Two young pigs were served that had been in course of preparation all day, being cooked on skewers over embers in a pit four feet square by two feet deep. Among the notable people present was Speaker Crisp, of the House of Representatives. The Hunt Club here is one of the features of the place, and with settled weather it is intended to have a meet every week during the season. The club has a town club house as well as a country house, and is patronized by the best people here and is a source of much pleasure to all visiting Asheville. Mr. J. S. Churchill of New York is master of hounds."

THE annual meeting of the Montreal Hunt was held in the St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal, on the afternoon of January 31, when there was a large attendance of members present. The reports were of the most satisfactory character and were unanimously adopted. In his address to the meeting, the Master, Mr. Montagu Allan, called attention to the very successful season the hunt had had, it being perhaps the most gratifying in the club's annals, and at the present time the institution was in a better position every way than at any period in its history. At present there are 35 couples of working hounds and 10½ couples of youngsters that promise exceedingly well. The hounds last season had worked better than ever, and the result was 10½ braces of foxes killed during the regular hunting season. In fact the past season had surpassed the expectations of the most sanguine. The election of officers resulted as follows: Master, Mr. Montagu Allan; honorary secretary, Dr. Charles McEachran; committee, Messrs. George R. Hooper, W. R. Miller, T. D. Bell, Hugh A. Allan, B. McLennan.

WE are pleased to hear that Mr. Francis J. Hagan will attend the Chicago show with some American and a couple of imported foxhounds. As he is a member of the N. F. H. Association's executive committee we hope to get some news from him concerning the foxhound trials to be held next Autumn.

□ FOXHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by the Rex Kennels, Millersburg, O.; Mr. W. D. Walker, Starkville, Miss , and Mr. D. W. Roberts, Waukesha, Wis.

Fish and Fishing

CHICAGO BAY, LAKE SUPERIOR, May 31, 1894

DEAR JACK:—We reached this place last night at eleven o'clock, and here I am, sitting on a log, with a board on my knees which I am using for a writing desk. The creek is about a rod away, in front of me, and a few rods to my left is the bay, and beyond that the great lake. There are two log fish houses where the creek enters the bay. Moored in the mouth of the creek are two Mackinac sailboats and three skiffs. Just across the creek is a log house where we stayed all night. Now and then a whiff of wind comes around the fish houses and the odor is more overpowering than the triple extract of the far-famed smells of Cologne. The fire is smoldering near by, and with the coffee pail near it keeping warm for Stephens. Where is he? He's gone a-fishing. As soon as I commenced getting breakfast, he said:

"I don't feel like eating now; I'll put up my rod and go up the creek a bit," and he's gone with rod and creel. I've had my solitary breakfast and was strongly tempted to start up the creek after him, but concluded I'd better see about getting a boat to take us to Washington Bay, three miles farther down, where we will make a camp for three or four days. Also, I wanted to write to you; and hope, Jack, that you'll appreciate the self-control

I'm exercising by sitting here, writing, when I might be after trout.

Let me see, I left off my last letter just as the steamer was passing Manitou Falls, and if some power the gift would give me I'd write a poem about those falls, so beautiful are they amid such stern and forbidding setting of high and rocky walls, wave-battered, time-marked, and overtopped by dark spruce and cedar trees. The river gorge opens a little less than half-way up the nearly perpendicular wall of rock, and from the steamer the water seems to leap in an unbroken fall into the lake. But why describe what you have already seen, only there appears to be double the amount of water coming over now that there was when you and I passed two years ago.

Some time after we had passed the falls the steamer whistled for a stop, and some of the passengers said, "Grand Marais." I went out on the deck and saw that we were coming to a small clearing on the steep hillside. Near the water's edge stood a new frame house, and what looked like a very trouty stream came into the lake near by. The house was not there when we went down the shore on our trip, and I asked the mate what the name of the place was.

"It has no name," he said; "we call it John Peck's place, as that is the name of the settler who is there."

I do not envy John Peck and his family their lot after navigation closes and they have only the trail along shore to connect them with the outside world; but I did wish that I might cast my line in that stream for the trout I am sure are there. You and I must make a call on John Peck sometime and get some trout out of that stream. The sun went down, and suddenly Stephens exclaimed:

"I see the light in the lighthouse at Grand Marais!"

I looked, and, five or six miles ahead, I saw what looked like a star gleaming where water and land joined.

And as the evening darkens, lo! how bright,
Through the deep purple of the midnight air,
Beams forth the sudden radiance of its light,
With strange unearthly splendor in its glare!

There was the usual crowd of white citizens, half-breeds and Indians on the dock. I gave the letter I had written you to one of the men, who promised to post it. We went into the cabin as the steamer started on, down the lake, and did not come out again until the boat stopped at this place.

Two boats were out to meet us. Into these all of our dunnage, ourselves, two other men with packs, and a young woman with a multiplicity of bundles were placed, and to shore we went. One of the men who rowed told us four men to make our beds in his kitchen, whither we followed him. The young woman with the bundles, whom we understood to be the school-teacher, went off in the other boat, to her boarding place, farther around the bay.

The kitchen in which we found ourselves was small, and there was already a bed in one corner with four children in it. We spread down our blankets in the unoccupied space, dispossessing and turning out into the darkness a hound puppy and an old collie. The puppy made a vigorous protest against being turned out, and scratched and whimpered at the door for quite a while. Sometime in the night I was awakened by a scratching at the door, and Stephens sleepily remarked:

"I suppose that dog had better be let in, or he'll keep us awake the rest of the night!" One of the men over in the corner said:

"Let that cat out, or we'll get no more sleep."

Nobody stirred, and I was just going to sleep again when the noise recommenced. The man in the corner jumped up hastily, opened the door, and in no gentle tones said:

"Scat! Get out of this!" Stephens now chimed in with:

"Let him in, he will not be still until you do." The man snappishly replied:

"It's the cat: and it wants to get out!"

"O-h," drawled Stephens, half asleep, "I th-o-u-g-ht 'twas the pup-p-p-y."

"Puppy nothing!" answered the man, and back to bed he went.

Stephens has not come back from fishing, yet, but the men have came with the boat to take us to Washington Bay. A lank, half-grown, red-headed, freckle-faced, barefooted boy, clad in a dirty shirt and blue overalls, has just appeared, with a rod like a hooppole, line about the size of a chalk line, a piece of pork for bait, and has gone to fishing not two rods from where I am sitting.

"Have you caught any trout?" I asked.

"Yes, I caught three, right here, last night." Whiz! came the line, with the chunk of pork at the end, through the air, as he gave a vicious jerk with the rod; "I had a good bite then," he said.

Stephens is coming; and I know by the look on his face that he has one trout at least. There are two nice trout in his creel. He has just weighed them; three-quarters of a pound and one-half pound.

"I caught them in the pool at the falls, where we caught those pretty ones when here before," he said: "Didn't I tell you we would have trout for our first meal in camp?"

He looks proud enough as he lays them down to go and wash. I'll stop now and get his breakfast for him.

MYRON COOLEY.

NOTES

HOMOSASSA is the Indian word for much fish, and the Indians got it about right. Having fished in most of the rivers of this state I must say I never saw the like in any stream for abundance and variety. Black bass, trout, sheepsheads, snappers, Spanish mackerel, cavali, blue-fish, skipjacks, channel bass, angel fish and tarpons abound. At the Homosassa inn the promenade extends over the stream. Ah me, "here is where the good fellows do most congregate," bringing their wives and daughters with them and always stay over their time; for one does love to linger where home comforts abound. And, then, the fishing. Oh my! my! my! I hardly dare tell else you may think it a "fish story." Four boats went down the river on February 11, starting at about ten o'clock, and returned in the afternoon with 234 fishes which weighed in all over 400 pounds; and then came the pleasures of the evening—telling how they bit, etc.—genial and social was the ending of the good time. Come and see for yourself, my reader; come bring your line and pole and go fishing. In all these waters are large and delicious flavored Homosassa oysters, and they bring a higher price in the city markets than any others. And all along the shore the green turtle abounds. Such is beautiful and bountiful Homosassa. I have wandered into many beautiful nooks in Florida, but of all this goodly land there is one soft spot where Mother Earth has been kindly. It is here, on the banks of the Homosassa—a climate more soft and gentle than any on the great round globe, a land of fairer beauty than any land. Many amateurs come here with expensive outfits—artificial flies and snoods—but after having their outfit chewed up and mashed they settle down to some good old-fashioned bait, and pull in the fishes sometimes two at a time.

Homosassa, Fla. DR. GEORGE WILLIS.

THE noted Chicago lawyer, Mr. A. S. Trude, recently went to Washington to help kill a bill which provides for the building of a railroad into the Shoshone River country just west of the Yellowstone National Park. Mr. Trude believes the direct result of the construction of that railway would be the extermination of the game and fishes of that country, and that the sole object of the projectors of the enterprise is to reach the game country for the game. In a report of an interview recently Mr. Trude is quoted as follows: "The Shoshone River is alive with mountain trout and salmon trout. There are 120 men at the head of the Snake River who are now killing off the fish there and, seeing that in a short time the supply will be cut off, they are looking for fresh waters for fish and fresh fields for game. These men and others like them have depleted the Yellowstone, the Gallatin, the Madison, and the Jefferson Rivers, and are now just about finishing up the supply in the Snake River. When they dynamite a stream they kill all the fish within the area of several acres and kill the deposited fish eggs as well. No supply can withstand such draughts. The statement that coal is the object of the proposed railroad is nonsense. There is no coal there, I think, and if there is any it could not be worked profitably. They are after the fish and game, and if we don't do something to stop their work there won't be anything left. I explained to a number of congressmen the real objects of the bill to run a railroad over government land, and I think it will be killed. I saw Secretary Thurber. He is courtesy itself. I told him of the contemplated slaughter of game and fish by market-hunters, and he intimated the president was too true a sportsman to sign a bill whose intent was to give market-men a monopoly of the fish which belonged to the people."

THE long-looked-for opening up of the state line lakes is nearly an accomplished fact. My men have finished one road from here into Little Presque Lake, and another road will be opened out to Hartley's Spur soon. These will be the shortest roads into a group of bass, mascalonge and pike lakes never before fished, which include Little Presque Isle, Big Presque Isle, Stone, Birch and the Upper Turtle waters, not to say anything of smaller lakes in great numbers. A building is being erected on my place for a number of Bessemer and Ironwood anglers. The Payne, or eastern one of the two roads above mentioned, runs along a ridge for some miles; at the base of the ridge, on the east side, lie three lakes which are in sight almost all of the distance. The beach on Little Presque Isle Lake is probably two miles long, and high hardwood lands lie above it in many places. These lakes lie entirely within the state of Wisconsin, near the boundary line between that state and Michigan. The lakes in this locality are broken up by points, bays and wide beaches, making them safe places for ladies and children. Many of the old Gogebic habitues have expressed their intention of visiting this new country.

Marinesco, Mich. PIONEER.

ON fish and game matters, in Penn[illegible] been introduced in the state legis[illegible]ws by Mr. Grigsby, of Lawrence, in the [illegible] $35,000 for the propagation and [illegible] the State Fishery Commissioners [illegible] the Senate, for the appointment of [illegible] wardens by the State Fish Commissioners. What a commentary upon the fact that efforts are being made at Springfield (the Illinois capital) to prevent the passage by the legislature of a bill, a good clause of which authorizes State Warden Chas. H. Blow to appoint, subject to the approval of the governor, eight game wardens (not thirty-five); and this on the ground that the eight wardens would cost the people some $7,900! is fish and game protection of so little importance to Illinois that the state can afford fewer game wardens than Pennsylvania? or less than one-quarter the number? or only a chief warden and one or two deputies? Let the people decide!

THE streams all over the state are bankful and running over, therefore grilse fishing will not be had until later and than only in the event of a very long dry spell in order that the surface water may be carried off and the streams resume their average condition. In the Sierras, also, the fishing will probably be very late this year, as the fall of snow has never been equaled, over thirty-one feet of the "beautiful" on the level. From the unusually forward condition of vegetation in this vicinity, at the time I write, I predict the earliest opening of Spring ever known in this state. Should my prediction be fulfilled I will soon enjoy some fine sport with the salmon in the beautiful Carmel River, in Monterey County; in that event the AMERICAN FIELD will hear from me.

San Francisco, Cal. ERNEST H. WAKEMAN.

ANENT the statement that changes are likely to be made in the California Fish and Game Commission, the San Francisco Breeder and Sportsman recommends to the attention of Governor Budd the accomplished lawyer and enthusiastic sportsman, Mr. E. H. Wakeman, of San Francisco, whose name is familiar to the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD as a contributor of interesting letters on sports afield. The genial gentleman has not solicited such an appointment, but he has had an extended experience with the gamy fishes of California in all parts of the state, and he is an earnest advocate of adequate protection for fishes and game, qualifications which would no doubt render him an efficient official.

ON Thursday, February 14, a singular accident occurred at St. Paul, Minn. A Swedish blacksmith and farmer residing near Maple Plain, that state, by name, Andrew Noreen, was walking down Seventh Street carrying a bundle of steel fish spears which he had made and came to St. Paul to sell. He slipped, fell and struck his head upon the bundle of spearheads. He was so fortunate as to receive only a deep cut over his left eye, whereas he might have destroyed his sight, or, perhaps, have lost his life by one of the tines penetrating his brain.

AT Saratoga, N. Y., a number of sportsmen are agitating the organization of a club to be called the Saratoga County Fish and Game Protective Association, which will embrace all the sportsmen's clubs in the county, and will strictly enforce the laws. The names of some of the most active parties are: Attorney T. F. Hamilton, James R. Gibbs, H. M. Levengston Jr., John E. Hodgman, W. B. Gage, Dr. John A. Pearsall, Jonathan M. Colcord, T. J. Totten, James F. Swanick, M. N. Capen, and W. S. Robertson

THE Knox County Fish Protective Association, which has done good work in that part of Maine, has elected the following officers: President, Jesse M. Blackington; secretary, Robert H. Crockett; treasurer, Arthur H. Berry; directors, John W. Anderson, Everett A. Jones, William F, Norcross and Jesse M. Blackington.

THE state fish commissioner of Kansas, J. W. Wampler, is strongly urging the establishment of a state fish hatchery at some suitable place in that state, and it is to be hoped the Kansas legislature will act wisely by enactment and making suitable appropriations.

IN Massachusetts Mr. Gustav C. Jache has been appointed by the state fish commissioners a deputy fish and game commissioner.

A map of the Canadian Pacific Railway will serve to illustrate to the lover of rod and gun the magnitude of the country open to the sportsman through which this line passes.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 5

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Yellow-bellied water-snake, queen-snake, leather-snake—Natrix leberis (Linn.).—Met with my first specimen in June, 1874, and have found it fairly plentiful in Southern Michigan, and at times very abundant In my experience it is rarely met with around lakes and ponds, but is found on the banks of rivers and small streams and in ditches which connect with running water. It takes delight in sunning itself in the bushes and tangle of grapevines overhanging the river. In these situations it has been observed as much as five yards above the water. In color it varies, above, from brownish olive to dull chestnut-brown. Like all serpents it is much brighter after shedding its skin, but generally looks as if covered with dirt, This appearance is more marked in the larger specimens. The best distinguishing point is below, the entire lower parts being yellow, with two brown bands running from the throat to the tail. It grows to a length of thirty inches or more. It appears to be entirely aquatic, and in its movements in the water shows great skill in concealing itself. I have often observed it when bass fishing. It is not nearly as pugnacious in disposition as the common water-snake and at times will not offer to bite when handled. The leather-snake is a thick-set species, and though active in the water it is rather slow on land. This species is ovoviviparous and one has been dissected which had eight eggs in its oviducts; and each egg contained a living young snake over six inches long.

The yellow-bellied water-snake inhabits the states east of the Mississippi River.

Kirtland's water-snake—Natrix Kirtlandi (Kenn.).—This is a rare species in Michigan so far as I can learn, though common in Central Indiana. A few specimens taken near my home, at Kalamazoo; also known in Washtenaw County. It is the smallest water-snake that we have and seldom reaches a length of twenty inches. Many know it by the name of "little red-snake," and it is not generally considered as wholly aquatic as the other representatives of the genus. A handsome snake and wholly harmless, although credited as deadly poisonous by the ignorant. The upper parts are dull red, the scales dotted with brown; lower parts deep salmon-red, dotted with a row of black dots. Professor O. P. Hay says that this snake is very abundant about Indianapolis, and that it is remarkably early in its appearance and has been seen on a sunny day in a mild Winter on January 25. One specimen contained eight eggs, and it is probably fair to say that its breeding habits are like the others of the genus. It is distributed from New Jersey to Illinois.

Common water-snake; spotted water adder.—Natrix sipedon (Linn.).—Very few of our species exhibit a greater change in color than is presented by this in its development. However, whether very bright, as in its youthful stages, or, later, very dark, its markings or blotches are about the same as to position. A vigorous thick-set snake, which grows to a length of forty inches and a girth of over six. It is readily recognized by its spotted back and sides. It is the most thoroughly aquatic of our Michigan species and its food consists largely of fish in certain sections, and I am informed that it is very destructive to the brook trout in small streams. Often foraging about the edges of ponds, it frequently varies its diet by swallowing field mice, Arvicola riparia, which it catches in some manner, unaccountable to me, as the field mouse is very active and generally alert. It may be that it charms its prey. One that I dissected had swallowed three very young specimens of the muskrat, Fiber zibethicus. It is a regular glutton and will fill itself to repletion, and I have taken five different bodies from one snake, embracing two field mice, two young birds and a large frog. The creature was stuffed from just back of its head to its stomach; and the prey included a freshly swallowed victim, macerated bodies in the proventriculus, if we may use the term to designate the gullet enlargement, to half-digested bodies in the stomach. After a hearty meal the animal is very sluggish and may be easily approached and killed, but at all other times it is very wary, never failing when molested to dash for the nearest water, into which it plunges and disappears. This is the reptile which is always selected as the deadly copperhead in our state and a common name for it is water moccasin; but I can assure the readers that is perfectly innocuous, although it is extremely pugnacious and will strike at one in a most savage manner.

In early June this water snake is found in the greatest numbers about the [illegible] ponds and lakes with reedy [illegible] of a length of eighteen [illegible]. The larger ones are generally solitary. In the month of [illegible] may be seen sunning themselves in the branches of small trees and bushes overhanging the banks of streams. It is quite probable that they are awaiting feathered prey, and especially is this so among the grapevines and elderberry bushes where the birds feed at times. Not rarely water-snakes may be found all of twelve to fifteen feet from the ground or water. If disturbed they do not attempt to conceal themselves in the tree or bush, but at once drop into the water with a loud splash. There are several varieties of this species, and perhaps the variety found here is N. sipedon fasciata, still it is probable that ours is the species, but I cannot attest as the varietal differences are not always easily made out. Smith mentions Agassiz's water-snake as a variety of N. sipedon erythrogaster, red-bellied water-snake, but Mr. Geo. B. Sudworth, of the Forestry Department, Washington, D. C., writes me that N. s. erythrogaster is a rare variety in Michigan.

A friend reports the finding of a dead water-snake with a small bullhead sticking in its throat. The evidence of the manner of its death was plain; as the bullhead was being engulfed it spread the sharp spines of its pectoral fins, which penetrated the parts surrounding the gullet, and the result was death to both snake and fish. I have never found the eggs of this snake. It is said to be ovoviviparous like the others of the genus.

A few remarks about the snakes of ovoviviparous habit will not be out of place here, as the word is often used in these articles. It is a combination word and refers to those animals which have the young developed in the egg while the egg is still in the body of the parent. Snakes are popularly supposed to always lay eggs with shells, but this is a wrong notion and only another evidence of the ignorance of the unobservant. There are many species of snakes in the United States which do not lay regulation eggs but bring forth the young alive. This habit will be more fully described later. Professor G. B. Goode, during investigation of the subject, found that the common water-snake had been observed to "swallow" its young on seventeen different occasions. Professor Hay adds this remark: "This being such a common snake further observations ought to be made. If one thinks that the young have been seen to enter the mother's mouth she ought, if possible, to be caught, handled carefully and put into a cage, to see if the young will come out again. Or, if killed, a careful dissection ought to be made, in order to learn whether or not the young are really in the stomach." The habit of swallowing the young, that is allowing them to run into the mouth and stomach, is so common, according to many persons, that it is expected everyone will believe it. Although I cannot dispute the habit, I must say I have yet to see the act performed, and as yet have not met with believers and story-tellers in whom I could place confidence.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 5

BY A. K. DELANEY

The Inland Passage

A person northward bound by the now famous Inland Passage is not long in discovering, after leaving Victoria, that he has passed the confines of civilization and entered into one of the wildest, most broken and rugged regions of North America. The bright and extremely picturesque scenery of the Gulf of Georgia is of short duration. The blue glassy waters of the gulf, whose mirror the ever-encroaching prow of the ship dashes into shimmering fragments and scatters on either side as we move ever and ever onward, the evergreen islands and the small craft lazily floating upon the water's bright sheen, the steamers moving here and there swinging behind them the long black banners of smoke and the white-winged ships sailing for the ocean blue, all are soon left behind. The waters change to a dull, leaden hue, upon whose surface no craft, great or small, greets the vision. The shores grow wearisome with the never-changing, shaggy-breasted mountains and promontories, tenantless and inhospitable. Everywhere outside the ship silence and solitude reign supreme. Occasionally a bald eagle, disturbed on his perch by the ship's approach, swings with broad and sweeping wing to a place of fancied security. Rarely an Hydah canoe, propelled by the paddle of the aborigine or moved along by a clumsy lug sail, is seen hugging the shore, and at long distances apart occur the crude dwellings of the Indian villages.

Toward the northern portion of the Gulf of Georgia, the shores of the mainland on one side and Vancouver Island on the other converge until they form the long narrow channel known as Johnstone Strait, which connects the gulf with Queen Charlotte Sound. At the southern extremity of this strait is encountered one of the critical places of the Inland Passage, and famous in nautical annals as the spot where the United States naval ship Saranac left her bones some twenty odd years ago.

There are three of these places on the route, the one just mentioned being the first, which is about twelve hours' run from Victoria and is known as the Seymour Narrows. The second is called the Wrangel Narrows, and is some thirty-five miles north of the port of that name which is located near the mouth of the Stickeen River. The third is in the narrow channel which separates Baranoff and Chichagoff islands, and is about forty miles from Sitka.

They are all uncomfortably narrow for vessels of even moderate beam, and, as the tide in both ebbing and flowing pours through them at a most terrific velocity, they are never taken except at the slackwater of the extremes of ebb and flood. At the Seymour Narrows the two shores approach each other to within a cable's length, and are perpendicular abutments of solid rock. The water is fathomless except at a rock which lies near the center of the channel, at its very gate, and which is close to the surface of the water at low tide and marks the spot where the Saranac met her doom.

This vessel unfortunately attempted the Narrows at the wrong stage of tide, became unmanageable in the mighty current, and drifted over the fatal rock which tore several feet from her bottom. A big hawser, however, was gotten ashore and made fast to a tree and the ship hauled in until her nose touched the bank; but it was to no purpose. In spite of every effort, she gradually settled by the stern until the hawser parted, and she slid down the perpendicular wall into the unfathomed abyss below.

On my first voyage over the route we left Victoria about eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and, consequently, were approaching the Seymour Narrows at ten o'clock the evening of the same day. I had learned from the first mate—a lithe, active young man about twenty-seven years old who went to sea at the age of thirteen and has seen nearly every port of the Pacific, American and Asiatic—the time we would make the Narrows; and as the story of the Saranac had reached my ears giving the place something of interest to a landsman, I quietly resolved to remain awake and witness the passage.

About eleven o'clock the electric lights of the saloon were extinguished and I passed forward and out onto the upper deck, where I soon had an opportunity of observing something of the discipline on shipboard. The night was somewhat dark, as the sky was overcast with dull, heavy clouds. Above the sheen of the water the high, black banks of the land loomed up ominously in front and on either side, telling unmistakably that the ship was in a pocket. In front of the forecastle gangway the mate was pacing, back and forth, from side to side of the ship; and, away forward, in the prow, stood another man on the lookout; while on the hurricane deck, in front of the pilot house, I descried a long dark overcoat and I assumed the master must be inside of it.

As the ship plowed on the black banks grew each moment more ominous. Still, on we went, until it seemed as if we were in the very shadow that the dark shores cast over the water. The mate, like myself, was making his first trip through the Inland Passage; and, as he paced back and forth, scanning the shores on either side, I thought I could now and then detect quick, furtive glances of apprehension cast at the immovable figure on the hurricane deck, and visions of the Saranac and the Great Republic began to float across my brain when a voice—whose tones resembled the noise of a big buzz-saw whipping through a hardwood log—broke out:

"S-t-a-a-b-r-d y-e-r h-e-l-m!" A response instantly came from the pilot house in the gruff, hollow tones of the seaman:

"S-t-a-a-b r-d s-h-e is, S-i-r."

Before I had fairly recovered from the startle this gave me the ship, in obedience to her helm, was swinging around a perpendicular abutment of rock scarcely the ship's width off. By the aid of the night light which hung from the forestay, overhead, I caught sight for an instant of the jagged wall and saw the fierce water, boiling and eddying at its foot as if angry at restraint and indicating how tremendous must be the power of the tide when fairly under way. As we rounded the ledge of rocks, a narrow channel opened to view ahead of us which seemed, however, to have no outlet and to lead us only into deeper gloom and greater danger until the lookout in the bow sang out:

"S-h-o-r-e b-e-a-c-o n o-n o-u-r l-e-e b-o-w, S-i-r!" when the voice of the master again crashed out on the night air and the course of the ship was again changed in obedience to his command. Immediately after the channel widened, the shores receded on either side, and we were through the Narrows and in the still waters of the Johnstone Strait. The figure disappeared from before the pilot house; the mate paced on, back and forth, across the deck; the lookout in the bow kept up his vigilant watch, and the mighty engines of the ship continued their heavy throbbing; but all else was silence and solitude as the voiceless night settled with deeper, ever deeper shadows, its dark pall over the wilderness of land and water about me.

Twenty-four hours out from Victoria we reached the northern end of Vancouver Island and Queen Charlotte Sound opened out before us. The ship began to catch the heavy swell of the ocean, and as we bounded past the northern headland of the island the great Pacific for the first time burst upon my vision—a desolate waste of waters stretching away and away to the verge of the horizon, and giving no farther signs of life than schools of whales lazily rolling and spouting in the swell of the ocean, away off to the seaward. As the ship passed well onto the Sound the roll of the ocean grew quite heavy and drove nearly everybody to their staterooms; but something of the enchantment which must have overtaken Balboa as he first gazed upon the globe's greatest ocean seemed to have possessed me, and I remained on deck watching the mighty expanse of water until the three hours' run brought us to the opposite headland, and the ship dodged behind the inner group of the Queen Charlotte islands into the smooth waters of Fitzhugh Sound and thence into Grenville Channel.

Along there the scenery is mostly a repetition of that of the day before, smooth, glassy water flanked with bold shores of somber evergreens, all wrapped in the solitude of a tenantless wilderness. Occasionally the channel narrows down to a few hundred feet in width, bounded on either side by the precipitous abutments of Nature's masonry; and in one of these fiordlike passages a mountain stream leaps from a dizzy height of several hundreds of feet and drops the silver ribbon of its waters into the darksome channel.

The morning of the second day out from Victoria found us again in the heavy swell of the ocean as we crossed Dixon Entrance. Off our starboard quarter a few clustering houses, at the foot of the mountains, mark the site of Fort Simpson, the northern outpost of British Columbia and one of the central stations from which the Hudson Bay Company carries on its operations over a vast area of the northwest. Shortly after this the historical

"fifty-four-forty" is passed, and the ship enters the waters of Alaska to be greeted by the Indian village of Tonyass, one of the few human habitations along the route and chiefly noted for its array of gigantic totem poles, after which the Prince of Wales archipelago is entered by the Tonyass Narrows and Clarence Strait.

Along in the afternoon another sign of human life is met at Fort Wrangel, the old-time seat of an United States military garrison and during the gold excitement in the Cassiar country, up the Stickeen River, in the years of 1873 and 1874, the largest trading post north of Victoria. But the decline of the gold fever in the Cassiar has been followed by the subsidence of Wrangel and the drowsy lethargy of Sleepy Hollow now seems to brood over the place. At Wrangel the group of islands known in Russian days as the Alexander Archipelago begins, and just as the dusk of evening was coming on we entered the Wrangel Narrows, whose features differ widely from those of the Seymour. The channel is several miles in length, extremely narrow and serpentine, and winds among a group of small, low islands that form the bottom of a depression among the mountains resembling a monster basin. The banks on either side are generally low and sloping, and along these lowlands grows a sort of wild blue-joint, which during the Summer months attains a heavy, rank exuberance and is about the only grass I have known to flourish in Alaska. The water is unusually shallow, with a mud bottom the greater part of the way, and the safety line of the crooked channel is marked by buoys.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—FORT WRANGLE, ALASKA

As we swung around island after island and buoy after buoy, myrlads of wild geese sprang into the air breaking the stillness of the evening with their clamorous "honking;" a sound that was melody to one passenger on board the ship, who was that evening three thousand miles from the old-time haunts where, in the dusky gloaming of many a bygone day of the golden Autumns, he had heard the waterfowl's rushing wing and listened to his wild, weird call.

These Narrows are left by a cañon which opens into Prince Frederick Sound, where a chilling blast came rushing down from the northward reminding us that we were coming to the land of glaciers and perpetual snow; and it was not long before everybody sought the more congenial atmosphere of the sumptuous saloon.

Northward from Wrangel Narrows the scenery grows steadily bolder and more rugged. Indeed it is difficult, without the aid of actual vision, to form anything like a true conception of the manner in which this portion of the earth's crust has been torn and rent, and rent and torn again, and piled into massive heaps on both mainland and islands, among the latter of which the meshes of a thousand channels wind. The mountain ranges, upon whose crests the snows of ages repose, grow loftier and are intersected with monster chasms and cañons down which the mountain torrents tumble. Here and there a broad scar reaching down the mountain side from crest to base and stripped of every vestige of timber, undergrowth and verdure marks the pathway of an avalanche. Immense arms and fiords, whose waters are inky black in their fathomless depths and held between walls of perpendicular rock, indent the shores; and, in all directions, darksome bights and broad, sweeping bays slumber in the shadows of the overhanging mountains.

The largest of the many thousands of islands comprising the Alexander Archipelago are Baranof, Chichagof and Admiralty. The westerly shores of the first two are washed by the waters of the Pacific Main; and along their easterly sides, commencing at the southern extremity of Baranof, about 56° 10′ north latitude and running almost due north to the Chilkat Mountains, in 59° 15′, extends the long arm of the ocean known as Chatham Strait. To the eastward of this strait, and abreast of Baranof and Chichagof, lies Admiralty Island, and between it and the mainland is Stephens Passage, which forms a junction with Chatham Strait at the northern extremity of Admiralty Island, and which is also the route usually taken by the northward-bound steamers.

In the forenoon of the third day out from Victoria the ship swung out from the Stephens Passage into one of the larger arms of the Archipelago known as the Gastineaux Channel and Juneau City, the Alaskan metropolis, greeted us—a cluster of fresh-looking houses located as the mainland among the stumps of newly fallen trees and lying in a pocket at the foot of the mountains which rise almost perpendicularly behind it. Across the Gastineaux Channel are Douglass City and the famous two-hundred-and-forty-stamp quartz mill of the Alaska Mill and Mining Company, showing the first and only smokestacks north of Nanaimo.

Leaving Juneau the ship returns to the Stephens Passage, which is followed to Point Retreat at the northerly end of Admiralty Island where the ship turns square about and heads to the southward, down the Chatham Strait, until the Peril Strait, which separates Baranof and Chichagof islands is reached, when the vessel's prow is turned to the westward, through this passage, and soon the Peril Rapids are encountered. For a greater portion of the distance through this passage a wider surface of water is presented, especially at high tide, than appears at either the Seymour or Wrangel Narrows; but as it is filled with sunken rocks and reefs around which the water, even in its calmest moods, boils and eddies like a huge caldron it is far more treacherous and intricate than either of the other two. Its narrowest point does not exceed twice the beam of a good-sized ship and lies between an ugly reef on one side and a low, rocky island on the other, and is entered and left by a short turn of nearly a right angle. The shores of the island drop perpendicularly into the water, and to make sure of missing the reef the ship passes so close to the island that a pebble can be tossed from the ship to the shore. The Peril Strait terminates at its westerly end in the Salisbury Sound—denominated by the Russians the Gulf of Olga—which opens due west into the Pacific. But the ship kept inside a group of small islands until Sitka was reached and we dropped anchor abreast of the old Russian Castle, thirty-two hundred and thirty-five miles from Lake Michigan.

NOTES

THE Cotton States and International Exposition, which will be held at Atlanta, Ga., from September 18 to December 31, 1895, promises to be a most interesting and instructive affair. Railroads, not only those reaching Atlanta but their connecting lines south and north, are evincing a lively interest and some fine railway exhibits will be made. Ample arrangements for security from fire have been perfected by Chief W. R. Joyner, of the Atlanta Fire Department, he having made two trips north and secured, free of charge, a full equipment of fire apparatus including one of the best fire alarm systems. The apparatus includes three hose carts, three steamers, one hook and ladder truck, two two-horse chemical engines, eight sixty-gallon, two-wheel fire extinguishers; and three hundred three-gallon, two-wheel extinguishers will be located throughout the buildings. The exposition is broad in scope, and its international character will be sustained by many foreign exhibits. If the measure of success can be gauged by the work being done the outcome should be gratifying to the projectors.

THE agitation in New York and New Jersey for the preservation of the Palisades has eventuated in the introduction, on February 15, of a bill in the New York House, by Mr. Burns, of Westchester, providing for the appointment, by Governor Morton, of three commissioners, who shall serve without pay, to confer with similar commissioners from New Jersey regarding the proper methods by which the Palisades of the Hudson may be preserved. The bill requires a report shall be made to the governor within the year.

UNITED STATES FIELD TRIAL CLUB'S AFFAIRS

NATCHEZ, MISS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—No doubt each and every member of the United States Field Trial Club has received with reluctance and regret the news of Mr. P. T. Madison's resignation from the above named club, especially and surprisingly so the members that attended the last meeting of the club at West Point, Miss., during the week of the trials. I say "surprisingly so" because I was one of the members present at that meeting, as well as other meetings, and everything was so thoroughly discussed, and in such a business-like manner and in a spirit of such good fellowship, that when the news of Mr. Madison resigning came I really was surprised. Mr. Madison has made the U. S. F. T. Club a good secretary-treasurer and has been untiring in his efforts to render all the assistance he could to promote the interests of the club, but I think that in resigning, and for the reason given, he has committed an error of the head and not the heart.

"That Southern people could control the actions of the club!" For the benefit of the North, South, East or West (for it was supposed to be a United States club) I will state that I am a Southerner and two years ago, while at New Albany, Mr. Madison remarked to me he would like to see me a member of the club. I did not join it then. Time rolled on, and this season Mr. Avent told me the club intended holding three trials during next Fall and Winter, and asked me to become a member in order to help things out in the way of stakes and other expenses, toward which, he said, my $10 fee and dues would go quite a good way. It was on that plea I joined, and I know another gentleman that became a member on the same ground, together with our natural love for the advancement of the dog; and here I, for one, wish to state positively, and as a Southerner, that it was not "for the purpose of invoking rule."

A few questions will not be amiss. Dr. N. Rowe was unanimously elected president, and does not he reside in the North? And did not southern as well as northern members vote for him? Mr. Madison was unanimously elected secretary-treasurer, and is not he a northern gentleman? And did not the southern members' vote help to place him there? Does it appear that at such a meeting there was any sectional feeling? So far, which side has received the largest slice?

On the board of governors there are two or three handlers, but I really believe, if it had been thought by the majority of the board of governors that the placing of handlers thereon was for the reason stated in Maj. Taylor's article of February 7, that a word or two from Mr. Madison would have settled the question very [illegible] and easily; as it was nothing was said against [illegible] handlers on the board. Mr. Madison could have [illegible] there and then his ideas in regard to [illegible] and easily enough could have brought about a change if he just had spoken the word.

It appears there must have been some secret rule as to a "member soliciting membership." I have read the rules over and fail to find where such a rule exists. When I became a member of the U. S. F. T. Club I was proud that I was a member of one of the broadest minded field trial associations in the [illegible] there are men in the club that fail to [illegible] that in case of necessity, or otherwise, a man may be below Mason and Dixon's line, and from his nativity cause him to be incapacitated to assist in governing a club, why then my ideas of such liberal mindedness and expansive views shrink in a marked degree of the ones whom I, only a few moments ago, was gazing upon as in an exalted position.

Let not the U. S. F. T. Club be discouraged by one, two, three or six resignations. The club is a long way from being at the bottom of the ladder, and it will ever hold its position as far as honesty of purpose goes. With that star at its masthead for a guidance it will sail through the perils of storms, though the angry billows may in vain attempt to break away that star which is now so firmly fixed, and presently all danger will be past and our progress will continue, encouraged as we advance, until no fear or apprehension is ever thought of.

One word on sectionalism from my own observation. I have attended meetings, church services, social gatherings, etc., in the North and in the South. I have also attended field trial club meetings. I never in my experience found a northern gentleman that said a southern gentleman aroused any ill feeling in him by sectional strife. I cannot reverse this and repeat it. Mr. Madison's right to resign no one can challenge, but I do challenge his right to claim through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD that "southern people for the purpose of invoking rule," when I for one joined the club innocent of any such charge as that; and I have reason to believe others did also.

The U. S. F. T. Club will hold its trials next Fall and Winter. We may possibly lose a few entries, and possibly lose a few of the members, but as a whole I hardly think the damage will be irreparable; though I regret exceedingly that Mr. Madison has laid such charges against every gentleman in the South without thoroughly informing himself as to the true state of affairs.

Meetings were all adjourned; time set for future trials; purses made up; birds to be purchased and planted in Kentucky; everyone well pleased with the trials (and if Mr. Madison was not he ought to have been, for his dog, Rodfield, won); and here, after the trials are over, comes Mr. Madison's resignation on the ground that southern men want to control the club. I ask, where? when? how? who? I know nothing of it.

PHILIP M. ESSIG.

ANGOLA, LA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Referring to Major Taylor's article concerning the United States Field Trial Club, I wish to make a few remarks. Maj. Taylor has shown poor judgment in decrying a club of such high standing, especially as he is so closely interested in the welfare of all field trial clubs. As one of the newly elected southern members I feel I must take up the cudgels for the club.

Maj. Taylor seems to think the club cannot survive the resignation of Mr. Madison, evidently giving the impression that the remaining members are too prejudiced in their ideas to hold a fair trial. I appreciate the fact that the club has lost a most valued officer in Mr. Madison, and to show how far wrong Maj. Taylor is as to sectional prejudice I might add that I requested Mr. Madison to withdraw his resignation.

I am sadly mistaken in the members of our club if the Major's surmise as to the club not holding another trial is realized. When the gentlemen who comprise the members see that the club is to be run in the interest of any particular section or faction, I think it will feel the lack of membership.

The article being, evidently, aimed at the new southern members is the main cause of my first article in your most highly esteemed journal; and as one of those newly elected governors I shall cast my vote for the best interests of the club, regardless of prejudice of any character. Above all the United States Field Trial Club will have judges who will give their decision in favor of the best dogs, be they setters, pointers or curs and be the owner from the North or the South.

The forming of a new club can in no way affect our club. On the contrary, the more stakes the dogs have to run for the larger will be the field of dogs and handlers, and in consequence the clubs will receive more entries. If there is a new club formed I am sure each club will be only too glad to join hands and adjust dates agreeable to all.

CANADIAN KENNEL CLUB'S EXECUTIVE MEETING

We have received from Mr. H. B. Donovan, Secretary-Treasurer of the Canadian Kennel Club, the following copy of the official minutes of the above meeting, held at the Queen's Hotel, Toronto, on the afternoon of Friday, February 8.

Agreement with A. K. C.:

Moved by C. A. Stone, seconded by Dr. Griffin, that this club would be willing to recognize an agreement on the basis of a mutual recognition of wins and disqualifications; the wins at shows held under C. K. C. rules to be published in the A. K. C. Stud Book; all dogs from Canada exhibited in the United States to be listed or registered with the A. K. C.; all dogs from the United States exhibited in Canada to be listed or registered with the C. K. C.; prize winners in either case, where qualified, must be registered with the club under whose auspices the show is held. Carried, and Messrs. T. G. Davey, R. McEwen and F. S. Wetherall were appointed a committee to confer with the A. K. C.

[illegible] Shows, read and received:

TORONTO, October 17, 1894.

[illegible] OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,

We [illegible] undersigned, auditing committee [illegible] certify that we have examined the accounts and vouchers of the Secretary-Treasurer for the year ending August 31, 1894, and find them correct, and that the debit balance is $11 89, as shown by the last annual financial statement.

We beg to recommend:

1. That particulars of fees received for registration, prefix and affix, be entered in a book kept for the purpose.

2. That a properly ruled membership roll book be obtained, giving with other information the date of payment of annual dues.

3. That membership fees be included in the Secretary-Treasurer's statement for year for which paid.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEO. B. SWEETNAM,
Chairman Auditing Committee.

F. H. F. Mercer.—The following letter was read by the Secretary:

VICTORIA CHAMBERS, OTTAWA, February 4, 1895.

H. B. DONOVAN, ESQ., Secretary C. K. C.

Sir:—At the meeting of the executive of the C. K. C., to be held in Toronto on the 7th instant, will you be so good as to lay before the meeting this, my request, for reinstatement to the Canadian Kennel Club?

The decisions of the courts re my suits vs. Wesley D. Mills, M. D., which cases hinged on my entry of the Clumber spaniel Newcastle at the Ottawa dog show of 1891, for which act I was disqualified by the C. K. C. nearly three years ago, have served to convince me that no matter how innocent of wrong intent I felt myself to have been in this matter, there are many, including judges, a jury and the committee of the Canadian Kennel Club, who deemed my action in making this entry a culpable one, for the commission of which the C. K. C. considered disqualification at their hands necessary as a punishment.

I deeply regret my part in the entire affair, which has caused me to lose some friends, much time, a great deal of money, not to mention endless worry and annoyance. More especially do I regret the acrimonious discussions to which it has given rise, and I trust the executive will favorably consider the question of reinstating me, and so assist in consigning this troublous matter to oblivion.

I am, sir, yours faithfully,
F. H. F. MERCER.

Moved by Mr. Sweetnam, seconded by Mr. Stone, that (on receipt of necessary fees) Mr. Mercer, on consideration of letter, be reinstated from this date. Carried.

Kennel Club Shows.

TORONTO, February 5, 1895.

H. H. DONOVAN, ESQ, Secretary C. K. C.

Dear Sir:—May I suggest that you bring before the executive committee at the meeting to be held at the Queen's Hotel, on Friday next, the question as to the advisability of abrogating the rules relating to the five-hundred-dogs and five-hundred-dollars limits? This would enable the shows held by the Toronto Kennel Club, Hamilton Kennel Club, Montreal Kennel Association and probably Guelph Fat Stock Association at Guelph to be held under C. K. C. rules. As far as can be seen at present there is no probability of the old agreement which existed between the American Kennel Club and the Canadian Kennel Club being renewed, and thus Canadian dogs are practically shut out from qualifying for the title of champion.

If the committee will take this matter into its kind consideration and can see its way to repeal this rule, a fresh impetus will be given to clubs like the above, and fanciers the Dominion over will feel grateful.

Yours truly,
W. P. FRASER,
Hon. Secy. Toronto Kennel Club.

Mr. Fraser and Mr. J. F. Kirk were present in support of the letter and were heard by the committee. After considerable discussion it was moved by Dr. Griffin, seconded by Mr. Boyle, that: "The executive may use its discretion in modifying Section I, Rule XV, and Regulation No. V, by granting permission to recognized kennel clubs to hold shows under C. K. C. auspices, providing the entry list, judges and premiums offered meet with the approbation of the committee and on payment of a fee of $10." Carried.

Financial report.—From the Secretary-Treasurer received and read.

Letter of resignation.—Read from Mr. A. D. Stewart as a member of the executive committee. On motion of Mr. Sweetnam, seconded by Mr. Stone, Dr. W. H. Drummond, of Montreal, was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy.

Field Trial Rules.—Messrs. Stone, Davey and Boyle, with power to add to their number, were appointed a committee to draft rules and report at next meeting of the executive.

Industrial Exhibition and Fred Kirby.—The following letter was handed in by Mr. Stone and read by the Secretary:

TORONTO, February 4, 1895.

C. A. STONE, Canadian Kennel Club, City.

Dear Sir:—I beg to advise you that there remains unpaid by one Kirby, of Philadelphia, for dog entry fees in connection with the dog show during the late Industrial Fair, the sum of $51, being the amount of a check returned "no funds." To this amount must be added the sum of $2 06 protest fees on same, a total of $53.06. As I understand that the rules of the Canadian and American Kennel clubs provide that in the event of non-payment of fees by any exhibitor of dogs such exhibitor is subject to certain severe penalties and is debarred from exhibiting at any future show held under the auspices of either club, I desire that the American Kennel Club and the Canadian Kennel Club may take official notice of this and take such action as shall insure the payment of this check.

Yours very truly,
GEO. EDWARDS,
Asst. Treas. I. E. A.

Moved by Mr. Boyle, seconded by Dr. Griffin, that Mr. Kirby be written to by the secretary for an explanation. Carried.

New Members.—The following members were elected: Alex. Gibb of Montreal, F. T. Miller of Trenton, C. M. Taylor of Lynn, Ont., and C. P. Simpson of Montreal, proposed by H. B. Donovan; H. D. Smith of Compton, proposed by F. S. Wetherall; David Le Gault of Montreal, proposed by W. C. Fyfe, Montreal; W. Wade, Hulton, Pa., proposed by Dr. J. S. Niven.

The meeting was harmonious and got through a great deal of business in a short time.

A VISIT TO BUNN'S KENNELS

PEORIA, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Everybody knows the name of Chas. E. Bunn as one of the most successful breeders and exhibitors of English mastiffs, and as the owner of the largest kennel of this noble breed in the United States. Having seen his dogs so frequently shown with success on the bench, the writer was anxious to see how the numerous winners looked at home, and how Mr. Bunn succeeded in breeding so many good ones and how he managed his kennels in general. I was not disappointed, for all the dogs were in fine and healthy condition and it is safe to say that the writer never saw so many good mastiffs, from the grown dogs down to the two or three months old youngsters, in the one kennel, but judge of my surprise when I found not only mastiffs but quite a number of fox terriers as well, and some right down good useful ones he has bred of these too, and that in only a few months, for it is less than a year ago that he caught the fox terrier craze.

The first dog owned in this kennel of any importance was the valuable sire and show dog—Ormonde, which he imported from that noted mastiff breeder and exhibitor, the late Mrs Willins, of Bradmore House, Hammersmith, England, and this was the first dog Mr. Bunn ever showed, and moreover he won with him the first time of asking, for he was returned the winner at the Cincinnati show of 1890. Ormonde has unfortunately now gone the way of all flesh, for he succumbed to the inevitable last year, but Mr. Bunn informs me that he had sired more winners than any other mastiff in America, a record not to be wondered at when one takes into consideration his exceptional breeding, he being a son of Champion Victor Hugo and the celebrated Champion Cambrian Princess. Mr. Bunn is not only proud of his record as a breeder, but also feels justly elated when he recounts his wonderful success since 1890 as an exhibitor, for he informs me that he has never exhibited where he got less than a second prize, except at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show last year, and was never defeated for the kennel prize. This record, he believes, has never been excelled in any breed.

The kennels are situated a few miles out of Peoria, Ill., on a farm of thirty acres devoted entirely to the dogs, and are built on high, hilly pasture land, which affords the very best possible exercise or play ground for the numerous inmates, and there are between thirty and forty of them. The main kennel building is a very large and lofty one, and has large doors opening the full width at each end of the building, thus affording plenty of breeze and fresh air during the extreme heat of the Summer months. Down the middle of this building forms a large covered run, so that the dogs can be well exercised under cover in inclement weather. Ranged along each side are fourteen roomy kennels 8x6, provided with raised benches and an outside run to each kennel, measuring 25x6. There are also several other good buildings, all fitted up as kennels, and one fitted up with a stove to provide warmth for bitches with puppies in cold weather, and still another large one as a kitchen and cook house.

The food consists of good sound meat, well boiled with plenty of such vegetables as rice, turnips, carrots, parsnips, etc., and then thickened with sound stale bread.

After the writer had gone through the kennels Mr. Bunn led the way to the office, a cozy room all finished in hardwood and the walls hung round with pictures and photographs of celebrated mastiffs of the past and present. Here, it being a very cold day, Mr. Bunn suggested that he should have the dogs brought in one by one for my inspection. The first one brought in was:

Fortuna, breeder, owner. Date of birth, May, 1892. By Wellington (Lord Raglan—Wacouta Donna) out of Mattella (Ormonde—Phædra). This is a typical headed young bitch, with good bone and excellent color. She was V.H.C. Chicago. The only time I believe she has been shown.

Corene, breeder, John Wyeth. Date of birth, May, 1889. By Minting (Maximillan—Cambrian Princess) out of Breeze. This is a good-bodied bitch, a trifle light of bone for her size, has a nice skull and muzzle and fairly good ears, but her eye might be darker with advantage. She has won first Philadelphia, Danbury and Mount Holly, and second Toronto.

Maides, bred by C. N. Powell, is by Edric (Jack Thyr—Emma), out of Doris (Ormonde—Lady Cobrey). This young bitch is a very promising one, not yet shown. She has a good skull, nice wrinkle, small, well placed ear, and deep, blunt muzzle, excellent body, legs, feet and substance and nice expression and quality. She is certain to be well up when she is shown, which will be at the forthcoming Mascoutah Kennel Club's Show.

Jean, also bred by C. N. Powell, was whelped June, 1891, and is by Ormonde (Victor Hugo—Cambrian Princess) Carlotta (Lord Raglan—Wacouta Donna). She is an own sister to Marquis; she has never been shown but is an excellent bodied, good colored bitch, with a somewhat plain face.

Sinaloa, whelped August, 1890, by Ormonde (Victor Hugo—Cambrian Princess)—Phædra Debonair—Danaidies) is one of the first of Mr. Bunn's breeding, and he has been very successful on the bench with her, besides breeding two such good ones as Leamington and Rossington in one litter out of her. She has a very typical skull and muzzle, nice, small, well placed ear, and is good in color, and altogether shows a deal of type and quality. She has won: First, puppy class, Rockford, Freeport and Chicago; first open class, Rockford, Freeport, Chicago and Omaha, and first challenge class Indianapolis and Toronto.

Rowena, whelped July, 1891, by Edric (Jack Thyr—Emma)—Theo (Hero Jr—Laura), bred by her owner, is a grand, big bitch, with a tremendous skull, good muzzle, ear a little overdone, is a good sound mover and a bitch that will hold her own with the best, I think. She won 3rd open and 1st novice, Chicago.

Minna Minting, bred by E. H. Moore, by Minting (Maximillian—Cambrian Princess)—Minna (Lion—Brenda), is a nice quality bitch, with good expression and any amount of character; she is a long, low, massively built bitch and moves better than the average. Her winnings are: Second, open class, Toronto, Rochester and Indianapolis, and in 1894 she won second open, Chicago, and first at Des Moines and Toronto.

Rossington, whelped August, 1892. By Beaufort's Black Prince (Beaufort—Gerda) —Sinaloa (Ormonde—Phædra), was bred by his owner. This is a nice, symmetrical young dog, with good body, legs and feet, and excellent color. His head shows quality and character, although it could be improved, and his eye could, with advantage, be darker. He is sire of some very promising puppies.

Leamington, whelped August, 1892. By Beaufort's Black Prince (Beaufort—Gerda)—Sinaloa (Ormonde—Phædra), bred by owner, is a litter brother to Rossington. He is a good bodied large young dog, with an enormous skull and good eye and expression, and his legs, bone

Among the many other good mastiffs are Ealderman (Beaufort—Emma),second at Des Moines and first Toronto, 1894; Marquis (Ormonde—Carlotta) first Indianapolis, first Des Moines and first Pittsburg; Rosa, bred by owner, and by Lord Raglan (Crown Prince—Lady Rowena)—Wacouta Donna (Ilford Chancellor—Ilford Comedy.)

The fox terriers, which Mr. Bunn is "going into" extensively, were examined with great pleasure. Miss New Forest (Starden's King—Lady New Forest); Restless (First Flight—Warren Tongs) and Partney Ration (Verdad—Ratus) are all three more than useful brood bitches. Then came a couple of puppies, a dog and bitch, by Stanwood Rajah (Blemton Marvel—Raby Nettle), out of Miss New Forest. Both of them strong, good boned youngsters. After these, three bitches and one dog puppy out of Partney Ration by Blemton Marvel (Blemton Victor II—Spinster) were examined. These were a promising lot, one a very neat, pure white bitch, one with a level marked black and tan head. and the other bitch had a half lemon marked head. All three of these are nice ones, but my preference is for the even marked one. The dog puppy is a smart puppy also, but is already cheeky. Lastly came a good dog puppy out of Restless by Blemton Stipend (Stipendiary—Spinster). This was the best of the terriers, but at present he is a bit too leggy and long cast, but he will probably improve with age in this respect.

WHICH IS BEST?

New York.

Editor American Field:—I have read the numerous comments, appearing in your paper, upon my article in the issue of January 19, and I want to thank the gentlemen who have criticised it for their general fairness. Since it appeared Kent Elgin has died and Strideaway has been badly defeated. I am truly distressed at the news of Kent Elgin's death, especially after seeing the very handsome likeness of the dog in your paper; he was a strikingly handsome animal, and his death will be regretted by everyone who loves pointers.

One gentleman made a first-rate point on me as to my markings of the numerous progenitors, where I put a 0 behind Climax in Lad of Rush's pedigree and a 1 behind her in the pedigree of Strideaway. I acknowledge the corn; there is no use trying to explain, and all I can do is to laugh, for he hit me a center. I am sorry that when he said the motive of my article was plain he did not go on and tell me what the motive was, for I have been trying to settle that in my own mind. One amiable gentleman told a friend I was writing for a free stud fee from Strideaway. It never occured to me the article was worth so much. I feel flattered. Now I have bred to Strideaway and I really have not the cheek to ask for free service, but I believe I'll ask Mr. Damon to "trust me until the puppies come," for it is real hard times here I assure you. A man cannot live long in New York on promises to "pay you when I sell my dog." That sort of a thing does not make me mad; it only makes me regret that we find so much of sinis er criticism among dog men. I believe we will all be happier and feel better if we treat each other courteously and abstain from saying mean things and insinuating against each other.

I enjoyed every word Mr. J. L. Adams wrote about Lad of Rush and am proud to see him stand up for him. I certainly did not intend to do injustice to the other two dogs when I praised Strideaway's work. I really thought I had given the substance of all their work, as shown by the American Field, not having access to the other papers quoted. Of course anybody could see I was, as the saying is, "kinder stuck" on Strideaway; but that only meant that I was that way, and evidently "there are others" who are affected similarly toward other dogs. I congratulate Mr. Adams on the splendid testimonial to Lad in the American Field in March or April, 1893, which I have not seen before, and he greatly mistakes if he thinks I meant that either his dog or its pedigree was even ordinary; both are up in the front rank. If he succeeds in getting up the trial he suggests and his dog wins I will say "hurrah for Lad of Rush and hurrah for Mr. Adams; he has proved he was right and I was wrong." And, away down inside, I will feel a satisfaction that the southern dog won, for I am an ex-rebel myself and can't help feeling that way. Then I'll breed Peggy's puppy by Strideaway to Lad, and have a dandy.

Mr. Bolus knows a great deal about dogs; nobody knows more, and if his opinions differ from mine they would have great influence with me. I did not know Pearlstone as he did, and I will defer to his judgment as to her quality; but I did not consider Bang Bang as a dog of as much merit as Trinket's Bang in the field. Vera Bang I did not know, and I marked her as unknown to me. I am glad to hear she was so fine an animal. I think, like Mr. Bolus, that the dam gives the offspring its characteristics much oftener than the sire.

As to Rip Rap, I did not discuss him because the controversy I was discussing only embraced the three dogs mentioned. Rip Rap ought to be in the hunt, for there is not a better one going than he. Frankly, I did not breed to him because of his color. I do not like black and whites; it may be a mere notion, perhaps it is, for one of the best I ever hunted over was of that color. As Strideaway is liver and white, by the same sire, and out of a favorite bitch with me I turned to him. Mr. Bolus will make no mistake in breeding to Rip Rap, and I have no doubt he will get some great puppies. I intend to keep four bitches (if I have so many) from the Strideaway—Peggy litter, and I will cross them, if I can, to the Lad of Rush and Rip Rap puppies. What I am after is the best.

Plover.

Guyton, Miss.

Editor American Field:—The issue of the American Field of February 9 has just come to hand, and among the good things in it I notice an article written by our friend Bolus, wherein, seemingly through his desire to call attention to a prospective litter of puppies which he is to have soon, he rather goes out of his way, I think, to make a few misstatements regarding Strideaway. With the opportunities Mr. Bolus has had to judge of the qualities of Strideaway he certainly should be able to describe his style and abilities with at least a fair degree of accuracy; he failed most lamentably, however. To accomplish what he desires has to compare Strideaway with Kent Elgin and says, "Strideaway gets away quicker than Kent Elgin and has more tail action, but goes with his head lower, is a little inclined to get his nose on the ground, likes to come in and see his handler a little more than Kent did, don't range as widely, nor has he as much style on point, nor as good a nose," all of which is rubbish, except the first statement that Strideaway gets away quicker.

The only time these dogs met Kent Elgin (an aged dog) beat Strideaway (a Derby dog), but the fact is that if the little dog had been well the decision of the judges would have been reversed. Strideaway was far from working up to his true form in that stake. Regarding his carrying his head, his style on point, and his nose, it is a fact that in these points Strideaway excels, so much so as to be as good as any dog ever put down in public and the superior of Kent Elgin, particularly in style on point and in action. As for range there might be some room for argument if compared to some dogs, but certainly not to Kent Elgin. When in condition Strideaway had fully as much, or more, than this dog, and as much as any dog should have. He never bolted, however, a thing Kent has done more than once.

In making this comparison I do not refer to any particular heat, for I am aware, as everybody is who has seen all of Strideaway's heats—Mr. Bolus has seen three of his and three of Kent's—that from indisposition he has a few times not run up to his true form. As for nose, no dog can have a better one; it is full choke-bore.

Editor American Field:—Setter men recognize the fact, to their sorrow, that Rip Rap is the pointer most prominent as a lowerer of their colors and consider him the best pointer to-day in America. It's "a wise" Plover that knows when to get in out of the rain.

WHEREIN THEY DIFFERED

St Louis, Mo.

Editor American Field:—I thought the interested parties to the controversy as to the relative merits of Kent Elgin, Strideaway and Lad of Rush had exhausted the subject until I read the American Field of February 9 and there found two columns and a half of extracts from the American Field and two other papers. This being the third time these extracts have been published, first in the papers, second time by Mr. Adams in pamphlet form, and now in the American Field. Colonel Adams did not include the reporter's adverse criticism of the same judges awarding Lad first over Mamie S in the Pointer Derby at Elizabethtown.

It is not the merits of the three dogs mentioned I wish to discuss—they are all good ones—but to show where the judges differed from the reporters in the heats between Lad and Lillian Russell and Lad and Novelist. I will touch only on the points of difference and leave the question as to right or wrong decision of the judges with the public. The writer's being one of the judges of these heats is his apology for this.

In the heat between Lad and Lillian, the work that lost Lad the heat the judges and reporters differ widely over. The judges contend the bevy Lad found and deliberately blinked was a bad piece of work for him, with no palliating excuse for his blinking the bevy. The point was well established, and the wind if any was in the dog's favor, the birds not moving; they were within twenty feet of the dog's nose and no one was near enough to disturb the dog, yet he was in plain view of the writer, Mr. Bedford, some spectators and, I think, his owner. There was no whistling to call him off. I can see no reason why he blinked the bevy, drew away, and did not return to it, but went on another cast; his handler walking in and flushing the bevy when the dog had left it, not knowing the dog had pointed them I do not think any reporter saw the work Their description of same, where they excuse the dog on the ground he had missed the birds and went away on a cast after them, was a grave error. The writer judged Lad in four different trials, and this is the only time he ever saw him blink a point. The reporter for Turf, Field and Farm stated the judges were not unanimous in the decision. I will only add this, that all decisions when I judged were made unanimous bofore any decision was rendered. There are other minor points—range, speed, etc.—whereon there is a difference, but the work noted was the pivotal work that lost Lad the heat.

In the heat between Novelist and Lad I will as briefly as possible state the differences between the judges and the reporters. The reporters claim Lad was wrongfully held up and not allowed to work on single birds of a bevy he had just pointed. The writer, who was in charge of the handlers at the time, publicly ordered up both dogs and publicly stated the work either did while separated would not be counted. Novelist was out of view at the time, her handler claiming she was pointing. This being a competitive heat between two dogs for first money, both dogs had a right to work on single birds after the bevy had been flushed, and the dog finding same had been credited with the find, as had been done in this case. The flushed bevy under these circumstances was common property. Neither dog had the exclusive right to work on this flushed bevy. When the dogs were brought together the heat was resumed, both dogs being given equal chances to work on the bevy referred to. Again the reporters state Novelist flushed a bevy in a pasture. The writer saw some hogs, running from the sight of Novelist, flush this bevy. Again, I think the reporters did not see the birds rise or the cause, they being some distance to the rear of the judges and escorting some ladies who were happily showing their appreciation of [illegible] witnessing same. The judges were wa[illegible] closely, as this pasture had several tim[illegible] drawn and had always yielded from or[illegible] and in this instance yielding two bev[illegible] ing pointed by Lad under the judges[illegible] dogs were being taken to work on th[illegible] by the hogs. The reporters claim t[illegible] after Lad had pointed another bevy he was ordered held. This bevy had been flushed to his point and he given credit for same. The dogs had become widely separated and were working on different birds. Both dogs were again ordered up until they could be brought together, one judge galloping his horse back to notify Mr. Avent and the other judge, when a chain was put on Novelist until the dogs could be brought together, when the heat was resumed. This course being necessary owing to dogs becoming separated so often. There is a wide difference between the reporters and judges about the last bevy found in the heat between Lad and Novelist. I give one reporter's version of this: "Passing into some woods Lad was called in by his handler and had not taken six steps in the new direction before several birds flushed wild ahead, he stopping to wing; and the main bevy flushed from side to side immediately after." Mr. Madison, who was one of the judges, and the writer were riding through the woods as noted, also Mr. Adams and Mr. Blankenbaker with Lad only a short distance in front of him. Lad going slow, for he had lost much of his speed, flushed a large bevy with wind, if any, in his favor. The reporters were following the other judge, Mr. Stephenson, and Mr. Avent, the latter handling Novelist, on edge of woods a short distance to one side, and I do not think any reporter saw the flush owing to the timber. It was in plain view of Mr. Madison and the writer, and a worse flush would be hard for any dog to make. In point work Novelist was superior. Lad found the most bevies—all but the one flushed by the hogs that Novelist would have soon pointed or flushed. Two of Lad's bevies were creditable finds, one was under the judges' horses' noses as he was being taken to work on the bevy the hogs flushed, as already noted, one was a bad flush, as described. Lad did not do creditable work on single birds, flushing as many as he pointed. In speed and range at the start there was nothing to choose between them; at the finish Novelist was the better. In style there was nothing to choose between them. The decision of the judges was unanimous.

It was said after this heat that Lad was not well; indeed it was claimed he was a sick dog. I do not think any sick dog could have beaten Novelist in this heat; and very few well ones could have.

Again apologizing for the cause that called forth this, I trust with it closes the writer's appearance in print in this connection.

HUNTING TO THE GUN

Mason, Tenn.

Editor American Field:—I read with much pleasure in one of your late issues an article on hunting to the gun, by Mr. P. H. Bryson; he hit the right nail, and hit it squarely on the head. It might be truthfully said of Mr Bryson in relation to field trials as it was said of George Washington in relation to his country. Mr. Bryson's long connection with field trial interests, his great experience afield with dog and gun, his close observation of a dog's every movement, and his uniformly just and candid criticisms certainly entitle his opinions to great weight on such matters; others, I notice, have also harked to his cry and given mouth on the drag. I venture the prediction that if the opinions of all of those interested in field trials could be had there would be not a single dissenting voice on this matter.

Will the judges at future field trials take heed to these expressions of public sentiment? Are they not as much bound to do so as a representative to Congress is bound to properly represent his constituents when Congress is in session? The object of field trials ostensibly and proclaimably is to improve the field qualities of the dog as an accessory to the gun; the gun can do without the dog better than the dog can do without the gun; therefore the dog should always have an eye to the gun, and that dog is the best dog (other things being equal) that furnishes the most work for the gun. I do not think that, as a late writer has put it, there is any danger of the pendulum swinging too far toward potterers. There is a principle or sentiment or something, no matter what you may call it, in human nature that makes "distance lend enchantment to the view," and out of sight things take away familiarity that is said sometimes to breed contempt.

Take two dogs, Don and Sam, and put them down before the judges. Don is a fair speeder and ranger and a methodical and systematic quarterer. Sam is a faster dog, but art has not put its stamp upon him, and the hand of his handler has been laid very lightly upon him: he is somewhat fancy free and strikes out on his own hook, is soon out of sight, does not put in an appearance to his handler's whistle, everybody goes to looking for him, he is found after some time, and he has a covey with head and tail up and as stanch as a rock. Don is called up to back, and responds promptly; he has been working in his methodical way but has found nothing. The birds are flushed and shot at, when Sam is a little unsteady to shot, but stops when spoken to loudly by his handler. Don is perfectly steady, with his eye on his handler; while Sam watches the birds, which have flown to a good place to get in single work. The dogs are started off in that direction to be tried on them; Sam is the first to get to the place and has one nailed when the judges get in sight; Don has been working the ground between the places, but when he gets there he is easily handled and beats Sam on the singles; it is hard for Sam's handler to keep him in, for he wants to get off. After working up these birds the dogs are again sent off to find another covey. Sam goes in his fancy-free-you-follow-me-and-I'll-find-the-birds style, and Don in his systematic-eye-to-the-gun style; they come out about even in [illegible] points during the heat, or maybe Don has m[illegible] his credit, but Sam has struck the fancy of th[illegible] They do not forget him; he is somewhat unt[illegible] way, and he has been out of sight at least a third [illegible] time down. Don has always been in sight; if you lo[illegible] away from him, when you wanted to look for him ag[illegible]

...would know almost exactly where to look to see him. ...s work looks tame and commonplace by the side of ...'Lon' Sam's. Such is human nature, and judges ..., you know, have some human nature in ...

...things in this world that command ... which high valuations are placed. ... trotting colt Arion (2:10¼) sold for $125,000, but if all two-year-old colts could trot a mile in 2:10½ Arion would sell for no more than a common plug; if diamonds were as numerous as gravel they would command no higher price. I have seen rare and costly flowers that were not as pretty to look at as a cotton bloom, nor did they smell any better than a Jamestown weed. If jaybirds were as scarce as canaries every lady in the land would want a dear jay, and their now harsh note of jay-jay-jay would be declared to be the sweetest of sounds. So it seems that such dogs as Sam, on account of their uniqueness, find a place in the hearts more than in the judgment of field trial judges and are frequently placed over more worthy dogs.

I prefer the dog that is a wide ranger and a systematic quarterer. I feel better satisfied to leave a field when hunting with a dog of this kind than when hunting with one that has only hunted the so-called "likely" places, for I have found out by my own experience that what is a likely place one ay is not necessarily a likely place the next day. I had occasion not many years ago to go out across the country about four miles, and I let one of my dogs (a regular quarterer) follow me; he treated all places with the same respect. It was late in the Winter and all the crops had been long since gathered and the fences were down, so that I took the nearest cuts regardless of roads. This dog found and pointed eight coveys, and every covey was in what would be called the most unlikely places, namely, in the bare cotton patches. I could see the birds running on the ground. Now if I had had along in place of this dog one that only hunted likely places I should have gone back home with the impression that birds were very scarce in the fields I passed through. But such is life; as an old neighbor of mine used to say, "Live an' larn." My experience in bird hunting has been like Sancho Panza about the hare, "When you are least aware up starts the hare."

A likely place in the first part of the bird hunting season is not a likely place in the late part, nor even in the middle part; and a likely place in one part of a day is not always a likely place in another part of the same day; and a likely place in a very dry season is not a likely place in a wet season, and so on; and while I believe that a good number of dogs have more sense about some things than most men, yet I am constrained to believe that a quartering dog has greatly the advantage of a likely-place-hunter throughout a whole season's work.

LEGISLATION FOR THE DESTROYING OF DOGS IN WISCONSIN

We have been favored by Mr. G. A. Buckstaff, of Madison, Wis., with a copy of a bill—introduced in the Wisconsin legislature by a Mr. Lamberson, and read first and second times and referred to the committee on agriculture—said to be "in relation to the keeping of dogs." It is a vicious measure which should be entitled "in relation to the destroying of dogs." Beyond his introduction of this disgraceful bill, we know nothing of Mr. Lamberson, but the very fact that he is the father of such narrow-minded and probably unconstitutional legislation will convey a host of information to our readers concerning this hitherto obscure statesman.

Every Wisconsin owner of dogs should make it a personal matter to aid in defeating this bill, and should without loss of time communicate with the representative of his district, meanwhile with the utmost despatch securing as many names as possible to a protest, to be sent to the representative and by him presented to the committee on agriculture, against the passing of this bill, which is here given.

A BILL

IN RELATION TO THE KEEPING OF DOGS

The people of the state of Wisconsin, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Every person owning or keeping a dog in this state shall provide such dog with a collar on its neck, upon which shall be engraved the name of the person being the owner or keeper of such dog, and every dog found not wearing such collar and not being upon the premises of such owner or keeper, shall be deemed a public nuisance, and may be killed and exterminated as such without penalty.

SECTION 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the first day of May, 1895.

This bill ought to be amended to include horses, cattle, and all other live stock; it would then be sure of meeting with the unceremonious, contemptuous and pronounced rejection which it deserves.

NOTES

THE Supreme Court of Louisiana held in the recently decided case of Suthon v. Town of Houma, that its jurisdiction of cases involving the constitutionality or legality of taxes, fines, penalties, or forfeitures imposed by a muncipal corporation does not extend to a case presenting the question of the validity of the payment by a dog owner of a so-called "dog tax," under a town ordinance authorizing the killing of dogs running at large without a collar obtained from the town, and to be paid for by the owner of the animal. The plaintiff, in this case, paid under protest and sued to recover the amount exacted by the town of Houma under an ordinance authorizing the killing of dogs running at large unless provided with a collar, to be obtained from the town authorities on payment by the owner of the dog of the "dog tax," as it was called, required by the town. The justice of the peace gave him judgment; the town appealed; and he moved to dismiss the appeal; which motion was granted, the Supreme Court stating that it had no general supervision over ordinances of municipal corporations. Its appellate jurisdiction, it explained, extended to cases involving the legality or constitutionality of taxes, tolls, imposts, fines, penalties or forfeitures imposed by municipal corporations. But this dog ordinance was a police regulation to abate a nuisance. The owner of a dog was permitted to secure his animal from the operation of the ordinance on payment of the so-called "dog tax," more properly the "collar fee." The amount so paid was not a fine or forfeiture. Nor was it a tax on property. The payment was not obligatory. The part of the ordinance relating to this collar fee was an incident of a police regulation, the validity of which was not submitted to the revision of the Supreme Court. Similar ordinances have been sustained as measures of police, within the competency of the police power of town corporations, but it was considered enough here to say that the court had no jurisdiction.

WE have been forwarded the following amusing correspondence concerning a dog-and-gun trade; the first letter was in answer to a request from the dog owner for a complete description of the gun, including length and drop of stock:

TORONTO, O., January 21, 1895.

MR. ——,

Dr Sir:—i have told you what i would due in exchange of your dog if you want to Exchange send your dog and i will send you Eather set of barles which ever you desire But only one set you can get a stock maid to fit you if you want to trade Plese ancer at once if not Plese excuse me for taking up your time and a bligc i can give you a pup from the dog and a fine english setter Bitch as soon as i can get onc from him and this the Best i can do it takes 26 hours to get mail from you and if i dont get a ancer by return mail i will declare the Exchange of as i have a offer of a irish setter from your state and i think i will take it if you do not trade i made you the first offer and i will give you the first chance. Yours respectfully, ——.

WYALUSING, PA., January 23, 1895.

MR. ——,

Dear Sir:—Your letter, in which you state exactly what you will do, received. Please accept thanks for the description of the gun barrels which you were so kind as to offer to me in exchange for my thoroughly trained setter. Your offer, I consider, is very generous and I can easily understand how I should be elated by this opportunity of exchanging a dog worth $100 for a second-hand set of gun barrels worth probably $15. I note what you have written in regard to exchanging the gun barrels for an Irish setter, and am inclined to think it would be an even exchange. Your suggestion that I could have a stock made to fit the barrels is a very good one. As you have made me this offer I believe I should either accept or make you a proposition, and as I can hardly agree to exchange on your terms I make you this offer. For your gun barrels without lock or stock I will send you a setter dog's tail and you can get a dog to fit the tail. This I consider to be an ellagant offer on my part, and if you are satisfied you can send me the barrels and I will send you the tail. Very truly yours, ——.

I met a few days ago a gentleman whom I had permitted to breed his cross-bred setter bitch to one of my dogs. I refused him for some time, knowing him to be a man who knew nothing of bird-dogs, but as he was my neighbor I finally gave my consent; and the affair turned out about as I had expected. He told me that the puppy he raised from my dog was worthless. I inquired of him the cause, asking him if he had had the dog trained. He said he had not, but that his son had taken the dog out several times and that it would run rabbits, chase birds, kill chickens, and take in the country generally, and that he thought my dogs were quail dogs. The thing was so ridiculous I could not help laughing in the man's face. I did say once that I never would sell or train a dog for anyone but a dog-man; and by this I mean one who hunts regularly and understands what a trained dog should do and who knows something of the methods and principles of dog training, and of handling a dog after it has been trained. But we poor dog trainers get hard up and are willing to sell to anyone that will pay us our price. Not infrequently a rich fellow buys a high-class, well-bred puppy, sends it to a trainer, pays $150 to have it trained, and after its education is finished and it is returned, its owner knows just about as little about managing and handling it as I would about running an engine. I have often thought that it would be a good thing if the trainer could get hold of the owner and handle him a little.

Dallas, Tex. MUZZLELOADER.

AT a meeting held on February 3 in Oakland, Cal., the president, Mr. W. L. Prather Jr., being in the chair, the Alameda County Sportsmen's Association decided by a unanimous vote to hold a dog show at Oakland on May 1, 2, 3 and 4. A show committee was appointed by President Prather, consisting of the following: W. C. Purcell, F. E. Miller, J. D. Donelson, E. C. Prather, Charles Royce, Robert J. Boyer, C. C. Cole, F. W. Boell, J. H. Sammy. A committee, consisting of Messrs. W. L. Prather Jr., W. C. Purcell and F. E. Miller, was also appointed to wait on the Pacific Kennel Club of San Francisco and acquaint its members with what had been done by the association. The Oakland show will come between the Los Angeles and San Francisco shows, and it is expected that the best dogs exhibited in Los Angeles will be entered in Oakland, and many of the Oakland entries will be duplicated in San Francisco. In this way one show will be a help to the other. The meeting was then adjourned until the evening of February 6, when the annual election was postponed two weeks. Resolutions were passed asking the American Kennel Club to amend Rule 15, so far as dog shows held west of the Rocky Mountains are concerned, as the rule renders it impossible for a dog to win the title of champion, and to amend Rule 5, which bars from recognition shows whereat less than $500 is offered in prize money. The meeting was then adjourned until the evening of February 19.

THE Wilmington Kennel Club is creating considerable interest among the residents of this city, both as regards owning finely bred dogs and in the protection of the canine race promiscuously. Constant and voluntary offers to sign a petition to our legislature for the passage of a bill to make dogs personal property are tendered the different members of the club, and I am sorry that I have received only one copy of such a law now existing in other states, in answer to my request for same, so kindly published by you last month. If any of the fraternity have not the ability to furnish such copy, if they will send me the address of some one in their state who can furnish it I will be exceedingly obliged to them. We want to draft a bill that will succeed and benefit us, and we have but little time to act, our legislature being now in session. Our president, Dr. J. F. Belt, is scoring wins innumerable wherever he sends his famous fox terriers, and from present indications he will soon be followed by other members, as they all want winners or none. The blizzard has destroyed hundreds of quails and rabbits in this state, and even chickens and hogs have been frozen in great numbers. Unless we liberate some quails our shooting will be limited next season.

E. W. JESTER,
Wilmington, Del. Secy. Wilmington Kennel Club.

LAST Saturday A. L. Orr, manager of Mr. J. R. Oughton's kennel of Gordon setters at Dwight, Ill, passed through Chicago on his way to the New York show, for which he has made six entries and where he hopes to win the silver vase (value $100) offered by the AMERICAN FIELD with that good dog Heather Lad. The Dwight Kennel has made six entries at Detroit also, he informed us, and at the latter city will also exhibit Dwight Don for Mr. L. P. Higgins, who purchased this promising young dog from Mr. Oughton some months ago. Four of the Dwight entries are puppies, but they will have a "go" for the open class prizes at Detroit. We had quite a talk with Mr. Orr about the Gordon setter trials at Assonet last November, which he attended and of which he did not form a high opinion. He said he hopes the Gordon Setter Club will be persuaded to hold its trials in the West next Fall, and that Mr. Oughton would guarantee to provide one thousand acres well stocked with birds. Mr. Oughton is going to England in March, and talks of bringing back one or two mastiffs.

CHAMPION OSSINING (13325) died on February 9, his death being caused by pneumonia. I prized him greater than any dog I ever owned, for as an all-around dog I have never owned his equal and doubt very much if I ever will. We had many a pleasant day afield and many were the birds I brought to bag over his points; he was equally good on quail, woodcock and grouse, a pleasant dog to hunt, a hard, industrious worker and game as a pebble. Judging from his show record he was, beyond a doubt, the best son of Champion Robert le Diable. Following is a list of his wins: 3d New York, 2nd Boston, 2nd Wilmington and 1st Danbury, 1890; 1st Lynn, 2nd Boston, 1st Cleveland, 1st Kingston, 1st Hamilton, 1st Toronto, 1st Montreal and 1st (challenge) Gloversville, 1891; 1st (challenge) Pittsburg, 1st (challenge) Boston and 1st (challenge) Omaha, 1892; special at Kingston for best in open class, special at Hamilton as one of best kennel, special at Ottawa as one of best kennel, special at Washington for best get of Robert le Diable or Duke of Hessen, special at Omaha for best pointer dog.

North Tarrytown, N. Y. WM. H. HYLAND.

MR. EDW. A. BURDETT, president of the Swan Lake Club, near Henry, Ill., and owner of several fine field trial dogs, has been sojourning for the past few months at Asheville, N. C., where he has had a most enjoyable outing, as the following extracts from an interesting and gossipy letter to us will show: "I have recently added to my kennel the English setter bitch Gossip, by Roderigo—Belle of Piedmont, that I purchased from the Blue Ridge Kennels. Gossip is a beautiful black, white and tan, and has won three first prizes on the bench. I have just returned from a week's shooting trip near Newton, N. C., accompanied by Mr. J. A. Porter of Asheville. We found an abundance of quails and made a good bag, averaging from thirty to thirty-five per day. We used four dogs, alternating them each day. We had good accommodations at various farmhouses and altogether it is an excellent place for sportsmen seeking a desirable location, though probably much better during the Fall than at the present season, as the birds are now strong, hard flyers."

WE have completed all the arrangements to hold our dog show on April 10, 11, 12 and 13. Our premium list will be very liberal and is now ready for the printer, and we expect to have same ready to mail all over this country and Canada by the latter part of this week. We are working like beavers to make our third annual show an absolute success. So far we have special premiums in the way of valuable merchandise and cash far ahead of any previous show. Our newly elected officials I see the AMERICAN FIELD gave last week. We have secured old City Hall, situated in the center of Pittsburg, well lighted and heated and a most excellent place for the show, being only a couple of minutes' walk from our leading hotels and railway stations. If liberality of premiums and specials will be an incentive we should have no trouble in getting the best breeds of all classes of the doggy world here. Our treatment of the "boys" and their dogs in the past is sufficient guarantee that the "Smoky City" fanciers will give all a royal welcome.

W. E. LITTELL,
Pittsburg. Secy. Duquesne Kennel Club.

WE stated last week that probably some corrections in the Westminster Kennel Club's entries would have to be made, and so it turns out; however, we can congratulate ourselves that the list we published last week was correct up to date (entries were received subsequently from England), which is more than can be said of some of our cotemporaries' efforts—one New York cotemporary stated the total number of entries was 1,605, and at the same time presented an itemized list that added up to a total of 1,545. We have received from Mr. Jas. Mortimer—of whose affliction, through the death of his eldest son, we are very sorry to hear—a communication giving the corrected figures, which show that the St. Bernard entries number 147, not 148; bloodhounds 12, not 11; pointers 113, not 111; English setters 105, not 102: Irish setters 83, not 77; spaniels 124, not 123; collies, 98, not 91; poodles 78, not 77; Irish terriers 50, not 51; black-and-tans 18, not 19; pugs 10, not 8; schipperkes 6, not 7; and miscellaneous 9, not 8. These corrections increase the total from 1,616 to 1,636!

MR. F. H. PERRY sends a notice of his Irish setter bitch Nino having whelped on January 25 and accompanies it with a few interesting remarks about this good old bitch. He says: "Nino is about the last of the combination of old Champion Elcho and that queen of brood bitches Champion Noreen. Nino is nearly ten years old, but is well preserved and perfectly healthy, taking her hunts regularly every day when she is not nursing puppies. She is the dam of fifteen prize-winners, among them being Champion Pride of Patsy, and has raised ninety fine puppies, many of which, however, have gone to the happy hunting ground before her. Her show winnings were: 1st at Kansas City in 1888; 3rd at Chicago in 1889; 2nd at Denver in 1889; 3rd at Chicago in 1890; 1st at Rochester in 1890; 1st at Rockford, Ill., in 1890. I am getting a number of answers to the advertisement I placed in the AMERICAN FIELD for two high-class young Irish setters. We want something to run in the field trials next Fall, and of the right blood to use on our Echo—Frisco bitches. I think we are going at it the right way now to produce some Irish setter field trial winners."

WE wish to remind our readers that entries for the Denver show will close next Wednesday, February 27. Those living in the West who have not made entries for the Eastern shows will do well to think twice before they pass the Denver show, which will be the only show, besides the Mascoutah Kennel Club's, they will have an opportunity to attend, and we can promise anyone with a day or two to spare and a taste for sport on the plains that they will have a good opportunity to enjoy themselves after the show is over, while the show itself is always a very pleasant affair. The Denver fanciers have worked industriously for a good show, and, as they have been at some expense in past years to maintain their annual show, it behooves owners and handlers to give them every possible encouragement in the way of entries. Secretary Weiant's address can be found in the club's advertisement in our business columns, and we hope that next week he will be deluged with letters containing entries.

THE following figures, published in the Belfast, Me., Republican Journal, show that the dog taxes paid by owners in the principal towns of Maine have proved a valuable contribution to the state's revenue, the amount paid out for "sheep killing" being but a small percentage of the receipts: "In 1894 Bangor paid to the state $976 in dog taxes; Auburn, $660; Augusta, $325; Belfast, $324; Biddeford, $421; Brewer, $225; Brunswick, $377; Cape Elizabeth, $427; Eastport, $193; Ellsworth, $256; Gardiner, $185; Gorham, $244; Houlton, $95; Hallowell, $152; Lewiston, $785; Oldtown, $205; Portland, $1,302; Saco, $272; Sanford, $469; South Berwick, $305; Waterville, $234; Westbrook, $303. Houlton received back from the state the largest amount of damage for sheep killed by dogs, $75. Howland received back $62; Buxton, $71.50; Bangor, $54.50; Boothbay, $35; Medway, $36."

A RECENT issue of the Daily News, of London, England, published the following letter from the Rev. H. O. Welsse of the lower school, Rugby, dated January 27: "I witnessed to-day an act of courage that should be recorded, and I think it a fair case for the Royal Humane Society. A fine Airedale terrier ran onto the partially frozen river, and broke through the ice in mid-stream. The river is very deep at the place, and after a prolonged struggle the poor brute was sinking, when my colleague, Mr. A. W. Dennis, at the serious risk of his life, by cold or water, threw off his coat and plunged through the ice, swam out, and safely brought the dog ashore. The all-but-bearing thickness of the ice in shore made the act one of peculiar courage and danger. Humanity toward human beings is common enough, but the Royal Humane Society will not easily find a better case of humanity toward a dumb animal."

THE bloodhound dog Buccaneer (late McComo) has been purchased from Dr. Stahl of Boston, who recently imported this hound, by Mr. Roger D. Williams; and his kennel companion, Calliope, accompanied Buccaneer, having also been bought by Mr. Williams. The last named gentlemen has been doing some selling himself, and has parted with his well-known American foxhounds Argonaut and Bowsprit (dog and bitch), winners last year in their respective open classes at the Boston, Chicago, Louisville, Des Moines and Pittsburg Athletic Club's shows; their new owner is Mr. W. B. Foster of Brockton, Mass., and they will go to the circuit in Ben Lewis' care. Mr. Williams has made entries for the Chicago show, but we regret to hear that he is not likely to be able to accompany his dogs.

WHEN I first acknowledged being the person alluded to in your columns by Mr. Smith, it was with the full intention of not replying to anything he might write. But since his last letter I must again beg permission to trespass. I still adhere to my opinion as to the dog's age and as to his hunting qualities. He had a very large wound on top of his head about the size of a half dollar, which Mr. Smith claimed was made by a barbed wire fence; it was a funny place, and it might have been caused this way. I think it was strange, if this dog was as good as Mr. Smith claims and there was no skeleton in the closet, that he should give me the advantage of twenty-five dollars when at nearly every mail I would receive a letter or postal, sometimes both, stating Mr. So-and-So wanted the dog, and to be quick or he would let this other man have him. Your editorial, which I referred to in my last, said beware of such dealers.

Seaford, Del. H. C. HOPKINS.

DURING the Ohio State Poultry Association's third annual exhibition in Columbus, O., its president, Dr. M. F. Lee, is reported by the Columbus Despatch to have made the following statement: "We do not exhibit any dogs now at our poultry shows. Our reason for excluding dogs is that their barking worries the chickens. Of course those fowls that are raised with dogs don't mind the barking, but all others are kept continually in a worried condition. Some years ago I had some fine chickens on exhibition in the city hall at a combined poultry and dog show. The dogs barked almost incessantly, and one of my birds lost three pounds from fright and worry." There are some people we know of that have had all they want of exhibiting dogs at poultry shows.

NEBRASKA is a long way ahead of Wisconsin in the matter of canine legislation, as will be seen by the following bill which was introduced in the Nebraska legislature by Mr. Wm. Simeral and has been read twice:

Be it enacted by the legislature of the state of Nebraska:

That all dogs in the state of Nebraska are hereby declared to be personal property, and any person willfully destroying the same, or stealing, or taking with intent to steal, any dog of any other person, shall be guilty of larceny under the laws of the state of Nebraska as applied to petit and grand larceny; provided, That any dog running at large, without a sufficient collar and tag thereon, for the period of ten days, in any city, town or village in this state, shall be declared a nuisance and the proper authorities may destroy the same.

SECTION 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the first day of June, 1895.

WE have received from the Alta Kennel a complete list of all the progeny of the famous St. Bernard bitch Judith that have ever faced a judge, and their winnings, and a wonderful list it is. It is doubtful if her record has ever been beaten by a bitch of any breed, and should her last two litters prove as successful as their predecessors the Alta Kennel would have good cause to publish the entire record in pamphlet form for circulation among the fancy and prospective buyers.

THE following additional special prizes are offered, by "a friend of the breed" (what a chestnut this is getting to be), for competition at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show: A handsome cup for the best Irish setter dog exhibited that has been placed in any public field trial in the world; a handsome cup for the best Irish setter dog exhibited that has been placed in any public field trial in the world, with two of his get, the three to be judged together.

AN Irish setter breeder, who is the proud owner of three bitches full of Elcho Jr and Bessie Glencho blood, writes to report progress and what he is doing in the breeding line, and winds up with: "I call this the acme of scientific breeding, and if I have the luck to raise the best of these three litters I will show the greatest string in 1897 ever seen in this country." It is a far cry to 1897, and when the wheel of time has brought us to that year our extremely confident correspondent will probably find that other breeders of Irish setters have not stood still.

IT is with pleasure we give the Pittsburg dog show a place in our list of Kennel Fixtures. After two months of suspense, during which time a good deal of "hustling" has been done, the Duquesne Kennel Club has got matters in shape for a dog show, which will be held the week preceding the Boston show. A brief note from the President of the club informs us that the kennel prizes will be $15.

OWING to an incorrectly marked catalog, our list of winners of special prizes at the Cincinnati Poultry and Pigeon Association's recent show gave Mr. T. J. Ellis as winner of the kennel prize for beagles. Now comes Mr. Buning of Cold Springs, Ky., saying, "the judge awarded the kennel prize for beagles, about a yard of blue ribbon, to me," and asking that we announce the correction, which we cheerfully do.

WE can state positively that Dr. N. Rowe has decided to resign the presidency of the United States Field Trial Club, and will send in his resignation at an early date.

Hot Springs, Ark.—Solid Train Through from St. Louis

Commencing Sunday, February 17, the Iron Mountain Route will run a solid train through from St. Louis to Hot Springs, cousisting of vestibuled sleeping cars, reclining chair cars (seats free), and baggage cars, leaving Grand Union Station 6:35 p. m. daily, arriving at Hot Springs, 12:30 noon, next day. The climate at this famous resort is mild and invigorating, coming as it does from the pine clad mountains surrounding the "Valley of Vapors." The three grand hotels, accommodating two thousand people, are villages in themselves, music being furnished in the rotunda, as well as many other attractive features, such as dancing, progressive euchre, etc. The donkey parties, horseback riding and drives to the many adjacent springs and resorts in the mountains are well patronized, and very enjoyable, as the roads are fine, and the scenery beautiful. Descriptive and illustrated pamphlets furnished free on application to company's agents, or H. C. TOWNSEND, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis.

EXHIBITION and auction sale of paintings by the late J. M. Tracy. All sportsmen know Tracy's paintings. No American painter excelled or even equaled him in depicting animated sporting sketches, or in faithful pictures of dogs, horses and other animals. Prints of Mr. Tracy's pictures are very plentiful, but the coming sale is the largest collection of his original works ever shown together. About 150 of his best and most characteristic paintings will be on exhibition from Monday, February 18, until Thursday, February 21, at J. B. Norman's auction rooms, 238 Fifth Avenue, New York, and the sale will take place on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, February 20 and 21.

THE AMERICAN WATERLOO CUP

HURON, S. D.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—At the annual meeting of the American Coursing Club, at Huron, in October last, a Waterloo Cup, limited to 32 entries, was proposed and agreed upon by the members, to be run in October, 1895. Shortly after this event was made public the club was criticised through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD for limiting the stakes to the Cup only. With a view of ascertaining the feeling of the nominators as to the advisability of adding a Purse and Plate, the chairman requested me to write all parties interested, there being about twenty nominators at that time. This was done resulting in favor (by a large majority) of the addition of a Purse and Plate as well as division of the prizes as noted below.

The possibility of changing the dates of the second payments was also laid before the committee, namely, the change of the second payment from March 1 to April 1 and the final payment from July 1 to August 1. The committee will probably be criticised for making this change, but it thinks it a good move and beneficial to all interested.

Mr. John Grace was written to by the chairman to learn if his services could be obtained as judge, but sent a negative reply.

This is the extent of the business transacted by the committee up to date. The present indications are more than favorable for a grand meeting in October next, and the coöperation of the nominators with the committee in the future as in the past will assure a success.

The prize moneys will be as follows: In the Cup, $400 to the winner, $200 to the runner-up, $56 each to third and fourth: in the Purse, $100 to the winner, $50 to the second, $25 each to third and fourth, in the Plate, $75 to the winner, $25 to the runner-up. Total, $1,000.

F. B. COYNE,
Secy. American Coursing Club.

DATE OF THE ALTCAR CLUB'S MEETING

DENVER, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Some time ago you had an editorial in reference to dates of the various meetings, etc. We therefore looked into the matter and came to the conclusion that you were right about it, and therefore the executive committee of the Altcar Coursing Club recommended that the Altcar meeting commence on Wednesday, October 16, 1895, instead of Tuesday, October 15. Our president, Dr. Norman, at once wrote to Mr. H. C. Lowe, president of the Kenmore Club, in regard to the matter, and he replied that we ought by all means to commence our meeting on Wednesday instead of on Tuesday. We have therefore concluded to make this change and wish you would kindly make the announcement in the AMERICAN FIELD. This change will enable the Huron people, or those participating in the American Waterloo meeting, to have ample time to run off their meeting and leave plenty of time to attend the Altcar meeting. We would have made this announcement sooner, but before doing so deemed it best to consult with Mr. Lowe, president of the Kenmore Club, whose meeting follows Altcar.

We have received a very flattering offer from Las Animas, Colo., where hares are very plentiful and grounds are of the best, to hold our meeting there. We have one or two more places to hear from, and then will announce place of meeting. Should we decide on Las Animas, I think the Lamar people will organize a club, hold a meeting, and add big money, as there is great rivalry between the two places. They are only fifty to sixty miles apart. The elevation is considerably less than at Goodland. Hotel rates and horse and carriage hire are very reasonable.

L. F. BARTELS,
Chairman Executive Committee.

NOTES

THE Altcar Coursing Club again advertises its Produce Stakes in our business columns, and those who have not as yet entered their saplings should study the advertisement and see if they can afford to give such opportunity the go-by. The entrance is only $2, which is the only forfeit if declared out by May 15, when a second payment of $3 falls due. The third forfeit of $5 is payable August 15, by which time the youngsters can be given some sort of a trial in the early hours of the morning and an owner can perhaps get a rough idea which to leave and which to scratch. The final payment of $10 will be paid the day before the meeting commences; in other words, on October 15, the date of the meeting having been put one day later. We are requested to announce that Mr. Basil Hayman will judge, and to call attention to the fact that the club adds $150 to the stakes. Entries, which must be accompanied by $2 each, close on March 1.

THIS week, weather permitting, one more will be added to the long list of Waterloo Cup winners. The cold weather in England for the past few weeks has interfered seriously with coursing, and it may be that the Waterloo Cup meeting will have to be postponed on account of frost, as in Burnaby's year. To hazard a prediction at this distance from the scene of action would be ridiculous of course, but judging by this season's running, the Messrs. Fawcett appear to hold the strongest hand. Mr. Jas. Hedley has once more been elected judge, and Tom Bootiman has been appointed slipper.

AT a recent important sale of greyhounds at Rymill's famed repository in London the principal purchasers were Mr. Cowlin for Count Stroganoff and Mr. Dent for Colonel North. The highest price of the day was 200 guineas, paid by Mr. Ledger, acting for Mr. Vaughn, for Kilrosa, a second season black bitch by Halsted (Greentick—Jenny Jones) out of Misty (Misterton—Ma Chere). Of the saplings, five by Young Fullerton out of Raven made the highest average, realizing 248 guineas. The total amount realized by the sale was about $7,500.

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by the Terra Cotta Kennels, Toronto, Can.

[C]OLLOW RIFLES AND NITRO POWDERS

NELSON, N. Z.

[E]DITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Many months ago I made a [t]est with Schultze, E. C. and S. S. powders in a Marlin .22-caliber repeater, model 1891, and Stevens .22-caliber "Ladies'" rifle. I used the new long rifle cartridge, took out the bullet (a very easy matter) and the powder, refilling the shells with 5½ grains of the above nitros and reseating the bullet, and I inclose herein fac simile copies of the several targets made; and, considering that the powders named and used by me were not manufactured specially for rifle practice, I was surprised at the excellent results. My great regret is that I did not make cardboard targets instead of using a sheet of iron, as the latter caused the bullets to smash up to such a degree that many of the actual hits were quite obliterated. However, it took such a lot of trouble and time to prepare the shells for the experiment that I could not at that time summon up courage for a second trial at cardboard. I may do so some day; meantime I hope some other small-bore crank will have a try.

The only one of the nitros that shot a little erratic was E. C., and this was target No. 2 with the Marlin, which I cannot account for, as it will be seen by reference to the Stevens rifle, No. 1 target, same powder and conditions, the target is very good. There was no smoke, just a white puff like steam, very little report and no fouling. How nice it sounds. No smoke, no noise, and above all, no fouling. The latter is truly a godsend, and I trust the day may come when all .22 caliber cartridges will be filled with nitros. I have read about ordinary primers not being strong enough for these nitro powders; however, the fulminate used in the long rifle cartridge proves sufficient for my purposes and I had not a single misfire.

I may mention that the shooting was done sitting on a low box, holding the rifle on my knees. I find this a very excellent position and one that tends to give a remarkably steady aim. My object was not to test my rifles, but simply to try how nitro powder would behave in these small bores, and I must confess the results were far beyond my expectations. I dare say I hear some of the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD say, what a waste of time, and for what purpose? Well, I confess, the chief purpose was curiosity, but the time was not wasted, as the experiment gave me much amusement and was full of interest.

I am, later on, going to try some experiments to find out the penetration of the .22 caliber rifles with long rifle

BY the saints eternal! What next? That highly-colored article by Mr. J. D. King left me in a precarious condition and the doctors fought hard for my life; but thanks to medical skill, I am still alive. As C. A. R. says, in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, this famous one-eyed Dick should be placed in the national museum and a national song adopted, viz.: "Hail the one-eyed hero comes!" and set it to the tune of Yankee Doodle. But this one-eyed gent must be quite famous down in his country, for a man who is capable of making rifles from common or gas pipe and skin moles by shooting at them with his antique weapons should be immortalized forever. The shots that Mr. Thomson has described are nothing new to me; I would make oath to any of them. I have heard of him ever since I was "knee high to a tadpole." I would be very glad to hear more of Mr. Thomson's remarkable shots through the AMERICAN FIELD, and no doubt many others would. I never doubt any man's word, but that tale of Mr. King's seemed, to me, at least; very much on the Ananias order. I hope Mr. King will pardon me for any insinuations as to his truthfullness, but I can not see what benefit anyone can hope to derive from such highly-scented, coffee-colored descriptions as his.

TO THE TRAP SHOOTERS OF ILLINOIS

The old saying that "idleness is the parent of mischief" is not often more plainly demonstrated than in the fact that Representative Dudley from the Second (Chicago) District, has recently, for the waut of something better to do, we suppose, introduced in the House at Springfield the following bill to prevent live pigeon shooting at the trap.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT TO SUPPRESS PIGEON SHOOTING AND SIMILAR SPORT

SECTION 1.—Be it enacted by the People of the State of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly, That any person who shall keep or use any live pigeon, fowl or other bird, for the purpose of a target, or to be shot at, either for amusement or as a test of skill in marksmanship, and any person who shall shoot at any bird as aforesaid, or be a party to such shooting of any fowl or bird, and any person who shall rent any building, shed, room, yard, field or premises, or shall knowingly suffer or permit the use of any building, shed, room, yard, field or premises for the purpose of shooting any fowl or bird as aforesaid, shall be punished by fine of not less than $3 nor more than $200 for every such offense.

Nothing herein contained shall apply to the shooting of wild game in its wild state.

To find a reason for the introduction of the above bill it is only necessary for us to state that Mr. Dudley is closely allied with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and that as he received the votes of those people last Fall and is in a manner dependent for his living upon their friendship and favor, he felt it necessary to do something to demonstrate that he was in sympathy with them, and as the introduction of a bill to prevent pigeon shooting necessitated as little labor and would probably create less attention and consequently less opposition than any bill he might choose to father for his society, he quietly introduced it, relying doubtless on the hope that because to the average member of the legislature it is of so little importance it would meet with no opposition and easily become a law, and that on his return to his home the members of his society would pat him on the back and proclaim him a great man.

But we imagine that Mr. Dudley reckoned without his host, for when the trap shooters and sportsmen of Illinois, as well as the farmers aud farmers' boys who are raisers of pigeons, learn through the AMERICAN FIELD that such a bill has been introduced, they will send such a remonstrance to their representatives and senators at Springfield as will cause them to note on their reference calendar the following: "Pigeon-hole or kill Dudley's pigeon shooting bill (House—No. 136)," and when it is brought up in committee its fate will be as here indicated.

It is perhaps unnecessary for us to say that there are hundreds of ways for the members of this society to profitably employ their time where their work would be the "prevention of cruelty to animals" —or the human family, without straining at a gnat and trying to make people believe there is cruelty in pigeon shooting at the trap as conducted at the present time.

It is not necessary at this time to enter into a discussion of this matter, for we believe the sportsmen and trap shooters of the state will see that the bill is killed in its infancy; but should they not attack it with as much zeal and determination as the importance of the measure demands, we shall refer to it again at some length.

Abolish live pigeon shooting at the trap and you indirectly do away with an industry that pays the farmer or farmer's boy handsomely for the money invested and labor required—pigeon raising. It would be as reasonable to pass a law prohibiting the raising of chickens or turkeys because they are killed in large numbers during the holidays. The bill should never become a law.

THE WINCHESTER GUN ASSOCIATION

WINCHESTER, VA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Shooting with us now is out of the question with the wind blowing, the snow flying, and the mercury in the thermometer trying to get down into the bulb. But if we cannot hunt or shoot, we can at least sit by the fire and read the AMERICAN FIELD; and after having read it through, even to the last advertisement, we can get out our club score book and send in our record of 1894.

This accurate keeping of club scores is a source of great satisfaction to all the members, for at this season of the year, when even the hunting season is over and one's beloved gun has to be oiled up and put away for a time, it is a great habit of the boys to gather around a good fire at our favorite lounging place and go over and discuss incidents of the trap and the field. One will tell how, after much work and long tramping, he at last succeeded in bringing down that big fat gobbler which fell to his gun during the hunting season just passed; another will tell how a particularly large and lusty old cock pheasant, under peculiarly difficult circumstances, was stopped in his mad career, anon another will commence to smash targets at a great and surprising rate—with his mouth; and, as we do not often allow targets to be broken with anything but a gun, we soon pull the club record book on the would-be challenger of Rolla Heikes, and it generally forces him to subside and take a back seat for the time being. Oh, this record book is great! It can be used so often as an effective squelcher.

The conditions of our season club contest were [illegible] Twenty targets per man on each Wednesday fro[illegible] vember 1. Any shooter missing a shoot can, [illegible] Wednesday, shoot up any or all strings missed [illegible] ceding shoot days. No score shall be counted [illegible] prizes unless the shooter has shot at 400 targets [illegible] ditions. We shot on hot days, we shot on [illegible] shot on windy days, as they came Our grou[illegible] we threw hard, low targets, and while the r[illegible] any of us to be champion target smashers, we h[illegible] good target shots, as shooters who have run against them at various tournaments can testify. The following is the record:

CLASS A

	Gun	Shot at	Broke	Per Centage
C. F. Nelson	Parker	520	425	81¾
S. S. Pothamus	Smith	200	162	81

CLASS B

	Gun	Shot at	Broke	Per Centage
H. H. Baker	Smith	80	57	71¼
Dr. P. W. Miller	Smith	460	322	70
B. Worthington	Parker	40	25	62½

Wm. R. Alexsnder	Parker	240	125	52
Dr. W. A. Bell		40	15	37½
A. Worthington	Smith	80	29	36¼
J. B. Burgess		140	42	30
J. B. Beverly		40	12	30
W. R. Stephenson	Parker	20	6	30

As only four men in the club fulfilled the conditions of the competition by shooting at as many as 400 targets, the prizes were awarded as follows: Class A, C. F. Nelsou, first; Geo. W. Haddox, second; J. P. Haddox, third. Class B, Dr. P. M. Miller got the first and only prize.

For this season's shooting we expect to arrange a system of handicapping that will start all the shooters as nearly as possible on an equal footing, and the man that shows the most improvement will win best prize.

HANDICAPPING THE EXPERTS

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In last week's issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, Mr. J. W. Conner, of Knoxville, Tenn., in his article favoring the expert at trap shoots, wanted to know what we would do if we should wake up some fine tournament morning and find them (the experts) conspicuous by their absence. I quite agree with Mr. Conner that it would be a hard blow to the success of the tournament, but he must remember that all the experts he named, and others, do not always put in an appearance at a tournament together, and I would like to ask him what kind of a tournament a club would have with none but a few experts present? How much of a success would it be? I, and others in my class, are just as glad to welcome experts as anyone, but the amateur has got to be protected, and well protected, too, or what future has one of the greatest sports in the world? It's the good sprinkling of amateurs, as well as experts, that makes the paying and successful tournament nowadays. I know that all the experts (that is, those who are experts for a living) have just as much regard for the rights of the amateur as they have for their own rights, for isn't it to their interest and the interest of the firms they represent to have their good will? Who is it if not the amateurs that are patterning after the experts in regard to the guns and ammunition they are so successful with?

I say give the expert all the chances in the world to pull out of a tournament with a good profit in his own class, but tournament managers should not forget the amateur, but give him also just as many chances, and their shoots will be well attended by both, and the best of good feeling will prevail when one knows that he has just as much of a chance as another, although he may not be quite as good a shot. The majority of amateurs are not expert shots because of circumstances they cannot help. They have not the time aud means to make themselves experts if they had the inclination and this being the case they should not be barred from enjoying themselves once or twice a year. And can a shooter enjoy himself fully when he sees his chauces of only coming out even gobbled up by a certain few who, if they should lose, wouldn't be a cent out of pocket? I think the future of trap shooting depends a great deal upon the course adopted in regard to the amateur. Give us a chance! That is all we ask, and if we do not improve it then no one will be to blame but ourselves.

I am sorry I have not any good system of handicapping to offer, but I think there are those who have had more experience in these matters than I have who can present some good ideas. Maybe the experts can solve the problem. Let us hear from some of them.

NEW YORK GERMAN GUN CLUB

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I take pleasure in giving you herewith such particulars of the annual special sessiou of the New York German Gun Club (January 25, 1895) as will assist in completing the club's record.

The following officers were elected for the ensuiug year: President, August Schmit.; vice-president, Peter Garms Jr.; captain, Fred Sauter; recording secretary, John Steuernagel; corresponding secretary, G. A. Leutheusser; treasurer, J. P. Dannefelser.

The constitution aud by-laws of the club were changed aud revised. The shooting grounds of the club will be Dexter Park, L. I., as in the past, and the third Wednesday in each and every month was accepted as the regular meeting and shooting day.

Distribution of prizes to the best scores during the past year were as follows: Capt. Fred. Sauter received a handsome sterling silver trophy, known as the "President's Cup," for the highest aggregate kills during the last year; the same gentleman won a corduroy hunting suit for most kills with first barrel. Mr. J. F. Wellbrock received a sole-leather gun case for the most kills during all medal shoots. Mr. J. Frazer received a gold medal for most kills in five club shoots. Mr. S. C. Edwards was awarded a cartridge case for the most kills during all private shoots. Mr. J. F. Wellbrock scored the highest average, 90 per cent., and won the club's handsome gold medal twice during the year. The medal will be still open for contest during the present season, as it must be won three times in succession to become the property of the winner.

The last year has been one of success for the club aud the coming season promises to add greatly to the prosperity and welfare of our organizatiou. We are indebted to the courtesy of several members for the following named prizes, which will increase the interest of the coming season's shoots: President August Schmitt presented the club with a sterling silver trophy—the President's Cup; Captain Fred Sauter presented a valuable animal rug or game gun rack, as the winner may choose; Peter Garms Sr. and Chas. Lenoie each gave a gold medal, and J. P. Daunefelser subscribed a gun case. Illness of our president, with whom I had to confer before sending the above for publication, prevented my being more prompt.

G. A. LEUTHEUSSER, Cor. Sec'y.

NOTES

IN another column of this department of our paper, we this week present an illustration showing the members of the Peekskill (N. Y.) Gun Club's winning team of eight men. It is indeed a group of pleasant looking men; men who from their faces one would not judge to be dangerous on any occasion or under any circumstances; but the record they present proves that as a team of trap shooters they are to be feared by the average club, for their team average in a contest on their home grounds, on August 20, 1894, for the state championship trophy, was 95.5 per cent., or 193 breaks out of a possible 200. Each man shot at 25 single Empire targets and the record made was as follows: B. C. Everlinghim 25, Frank Southard 25, M. S. Perry 23, Dr. H. B. Wygant 23, Dr. P. H. Mason 24, W. H. Pierce 24, Dr. S. F. Hortou 25, John B [illegible] The race when these scores were made was with a tea[illegible] number of men from the Marlboro Gun Club of [illegible] N. Y., that club's team scoring in the same race 158 out of [illegible] 200.

FINDING that it will be impossible for us to get our progr[illegible] the hands of shooters before the first of April, and in view of the numerous letters received from all over the country asking [illegible] tion in regard to what rules we expect to shoot under, we deem it w[illegible]e to ask the sportsmen's papers to make the following announce[illegible] for us. There will be eight 20-target events each day with [illegible]d money each day, divided 30, 20, 15, 15, 10 and 10 per cent. [illegible] given for averages each day, divided 50 30 [illegible]tween shooters making the highest averages in [illegible]ting in every event. There will also be $100 [illegible] to be divided 60 and 40 per cent., between [illegible] highest averages, shooting in every event [illegible]. Known traps and unknown angles. [illegible] the world invited; especially the boys [illegible] fancy in 1894. We have made special rates with the [illegible] feel sure of a half rate over all railroads. We are determined to make this the greatest gathering of high-class shooters that ever met in the United States, and looking to that end we have determined to give personal attention to all visitors and see that they enjoy themselves.

MR. FRED VON LENGERKE, of Weimar, Tex., a sportsman through and through, as is every male member of his family, visited his brother, Mr. O. Von Lengerke, of Chicago, recently. Although he had not seen his Chicago brother for twenty years, when Oswald was only "a kid," as the boys say, yet there was something in his manner or walk that he recognized when seeing the latter on the street as belonging to the family characteristics, and to satisfy himself that he was correct he sounded a note or two of that peculiar Jersey whistle. Oswald heard it and recognized it as coming from a Jerseyman that had trained with his family, and he quickly turned to see where it came from, but he did not recognize the man until later, when, in the store of the latter, he made himself known. It was a pleasant meeting to be sure.

THE Worcester (Mass.) Sportsman's Club will hold a tournament at inanimate targets on March 6 and 7, and on the evening of the first day of the tournament the club will hold its annual meeting and a banquet at the Lincoln House. The program for the tournament announces twelve events for each day with number of targets ranging from 10 to 25 and entrance ranging from 70 cents to $2.50. The shooting will be diversified so as to give participants a trial at known angles, unknown angles and reversed traps, thus making the shoot quite interesting. Dinner will be served in the club house at the grounds each day, and the officers of the club and shooting committee will do all they can to make the occasion a pleasant one for all who attend.

THE program for the Elizabeth Gun Club's tournament to be held at Elizabeth, N. J., on February 27 and 28, first day at targets and second day at live birds, is so arranged as to give shooters as much sport as could well be crowded into two days before the traps. There will be ten events the first day, all at unknown angles, the number of targets ranging from 10 to 25 and the entrance from $1 to $2.50. The second day live birds will have the call and there will be six events, the main attraction being a 25-bird race, $10 entrance, birds extra, handicap rise. Entries in this event, if accompanied by one half the entrance fee, can be made with W. M. Parker, 24 Sayre Street, up to the evening of February 26.

THE second pigeon-shooting match between John Rothaker, of Philadelphia, Pa., and T. W. Morfey of Paterson, N. J., was shot on the grounds of the Keystone Shooting League, at Holmesburg Junction, on February 15. The match was on the same terms as the one shot on the same grounds between these men a month ago, Rothaker to shoot at 106 birds, Morfey at 100, 30 yards rise, 80 yards boundary, Hurlingham rules, for $100 a side. Mr. Morfey won the match by four birds, the scores being Morfey 89, Rothaker 85. Mr. Robert Welch was referee.

THE Interstate Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association has closed arrangements for tournaments at Pittsburg, Pa., April 16, 17 and 18, and at Lynchburg, Va., May 17 and 18. The tournament at Pittsburg will be under the auspices of the Pittsburg Gun Club, and the one at Lynchburg under the auspices of the Lynchburg Gun Club. Each of the gun clubs will add $200 to the purses.

THE Phœnix Gun Club of Port Dover, Ont., will hold its first annual tournament at Blue Rock targets on March 6. The club has issued an attractive program, has suitable grounds, good traps, and will use the rapid fire system, straight shooting. The shooting will commence at 9 a. m. sharp.

A. W. LAWRIE, Secy.

Port Dover, Ont.

THE Rockford (Ill.) Gun Club will hold a two days' tournament on live birds on March 26 and 27. Rockford boasts of some good trap shots and as the club's former tournaments have given unbounded satisfaction there is reason for believing that this one will be no exception to the rule.

IT reported by cable that Mr. Fred Hoey, the American trap shot who is now attending the international live pigeon contest at Monte Carlo, has arranged for two individual matches with a French count who is said to be the best live bird shot in France.

CAPT. A. H. BOGARDUS, the veteran trap shot and sportsman who was reported dead a week or two ago, will shoot a race at 50 live birds per man, with W. Tramp Irwin, at Peoria, Ill., on March 13, the second day of the Peoria tournament.

THE Fast End Gun Club of Cleveland, O., having a membership of thirty-three, has consolidated with the Cleveland Gun Club, swelling the latter's membership to nearly one hundred.

THE Peekskill (N. Y.) Gun Club will hold a three days' tournament on April 24, 25 and 26, the first two days at Empire targets and the last day at live birds.

THE Eastern New York Trap Shooters' League will hold its first tournament this season under the auspices of the West End Club of Albany, on February 22.

THE next meeting of the New Jersey State League will be held on the Union Gun Club's grounds near Springfield, N. J., on Wednesday, March 27.

SHOOTING AT MONTE CARLO

The scores that have been made in the different events shot at the international trap shooting contests now being held at Monte Carlo and which have not before been published in detail, so far as we are able to obtain them up to the time of going to press, are as given below.

Mr. Fred Hoey, the crack American shot, it will be seen, made a very nice winning in the first of these events, but in the other two had the misfortune to drop out of the money altogether, as did also some of the other participants who were looked upon as also sure winners. Those who dropped out on their first or second birds are not mentioned in the scores, but are referred to in the paragraphs that follow:

Prix D'Apollon Handicap of £10, added to a sweepstakes of £4 each; the second received 30 per cent. of the entries, the third 20 per cent.; 64 subscribers.

Mr. Blake, Signor Malfetani, M. Doyen and M. de Dorlodot tied for fourth prize and in the shoot off the first two named divided £52.

The Field of London, under date of February 2, speaking of the Grand Prix, the most important event to be shot, says: "There has, so far, been very little betting on the Grand Prix, but Mr. Fred Hoey, Count Trauttsmandorff, Mr. Roberts, Count de Roblano, and Signor Guidicini would be favorites if there was anything like a market."

NEW JERSEY LEAGUE SHOOT

If the success of the League shooting is to be measured by the initial shoot on the grounds of the Boiling Springs Gun Club, at Rutherford, N. J., on February 16, it will attain a success far beyond that of previous years. There were at least sixty shooters on the grounds, and eight teams of five men each reported for the team contest. Want of time forbids the mention this shoot deserves, but the clean and prompt work of the Messrs. Jeaneret and other members of the club deserves mention. Messrs. Drake and Hobart seem indispensable at such a shoot, and rendered valuable assistance, as usual. The team shooting was at known traps, unknown angles, which is a new form of League shooting, and bothered some, as heretofore known traps and angles were the rule. The scores:

CARVER—MARSHALL

ST. LOUIS, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I inclose herewith the scores made at the great shooting match at Hot Springs, Ark., on February 14, between Dr. W. F. Carver, champion of the world, and the Hon. Tom Marshall, of Keithsburg, Ill. It was a great race, and a big crowd composed of the leading people of the United States that are visiting at the Springs, and Hot Springs citizens, with a large number of the Arkansaw traveler sort that still exist on rabbits and hot water in the Ozark Mountains, saw it. They were all there. It was the largest gathering ever seen at a shooting match in that city. A number of ladies were also present and added no small amount to the pleasure of the occasion.

When the shooters appeared on the ground they were given a rousing reception, and if one may judge from the enthusiasm of an audience then Carver and Marshall are the most popular pair of trap shooters that have ever been seen in that section of the country. The toss gave Marshall the lead, and the way he smashed up his first bird made him a hot favorite at once. The race moved along all right until Carver missed his third bird, when speculation commenced in earnest and a large sum of money changed hands on the result. The jingle of silver and the crack of the guns made things lively up to the fiftieth round, when the scorer announced Carver 47 out of 50, Marshall 46, with four dead out of bounds. When Carver lost a bird dead out of bounds the ladies would all exclaim, "Oh, oh, dear!" But when one went out for Marshall the boys gave vent to expressions that caused the ladies to look at their husbands and brothers in as onishment. Marshall's bad luck in the first fifty made him quite a favorite. When they started down the line on the last fifty it was evident that both men were doing their best to win, for both were shooting in wonderful form. The strain was telling on Marshall, while Carver, who is a giant in strength, grew better at every shot. The impression with everyone present was that Carver's gun was far superior to Marshall's. Both men shot in about the same time. Carver's gun tore the birds all to pieces; in fact mashed them, while all the birds lost by Marshall were hit with both barrels but fell out of bounds.

At the seventy-fifth round it was anybody's match. Marshall was shooting like a demon, and only for his bad luck would have killed 98 out of the 100. At the ninetieth round it was only a question of nerve to finish. Marshall had killed thirty straight, while Carver had lost one. When they started on the ninety-sixth round and Marshall lost his bird, though hit with both barrels, his continued bad luck so disgusted him that he lost two more out of the next four, while Carver killed all to the end and won the match by five birds.

Thus ended one of the greatest matches ever seen in Hot Springs. One of the most amusing things in the way of sporting happened here. George Canfield, of Sheridan, an old Western friend of Carver's, bet $500 to $300 on the race and at the end of the fiftieth round he gave $50 to have the bet declared off. Marshall's wonderful shooting frightened him. But when Carver won the match he kicked himself over to the sulphur spring and tried to drown himself.

Dr. Carver shot with a Cashmore gun and used 5 drams of American Wood powder. Marshall used 3½ drams of E. C. powder and shot a Smith gun. Mr. Hughes, of Hot Springs, was referee and the manager of the Sumpter Arms Co. was scorer. Only one bird was challenged, and that by Mr. Marshall. Carver shot at the bird on the ground and missed it, then killed it with the second barrel. Marshall challenged the bird and the referee decided in Marshall's favor. The scores:

TRAP AT KANSAS CITY

KANSAS CITY, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I herewith inclose scores made at the Washington Park shooting grounds, near this city, during this month, up to the present time.

The O. K. Gun Club held its monthly medal contest Tuesday afternoon, February 5. There was a good attendance considering the inclement weather, and a lively lot of birds made interesting sport. The new handicap adopted by this club, which is explained by the score, is proving very satisfactory. It gives the good shots work to do if they win the medal.

In the score as given below the figure immediately following the name of each shooter denotes the number of birds he is allowed and in his total these birds are included. The score:

Fred T. Durrant won the trophy on the only straight score.

On Wednesday afternoon, February 13, the Washington Park Gun Club held its monthly shoot, resulting in the following scores:

T. A. Fernkas..	1101122212—9

Rickmers won first; Fernkas second.

Mr. A. C. Connor, of Central City, Neb., was a guest of the club.

After the club's shoot, two teams, chosen by Dave Elliott and T. A. Fernkas, shot a race, 50 targets to the man, Fernkas' team winning easily. The teams were composed of T. A. Fernkas, A. C. Connor and L. Scott on one side, and D. Elliott, A. F. Rickmers and J. M. Norton on the other. The scores:

CLASS VS. MORFEY

Notwithstanding the result of the previous match, at Morristown, between these excellent shots, when Mr. Class won by the score of 95 against 90 for Mr. Morfey, the friends of the latter rallied in force at Paterson, N. J., on February 12, and were willing to back their favorite to the extent of all that would be taken, which was no inconsiderable amount, as the visitors from Morristown were confident that Mr. Class could repeat his victory. The result leaves the supremacy in doubt, and a third match will be shot on March 7 on the grounds of Charles Zwirlein, at Yardville, N. J.

At no time during the match at Paterson was the lead greater than three birds by Morfey, and two birds by Class, and the result was in doubt until the finish. Both men seemed a little nervous at the start, each losing four in the first twenty-five birds. In the second twenty-five Morfey missed his second bird, killing the remainder, while Class ran straight until his twenty-third, which he lost; not a hard bird, but it seemed to disconcert him, for he lost the next two also, none of them difficult to kill. This break proved to lose him the match. This gave Mr. Morfey a lead of three which he maintained until the fifty-fifth round, when he lost one dead out of bounds. The match ran along with the same result until the seventieth round; when Mr. Class missed again, leaving him two behind. Both men were now shooting, and had been since passing the fiftieth bird, in fine form, and only one bird was lost after the seventieth, Mr. Morfey's ninety-second. In fact only three birds were scored lost in the last one hundred, one by Mr. Class and two by Mr. Morfey, both of them dead out of bounds.

Mr. Morfey, when going to the score for his last bird (having won the toss he sent Mr. Class to lead off), he remarked: "Well, boys, this bird is worth two hundred dollars, but I'll kill him sure," and he did, though it was a hard one and his backers felt relieved to see it drop. Mr. Morfey's longest run was 36, Mr. Class' 29. Mr. Morfey had another run of 27, Mr. Class another of 25.

The birds were a very fair lot, some very fast, others that had to be scared from the traps. The day was a raw one, a penetrating breeze from the north making it very uncomfortable. The attendance was good, there being nearly two hundred people present to see the race. The ground was covered with snow, making it difficult shooting on white birds, of which there was quite a number.

Before the match a small sweepstake was shot, Noel Money being the only one to miss a bird, and the only one to get his money back. Following are the scores:

VON LENGERKE—FROTHINGHAM

The day of the live bird match between Dr. Frothingham and O. Von Lengerke, Friday, February 15, was in its weather all that could be desired as a Winter day for live bird shooting. The sun was out all day, and while it was cold it was not severe, and there was just wind enough across the grounds to make ordinarily fair birds good ones and corkers out of those that were naturally good. The only unpleasant feature was that the ground was covered with snow, making low-flying light-colored birds difficult to judge accurately.

The conditions of the match were that the birds should be a selected lot, 50 to each man, and the stake to be $50 a side. That the birds were good enough to satisfy anyone is proven by the facts that not one in the hundred had to be flushed, and that neither man was able to stop more than 31 out of the 50 he shot at within bounds. They were not only good birds, but most of them were of the "corker" variety, requiring quick work and accurate holding of the gun to score "dead."

The retrieving was done by Mr. Watson's two pointers, Cyclone and Rush, and they did their part of the work perfectly.

Dr. Frothingham was attended by Eddie Bingham, a good shot and a safe counselor, while Mr. Von Lengerke had as his best man, his old-time friend, Peter Warnimont.

Mr. Ike Watson was chosen referee, and, being "a chip of the old block," gave entire satisfaction; and well he might, for he has received the best of training from his worthy ancestor and besides inherits his love for a square deal and fair play, two very important qualifications for a good referee.

When ten birds had been shot by each man Mr. Von Leugerke was one in the lead, and when twenty had been shot by each, Mr. Von Lengerke had a lead of two. In the next twenty Dr. Frothingham lost seven and Mr. Von Lengerke eight, leaving the latter one bird in the lead at the fortieth round. Ten birds each remained to complete the fifty and of the first five of the last ten Dr. Frothingham lost two and Mr. Von Lengerke one, thus giving the last named gentleman a lead of two and only five more birds each to shoot. Ordinarily such a lead would as good as settle a contest, but in this case it did not, for the Doctor lost only one out of his last five while Mr. Von Lengerke lost his last three, two of them hard hit and dead outside of bounds, thus making the match a tie with a score of 31 each.

The men being pretty well chilled through it was agreed to shoot the same race over on the same grounds on Friday of this week, February 22. The scores:

THE CLIMAX GUN CLUB

As usual, this club had a good attendance at its regular handicap shoot on February 13, having in its principal event nineteen entries. Tom Kellar, usually there, but now on a Southern trip, was missed. "Dutchy" Smith, equal to the occasion, made all feel at

WORK—DAVENPORT

A remarkable pigeon-shooting contest was decided on the grounds of the Larchmont Yacht Club on the shore of Long Island Sound, on Friday, February 15, between Mr. Geo. Work and Mr. L. T. Davenport, both popular club men and well-known trap shots.

According to the agreement each man was to shoot at 100 live birds, at 50 of them handling the gun with one hand, and the other 50 using both hands. Mr. Davenport is quite an expert in shooting with one hand and it was thought by his friends that he would gain such a lead over his opponent in this part of the match that he would be an easy winner, even though it was generally conceded that Work was a shade the better shot when using both hands. Davenport, however, had his full share of hard luck in his one-handed shooting and as Work began to warm up he struck a very fast gait for a one-handed race and finished his first 50 with a score of 40 to Davenport 38. In the second half of the match Work scored 45 and Davenport 44, giving the match to Mr. Work on a score of 85 to 82 for Mr. Davenport. It took just two hours and a quarter to shoot the race. The scores made are appended:

EMPIRE ROD AND GUN CLUB

The members of this club had their regular monthly shoot at Lippach's Dexter Park on February 11. The afternoon's enjoyment commenced with the regular club competition at 7 live birds per man. The highest scores were 6, made by both Henry Mahlstedt and Charles W. O'Hara. In the shoot off, miss and out, Mahlstedt won, killing two straight, Mr. O'Hara losing his second bird.

Three sweepstakes followed, 3 live birds per man, Mahlstedt, O'Hara and Bamborgin winning the first, Mr. Mahlstedt the second, Mr. Bamborgin the third. The summary:

PARKWAY ROD AND GUN CLUB

The February shoot of this club passed off pleasantly at Dexter Park, Long Island, on February 13, with one of the largest gatherings seen at this place this season. The club competition for the gold badge of the club was won by Mr. Henry Bramwell, he killing ten in the shoot off of a tie with Mr. Wissell, who killed nine. Each had killed seven straight in the match. The summary:

NORTH SIDE GUN CLUB

The regular monthly meeting of the North Side Gun Club, at Dexter Park, was productive of some excellent scores. Mr. Lippach furnished an exceptionally fast lot of birds, and the members had to put forth their best efforts to kill them within the boundary line.

The club shoot at 7 birds, handicap rise, was the most interesting event. J. Menke made the only clean score, grassing all seven. He also won the sweepstake event that followed. The scores:

Club competition, 7 birds, handicap rise: J. Menke, 28 yards, 7; J. Jennings, 28 yards, 5; J. Tiernan, 28 yards, 4; Herman Bach, 25 yards, 3.

Sweepstake handicap, 3 birds, then miss and out: J. Menke, 28 yards, 4; J. Tiernan, 28 yards, 3; J. Jennings, 28 yards, 3; Herman Bach, 28 yards, 1.

BURLINGTON, IA.—The sixth contest for the American Field Handicap Trophy took place at Wever, a station on the K line between Ft. Madison and Burlington. Mr. L. F. Gemmett, who has been coaching the Ft. Madison team, put in his appearance on the arrival of the 10 o'clock train; the rest of the Ft. Madison delegation arrived in a sleigh shortly after dinner. The Ft. Madison party consisted of Dr. Philpot, B. C. Davis, A. Kammerer, C. Kammerer and J. L. Krieg. Denmark sent a large delegation to witness the contest and had two contestants in the trophy shoot. It was expected that Wever sportsmen would turn out in full force in the trophy contest, but when it was called only one man, Robt Lange, holder of the trophy, entered, and he was placed at 22 yards rise. The Burlington delegation shot just good enough to not capture the coveted prize, although, while Davis and Philpot took care of first prize, Burlington secured through Rolla Ebner second prize, six months' subscription to the AMERICAN FIELD, and J. F. Breitenstein secured third, a Victoria sole-leather gun case. Robt Lange, although standing at 22 yards, secured one-half of fourth prize, 50 loaded shells. D. M. Brockway, of Denmark, assisted Lange in capturing fourth, 50 loaded shells. At this shoot the new Climax shells were introduced and were successful in carrying off the four prizes. Dr. Philpot, Davis and Lange used Lefever guns, Scott and Ebner used a Remington ejector, D. M. Brockway used the old reliable Parker. L. F. Gemmett, of Ft. Madison, was referee. The next contest will take place at Burlington on February 22, Washington's Birthday, at which time and place the tie for the trophy will be shoot off. SCOTT.

WEIR CITY, KAN.—The last regular medal shoot of the Business Men's Gun Club was not as well attended as might have been, the severe cold weather of the past week keeping many of our shooters away, and among the number several of our best shots. Two medals were contested for, as noted in the scores below, and while the average was by no means high, the absence of sunshine and good shooters will explain why. The boys all feel proud of the scores made under the circumstances, and had just as much fun as if every target was broken. Sowers covered himself with glory and medals, and as he walks the street this week resplendent with the stuff that is bothering the United States treasury, he is really a thing of beauty and the pride of all his fellow shooters. HOOK.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—The attendance at the last competition of the Syracuse Gun Club was not large, the cold and stormy weather making it preferable for many of the members to remain indoors rather than face the cold and endanger their health. However, to keep a correct record of the season's work the scores should be published, and I forward them herewith. In these contests the men are classified and the weaker shots given a bird handicap while the scratch men shoot at 50 single targets. The score:

D. J. B. R., Henderson, Ky.—Ans.—Give two grains of the iodide of potash three times daily for seven consecutive days, and the one-ninetieth part of a grain of the sulphate of strychnine three times daily; keep up the use of strychnine until recovered. For the eyes take sulphate of zinc eight grains, one ounce of the fluid extract of goldenseal, and three ounces of rosewater; mix and apply to the eyes daily.

M. R., Muskegon, Mich.—My English pointer dog, eleven months old, has his mouth full of warts, some of them as large as the end of your finger. They make his breath smell very bad. Is there a cure for them? Ans.—Follow advice given in this issue to J. A., Steubenville, O.

T. F. G., Terre Haute, Ind.—Ans.—In cases requiring surgical skill we cannot undertake to prescribe as it always requires a knowledge of anatomy. We advise you to rely upon your local talent.

V. W. M., Gettysburg, Pa.—Ans.—Chorea, probably caused by the presence of intestinal parasites; follow advice given in this issue to A. G., Middletown, N. Y., giving double the quantity of castor-oil.

TRAP

16 GAUGE, Valley Falls, Kan.—In sweepstake shooting at live birds under American Shooting Association rules, a shooter went to the score, called pull, the bird took wing, the shooter fired both barrels, and the bird alighted inside the boundary. The bird was challenged, the shooter went to retrieve. As he approached the bird it took wing, but again settled inside of bounds. The shooter seeing the bird was very hard hit returned to the score and ordered the dog released to bring in the bird (a dog was being used to retrieve all birds not challenged, and, if challenged, the shooter could retrieve the bird, or allow the dog to retrieve as he saw fit). The dog went after the bird. It took wing a second time, but again settled inside of bounds. The dog then went to the bird, picked it up and brought it in to referee. The bird at no time was outside of bounds and showed shot marks. The referee called it "dead bird." Was he correct? Ans.—If the bird was picked up by the dog within three minutes from the time it struck the ground after being shot at, the referee's decision was correct; if over three minutes had elapsed before the dog picked up the bird, it was a "lost bird." The man could not according to the reading of the rule regarding the gathering of birds, assist the dog; neither could the dog be permitted to assist the man; but if the man wished to look at the bird before ordering the dog to retrieve, and the dog actually picked the bird up within three minutes from the instant it struck the ground after the report of the gun, it should be scored "dead bird."

GAME AND SHOOTING

A READER, Albany, N. Y.—A claims that a 28-inch barrel gun weighing from 6 to 6½ pounds will shoot as hard and kill as far as a gun with 30-inch barrels weighing 8 pounds, everything in the line of bore, choke and load being equal. Is he right? Ans.—Yes.

FISH

D. M. E., Belvidere, Ill.—Can you tell me where fish can be bought in this state for propagating purposes, if at all: or if there are any private hatcheries in the state? Ans.—Address Col. George W. Langford, secretary Illinois State Fish Commission, Manito, Ill., or S. P. Bartlett, superintendent, Quincy, Ill.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—The brilliantly handsome and accomplished comic opera star and bouffe artiste, Louise Beaudet, in the first production here of the new comic opera, "The Dragoon's Daughter." Mlle. Beaudet was last seen here at the Auditorium as the star of the great "America" combination. In "The Dragoon's Daughter," a delightful and provokingly funny comic opera, by J. Cheever Goodwin and Herman Perlet this vivacious and pretty little artiste and melodious singer has scored another unqualified triumph. Next week another great comedy success, "The Passport," produced by that universal favorite, Sadie Martinot, and the well known comedian, Max Figman, supported by a specially organized New York company. "The Passport" is a most farcical comedy, fresh, bright and provokingly funny, written by B. C. Stephenson and William Yardley, and Sadie Martinot has made a great success with it this season.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under 'Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healthy trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,

THE ART OF SHOOTING.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average f not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which gives pleasure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of whose followers I am indebted for many pleasant days.

THE PROPOSED ILLINOIS GAME LAW

The directors of the Illinois State Sportmen's Association have held two meetings a week, during the past six weeks, working hard to frame a game bill wbich would meet with the approbation and support of the sportsmen not only of Illinois but of every state in the Union. They have also tried hard to effect a compromise with the Produce Exchange of Chicago, whereby the rights of its members would be recognized and yet ample protection be afforded tbe game of the state and the country by restricting the sale of it to certain periods. This endeavor to compromise has failed absolutely, for the members of the Produce Exchange have declared positively that they will not "surrender their rights as American citizens, to sell game at any time which has come into their possession legally." As Chicago is the greatest distributing market in tbe world, legislation in the state of Illinois is of vital interest to every sportsman in America and for that reason the doings of the Illinois legislature are being watcbed most anxiously by all who are interested in the protection and preservation of American game. The fact of Cbicago being the greatest market makes it necessary to enact laws more stringent and less liberal in many respects for Illinois than for almost any other state. This condition should not be lost sight of for a moment by the Prairie State legislators.

As we have stated before, the directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association were negligent in that they did not meet and agree upon a bill for the sportsmen previous to the sitting of the legislature. This dereliction of duty, as we may term it, has caused tbe directors no end of trouble and expense, and the only extenuating circumstance is that they believed tbe Game Warden Bill to be about right until they saw it was being supported by the Produce Exchange; tbis did not seem right, to them, and, on further investigation, they found the bill allowed the dealers to sell game received from other states all the year round. This was a breach which they could not close, and all further negotiations toward a compromise were abandoned.

On Friday, February 22, the directors of the Illinois State Sportmen's Association met again, there being present W. L. Shepard, president, H. B. Meyers, secretary, R. S. Mott, chairman of the law committee, and Directors R. B. Organ, chairman, L. M. Hamline, C. S. Wilcox and Abner Price. Game Warden C. H. Blow and Geo. W. Strell were also present.

The object of this meeting was to listen to the draft of a bill, reported by the law committee, to be known as the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association Bill. Tbe Game Warden Bill, as published in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 9, was used as a foundation. Sections 1, 4, 5 and 11 were changed radically, and the otber sections were changed in their wording so as to make them legally effective. Mr. R. S. Mott read each section and they were adopted, seriatim. We herewith publish Sections 1, 4, 5 and 11, for the benefit of our readers:

SECTION 1.—CLOSE SEASON FOR GAME.—Tbat it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to kill, attempt to kill, or otherwise destroy, between tbe dates mentioned, any of the following game birds, fowls or animals: Wild turkeys, pinnated grouse (prairie chicken), ruffed grouse, pheasant and partridge, woodcock, dove, wild pigeon, gray, red fox or black squirrel, from December 1st to September 1st; quail from December 1st to November 1st; wild goose, duck, brant, snipe, plover, rail or other water fowl or wading game bird, from April 15th to September 1st. It sball be unlawful to kill or otherwise destroy any deer, Mongolian or English pheasant prior to tbe year 1900. It shall be unlawful to kill, attempt to kill or otherwise destroy any of the animals, game birds or fowl mentioned herein between sunset of any day and sunrise of the next succeeding day at any period of the year, or from any fixed or artificial ambush beyond tbe natural covering of reeds, canes, flags, wild rice or other vegetation above tbe water of any lake, river, bay, inlet, or other watercourse, within tbe jurisdiction of the state of Illinois; or witb tbe aid and use of any sneak boat, sink box, or other device used for the purpose of concealment in tbe open waters of this state, or with a swivel gun, or from any sail, electric, naphtba or steam boat at any time, in any part of the water or watercourses within tbe jurisdiction of the state of Illinois. And it shall be unlawful to trap, net or ensnare, with any device whatsoever, any of the game birds, fowls or animals mentioned in this section, at any time. Any person guilty of violating any of the provisions of this section shall, for each and every offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction sball be fined in any sum not less than $10 nor more tban $25 and cost of suit, and shall stand committed to the county jail until sucb fines and costs are paid. Provided that such imprisonment sball not exceed thirty days; and provided, further, that the killing or otherwise destroying or capturing of each and every game bird or animal mentioned herein shall constitute a separate offense.

SECTION 4.—WHEN UNLAWFUL TO SELL OR HAVE IN POSSESSION.—It sball be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation at any time to sell, expose for sale or have in possession for the purpose of sale or transporting for sale any of the game birds, fowl or animals or song and insectivorous birds mentioned in Sections 1 and 2 of this Act and killed within this state, or to sell or have in possession for any purpose any of such birds or animals which have been illegally killed in or transported illegally from any other state, and it shall be unlawful between the 1st day of February and the 15th day of October of eacb and every year for any person, firm or corporation to sell, expose for sale, ship to any point within or without this state or have in possession for any purpose any of tbe game birds or animals mentioned in Section 1 of this Act, which have been killed and transported from any otber state. Any person, firm or corporation guilty of violating any of the provisions of this section shall on conviction be fined not less than $25 nor more than $50 and costs for each offense, and stand committed to the county jail until such fine and costs are paid, provided that such imprisonment shall not exceed thirty days, and provided further tbat each and every bird or animal unlawfully sold, exposed for sale, in possession for purpose of sale or transportation thereof for such purpose shall constitute a separate offense.

SECTION 5.—EXCEPTIONS—POSSESSION PRIMA FACIE PROOF OF VIOLATION—COLD STORAGE.—The provisions of tbis act shall not be construed as applicable to any express company or common carrier, into whose possession any of the animals, wild fowls or birds herein mentioned shall come in the regular course of their business, for transportation, while they are in transit through tbis state from any otber state or territory wbere the killing of said animals, wild fowls or birds and the transportation thereof from such state or territory shall be lawful. But notwithstanding this provision, the baving or being in possession of any such animals, wild fowl or birds, as are mentioned in Section one (1), upon any of tbe days upon which the killing, selling, or having in possession of any such animals, wild fowl or birds, shall be unlawful by the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and taken as prima facie evidence that the same were killed or are in possession in violation of this Act; provided further, tbat the provisions of this Act shall not apply to any game birds or animals which may be lawfully sold in this state during the period mentioned in Section 4 of tbis Act and which were received during the period when the same might be lawfully sold and deposited prior to the commencement of and kept in cold storage warehouses during the season wben such game birds or animals may not be lawfully sold, and which are not sold nor exposed for sale during sucb period. It shall be unlawful for any of the game birds, wild fowl or animals mentioned in this Act to be removed from any cold storage warehouse or place of storage during the period when the selling thereof is probibited. Any person, firm or corporation owning, controlling, operating, or employed at any such warehouse or place of storage who shall, personally or by any agent or officer, permit or assist in the removal from sucb warehouse or place of storage of any such game birds, wild fowl or animal, contrary to the provisions herein, shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined for each offense not less tban $50 nor more than $100 and costs, and shall be committed to the county jail until such fine and costs are paid, not exceeding ninety days, and each game bird, wild fowl or animal so unlawfully removed shall constitute a separate offense.

SECTION 11.—DUTY OF GAME WARDENS.—It shall be the duty of sucb game wardens to prosecute all persons violating any of the provisions of this act. They shall have power to arrest without warrant any person or persons violating any of the provisions of tbis act, and to seize on sight any game illegally in possession of any person or illegally exposed for sale and to search upon search warrant, whicb sball be issued by any Justice of the Peace on the filing of an affidavit that there is reason to believe that game is illegally in possession and concealed or has been unlawfully removed from cold storage, any place or premises where they have reason to believe that any such game may be found, or any cold storage warehouse or place of storage from which they have reason to believe that any such game may have been unlawfully removed. Any person so arrested or game seized, together with the person in whose possession it was found, sball be forthwith taken to any Justice of the Peace in the county where arrested or seized and a complaint in writing made by such officer, and trial before such Justice of the Peace shall be bad upon such complaint, not less than 12 nor more than 36 hours after the filing of said complaint at such time as said Justice may determine, and such defendant, if found guilty, shall be fined under the provisions of this Act and sucb game, if found by such Justice to be illegally in possession, shall be confiscated by such officer and distributed among tbe nearest charitable institutions.

On last Monday the directors held another meeting and reconsidered tbeir action of the meeting on the Friday previous, as the restrictions seemed to Messrs. Sbepard and Wilcox too severe as to the sale of game, and after much discussion it was decided that, inasmucb as the association wished to go on record for the protection of game, the bill be presented to tbe legislature as drawn, but if the legislative committee saw fit to change the provisions of Section 4 tbe directors gave them permission so to do, and appointed President Shepard and Game Warden Blow as a committee to present the bill to the legislature, their credentials to represent the directors being as follows:

CHICAGO, February 26, 1895.

TO THE GAME AND FISH COMMITTEES OF THE ILLINOIS LEGISLATURE.

Gentlemen:—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association held at the Sherman House, Chicago, February 25, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, By the Board of Directors of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association that President W. L. Shepard and Game Warden Charles H. Blow be and they are hereby appointed a committee to visit Springfield and introduce the bill for the protection of game, as drafted and prepared by the law committee of this association, and indorsed by the board of directors, and that said committee be authorized to inform the game and fish committees of the House and Senate of the state legislature that the provisions contained in Section 4 of said bill, and referring to the selling or having in possession of game illegally killed in or transported illegally from any other state or territory, embodies the ideas of this association upon that subject, but that this association leave to your committee the discretion to make such changes as will be deemed for the best interests of the public at large relating to this provision of the bill.

Yours truly,
H. B. MEYERS, Secretary-Treasurer.

This committee presented tbe bill to the legislature last Wednesday, and it now remains for the legislature to say whether it will stand by the Association's Bill or reword it so that the dealers may handle game the year round or only during a short period each year.

This action of the directors of the Illinois State Association is in the right direction to help sister states in protecting game, for if the sale of game which has been illegally sbipped is prohibited and the game warden is empowered to seize sucb game, none will be shipped to Chicago from states having non-export laws, and it will be in order, if the law passes, for the sportsmen of the non-export states to establish a rigid paid game warden system to prevent their game from being shipped to other markets where tbe sale of illegal game is not prohibited.

One great source of dissatisfaction among the people at large with this law is bound to come up if passed, and that is if tbe sale of Illinois game is prohibited absolutely tben the number of birds a shooter may kill during tbe open season should be restricted also. It is not fair, and sportsmanship is synonymous with fairness, to prevent anyone from buying game and at the same time allow a man to shoot fifty or five hundred birds if he can find them. Some of tbe gourmets' clubs will have a dozen men out shooting hundreds of birds to be "presented" to members of tbe clubs, and tbey in turn will freeze them and "present" them ready to eat at different times of tbe year to visitors or others as the case may be. The number of birds allowed to be killed should be restricted to so many a day, say ten per person, until the state bas been replenished sufficiently to allow twenty-five. Do not make it so many birds to "each gun," as one man could carry ten guns. Make it so many per person, or else allow the sale of game during the open season only. We tbink if the open season on quails was made from October 15 to December 1, instead of November 1 to December 1, it would give more general satisfaction to the sportsmen of Illinois.

We believe that in states where game has become almost entirely depleted the sale of game should be prohibited at all seasons of the year until the state is stocked, and only a very short open season and a few birds per person allowed. Where other states are trying to protect game by enacting non-export laws Illinois and all states having distributing game markets, should assist those states by prohibiting the sale of illegally shipped game. There should be united work among sportsmen of the country.

We also believe that where the law, as in this instance, [illegible] the shipment of game within the state for the [illegible], a provision should be inserted compelling [illegible] or express official receiving game for shipment to [illegible] the consignor's license, then to enter the [illegible] of game in a book, also the name of the owner, where he lives and to whom the game is shipped. This would enable the game warden to trace all game shipped, and wardens in any part of the state could keep brother wardens posted, and if anyone is found guilty of violation the offender could easily be apprehended.

Altogether the bill is a most excellent one for the protection of game, as it is a great step in advance toward the stopping of Spring shooting for the market, as the sale of waterfowl is prohibited after February 1, and we are pleased to state that the Illinois State Association and Game Warden Chas. H. Blow have joined hands and are working harmoniously toward the attainment of the same end, and toward which the AMERICAN FIELD has for some time past directed its efforts. Now let all other states establish a paid game warden system, enact laws just to all, so as to secure a healthy public sentiment to back the laws, make short open seasons, allow the sale of game only during the open season in each state, and the first great step toward replenishing the game of the country will be made. Game Warden Blow says: "Under this law I will make it so hot for violators that hardly an illegal shot will be fired in the state, and in two years Illinois sportsmen will not have to leave the state to get a few days' shooting."

We hope the legislature will be just to the people at large, and after carefully considering this measure will give the sportsmen of Illinois what they ask—a bill to protect the game.

QUAIL SHOOTING

BY PARK SHERWOOD

We are chums, Dick and I. Dick is fat and funny; I am thin and laugh at what Dick says. Notwithstanding the great disparity in our sizes and ages, there is something in common between us, as indeed exists between all sportsmen, that has carried us over many a mile in this state and Tennessee one another company in search of fish and game. Many and many are the days we have trudged along the banks of a trouting stream, recounting the experiences of other days and speculating on the results of that particular day's efforts. I must confess that Dick can beat me fishing, and as a natural and necessary consequence he excels in that other qualification that is synonymous with a successful fisherman. His is a hopeless and incurable case. But in the language of Koko, "that's got nothing to do with the case," as this sketch is to recite the experiences of our annual Christmas quail hunt.

Dick is a stickler for pedigree, and has a feeling of pity, not unmixed with contempt, for that poor mortal who shoots over a mongrel; therefore he is very proud of the blood that flows in the veins of Marie Avent, a Roderigo—Topsy Avent. Marie is a black, white and tan, and has had transmitted to her the form, style and carriage of her illustrious sire. She is truly a worthy scion of noble stock. And besides being the sister of Topsy's Rod, she is "some pumpkins" herself. Seeing no reason why our custom should be interfered with on this particular Christmas, we accordingly appointed Friday, December 29, as "the happy day"—the day to be dreamed of, talked of, and written about.

On December 28, the day before "the happy day," the weather was very discouraging. It being warm and cloudy with a stiff breeze from the south, promising a siege of rain. In the afternoon I went to see Dick and found him with a most woebegone, miserable expression on his face.

"Is Marie dead?" I asked.

"No," said he, "but all my fond and cherished hopes have perished. Well, if they are not perished, they are almost. Just look at the clouds and the wind."

"Don't let the weather annoy you, my boy; the weather will be lovely in the morning," was my comforting reply. That is, it was intended to be comforting. I did not have much confidence in my own predictions, but strange as it may seem, when I arose with the chickens the next morning [illegible]t, cloudless sky, with no wind to [illegible] or so of bustling about, getting [illegible] Alcorn, the crack of the Corinth [illegible]on arrived at Dick's house, and in due time we were speeding northward with our dogs in our buggies and a prospect of a good day's shooting.

In this country we hunt on horseback, and when the dogs find game we get down and shoot. Our farmers are not as "progressive" as are some in other states. That is, they know the difference between progressiveness and meanness. Most of them do not consider it progress to order a hunter out of their field, and as meanness forms but a small part of the composition of our warm-hearted and generous country friends, it is a very common thing for a farmer to let down a fence or open a gate for us, saying "Kill them all, boys, and then come up to the house and make yourselves at home." There are, however, a few who "assert their independence" by standing "on their rights," one of which we encountered on this day, and of whom more anon. My beloved reader, if you will pardon this digression, I will proceed with my story. Pardon or no pardon, I will proceed just the same.

Upon arriving at a field we wanted to hunt in, we took the horses from the buggies and mounting our steeds, Chepultapec and Complacency, hastened into the field. We had not been in the field more than five minutes when Mai, to show us that she could do it, flushed a bevy of birds and they flew to the woods. We followed them, and to Mai's point in the woods I made a nice kill and a nicer miss. Dick did likewise. We worked the bevy up, and getting no more shots, we returned to the field, where Marie, running at a field trial gait, made one of the prettiest points of the day. We walked up with every nerve strained to the fullest tension, when up went the birds. We each fired both barrels, not touching a feather. Following the birds to the woods Mai pointed on the side of a hill in an open place. We flushed and all the birds flew my way, one at a time. I took fair aim at them, and oh, how humiliating it was to see them flying off unharmed. No more opportunities presenting we moved on and worked out two of the best fields without finding any more birds. Finally we came to a field where we knew birds were usually found, but it belonged to one of those men who "assert their rights."

"He cannot do anything more than drive us out, so let's take the chances," suggested Dick.

I being agreeable to his proposition we entered the field and there saw some of the prettiest work by the dogs it has ever been my pleasure to witness. We chose separate sides of a little ditch and moved against the wind. The dogs had grown desperate at not finding any birds in the other two fields, and there seemed to be a spirit of competition between them. My, how those dogs did fly over the ground. As we neared the end of the field Marie wheeled to a point, to which we flushed a large bevy. Each of us killed one bird on the rise, and the birds going to the woods, as usual, we left our horses in the field and followed them. Here Mai pointed a single bird. Marie ran up and flushed, the bird flying straight toward me. When it was about ten feet away I fired, and it fell four or five feet past me.

"Killed him, be gosh!" said Dick. "That beats any shot I ever heard of. I was getting ready to let him have it after he passed you."

While we were discussing this very unusual occurrence, we heard someone yell to us from the road: "You will get yourselves into trouble hunting on these premises and you had better get out if you know what's good for you."

As we were about through with the birds we had found we did not stop long to discuss the matter with him, and moved on to other territory.

While we were in the next field Dick asked me the following question in moral philosophy:

"Do you think it is wrong to tell a lie to a man that will not let you hunt in his field?"

For the benefit of the consciences of fellow sportsmen who are in the habit of hunting in that territory, we decided that it was not. While we were thus arriving at a conclusion, both dogs began drawing to a point in some sedgegrass. The birds ran into the woods and we flushed them without killing any. Shortly after that we ate lunch, with only six birds all told. While eating we missed the dogs and upon searching we found them on a a point near some woods. We flushed, and Dick feathered one that flew to the woods with the rest of the bevy. Mai ran into the woods and returned with the bird in her mouth. Dick observed that Mai's smart act advanced her value one hundred dollars. The next three bevies netted us sixteen birds, which concluded the sport for the day.

With a bag of twenty-three birds we were very well satisfied, and felt more than well paid by seeing the beautiful work of the dogs. As we were not familiar with the country we hunted over in the afternoon we did not find as many birds as we expected, or that those who are familiar with the territory could find. It is a common occurrence to find from twelve to fifteen bevies in a day on this ground. There will always be some shooting here, as the fields all have patches of woods in them and the birds fly to them at the first rise. After agreeing to try it again in the near future, we wended our way homeward, two tired but happy sportsmen.

PHEASANTS

MAHWAH, N. J.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD—I wrote an article some months ago, in which I challenged certain statements about pheasants, which I believe to be mighty erroneous and completely misleading. Never having been favored with any reply to my remarks, I had hoped to have seen no repetition of these flights of pure fancy. However, a little while ago I received a paper containing the following paragraph: "It (the pheasant) raises three broods of young each year." I denied this assertion in toto in my last communication to you. But I will no longer rely on my experience, but argue solely from the point of common sense. It is quite true that the English pheasant (Phasianus colchicus), and its relatives the Chinese pheasant (Ph. torquatus) and the Japanese pheasant (Ph. versicolor) are distantly connected with the common fowl, insomuch that they will breed with the game fowl, although the hybrid is sterile. But the pheasant has not been brought to a highly artificial state by hundreds of years of domesticity. It is a wild bird in every meaning of the expression, and subject to the ordinary laws that govern all creation in its natural condition. Pheasants, like all other wild birds, do not commence to nest until Spring arrives and all danger of the eggs being frozen is over. It is April before they commence to lay. Eggs are found during the first week in that month in temperate latitudes where snow and ice are chance visitors. But as a rule it is well into the middle of that month before any, except the most precocious, lay their first eggs, and it generally takes a hen three weeks to complete her nestful. The period of incubation is twenty-four days; therefore it will be June before the young birds are hatched. These remain under the maternal wing until the down is replaced by feathers, which operation is not finished until they are at least six weeks old, and it is far later before they desert the family circle. Now, let it be granted that their mother can leave them to shift for themselves when two months old, she is then in full molt, which continues until September. There are, I think, two well established laws of nature, of which one is that the ovaries relapse into a state of complete desuetude during the exertion of forming an entirely new set of feathers; and the second is that no wild bird lays eggs in the Autumn, when the first chilly blasts of approaching Winter would inevitably destroy her fledglings. I have now accounted for the hen's occupation from April 1 to September 1, and it would be a work of supererogation to attempt to prove that any propagating business is attempted during the remainder of the year. Therefore, as surely as 2+2=4, so it is an absolute physical impossibility for a hen pheasant to rear more than one brood during a year. Howbeit, if a hen loses her first lot of youngsters in their very early youth, she will set to work again to make up for lost time.

I was talking this matter over lately with a sportsman friend who said he had been told by another person, who had been informed by a third, that he had once kept a hen pheasant, which he had wounded, in an inclosed field, and that this hen was accredited with three broods in one season. It may have been a lusus naturæ, though I cannot for the life of me understand how she did it. I think it far more likely that some other wild bird had nested in this same inclosure on account of its tranquillity, having lost her first nestful. At any rate I can assert one thing, that if this extraordinary prolificacy takes place frequently in America it is utterly unknown and a physical impossibility elsewhere; and moreover, among my thousands of birds here, not one has ever performed such vagaries. This is the sole authentic (?) case I have heard of, and scarcely think evidence based on one wounded bird is worth further consideration.

Now to refer back to the subject of previous articles. At the beginning of another season I wish to raise my voice again in opposition to the pure Chinese pheasant. I have repeated time and again the many standard objections to this bird, and have urged in preference the English ringnecked bird; but I had better go over the ground again. First of all, may I ask why persons who may have reared a few dozen pheasants for a couple of years, at the outside, will persist in thinking their opinion is valuable, when a mass of authorities of every degree with a lifetime of experience to guide them, and every source of information ready to hand, with one voice utter a totally different verdict? I have personally been interested in rearing pheasants by the thousand for twelve seasons, and have enjoyed shooting them in well-stocked coverts for nearly double that length of time. But even that is trivial in comparison with the weighty references I have to back me up. Sir Ralph Payne Gallwey, one of the greatest practical sportsmen, and Tegetmeier, who has written the well-known standard work on the subject, both unite in decrying the pure Chinese pheasant, the former being extremely averse to the least trace of its blood in his preserves. But what greater proof is needed than that in no country where pheasant shooting is a main feature of sport, will the Chinese pheasant be found at liberty. It is not for want of giving them a fair trial. They have had that ad libitum, and their condemnation is pronounced and final. Let me repeat their high crimes and misdemeanors: They are terrible wanderers, great runners, and a small variety among game pheasants. Now the dark-necked English pheasant has exactly the opposite attributes and is the common denizen of all European preserves; but it is not quite so renowned for hardiness as the former. While I believe them capable of standing any climate, for safety's sake I always recommend the English ring-necked pheasant, the result of the cross between the English and Chinese birds. It combines every good quality of each and rejects their demerits. What more can be required? Moreover, it has had a career since game rearing and preserving were in their infancy to prove its claims to general favor. Now, I have absolutely no interest in cracking up one breed in preference to another. On the contrary I can and do supply any and all in any quantity. This question does not affect me personally in the least, as it is no more trouble to supply one kind than another.

I am simply looking to the future and best interests of our game preserves, and I still continue therefore to denounce the pure Chinese pheasant. I have already stated that it is a great runner, but until you have seen one of these birds "leg" it it is impossible to estimate its powers in this respect. But what can be more conducive to spoiling a good dog? Chinese pheasants and French partridges, though of great beauty, are totally barred for the same cause by everyone competent to pass an opinion on them. I read in an article lately that one authority (?), I believe not yet of a year's growth, did not think the English ring-necked pheasant so good a game bird as the pure Chinese, because more stay-at-home and "a more easy prey to the unskilled marksman." I fail to grasp the exact force of the latter part of that sentence. Is the "unskilled marksman" to have no sport, or does the writer think that the perambulating pot-hunter will more easily bag his game? Well, so long as we have to suffer the beneficent presence of the pot-hunter in our midst, whose genus the millenium will alone exterminate, it is far better that he should get a few birds rather than that no one in the county should ever meet with the birds again when reared. Far be it from me to seem to deny that everyone is not most welcome to his own opinions and to the utterance of them; or to seek to enforce my own, despising those of others. It is merely that, being greatly interested in the propagation of these birds throughout the states, I am now advocating what everyone who really understands the subject has not only said but acted on. However, I am so often referred to for my opinion about this question, which I only venture to give because I have such a weight of evidence to rest on, that I continue to hold fast to what I have always stated, knowing that in time others here will bear me out.

One word more. If, like a deaf adder, you refuse to listen to the voice of the charmer and insist on breeding the Chinese pheasant, why not obtain the best strain for that purpose? I have not seen any from Oregon that can compare with the Chinese pheasants in European aviaries (mark you, never in the preserves). I presented some lately to a public park and people were surprised at their size after seeing the Oregon production. Skillful breeding will improve all stock and generations of careful nurture have established a superior bird in Europe without undermining its health or changing its nature. However, brother sportsmen, harken to me and shun the Chinese pheasant, especially when the same hails from Oregon.

DUCK SHOOTING AT SENACHWINE LAKE

WHITEFIELD, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Having been a constant reader of the AMERICAN FIELD for years past, I have in that time read many glowing accounts of successful duck shooting trips; and, although some of them were highly interesting, not one that I now call to mind equals my experience, one Fall not many years ago, at Senachwine Lake, a famous resort in this state for ducks, geese, etc.

Two very intimate friends of mine, Mr. Ed Short and Bert Stout, having heard of the immense number of birds to be seen at Senachwine Lake, concluded to spend a week in camp there, and to complete their party very considerately invited me to go with them. Of course I was only too well pleased with the invitation, for I, too, had a serious attack of duck shooting fever. Owing to a previous engagement I was unable to go when my friends did, but when they started I promised them that I would join them in camp in a few days, and, keeping my word, on the third day after they left home I reached their camp.

I arrived at the lake at noon, somewhat wearied by the trip and as hungry as a wolf. My friends were overjoyed to see me, and it being about the time for their noonday meal, friend Ed soon had an elegant dinner of roasted duck and fried squirrel prepared. I ate heartily and relished the meal, it seemed to me, better than any dinner I had ever eaten. My friends also had their appetites with them, and the way we three stowed away duck, squirrel and the other good things that Ed had served up was a caution.

Dinner over, Bert said: "Now, C. P., we will go down the lake and you can try your hand at shooting ducks." This being my first experience on the water, I told Bert he would have to row the boat. "Oh, of course," he said, "I expected to do that."

Everything being ready, I in the back seat of the boat and Bert at the oars, I said, "let her go!" and we were soon skimming over the water in great shape. We hadn't gone more than half a mile when I caught sight of what I supposed was a large flock of ducks which seemed to be awful tame, and I asked Bert why they did not fly. He replied that even wild ducks were always tame in the Fall of the year, and that the birds on this lake were no exception to the rule. We were now within gunshot of them and my friend said:

"You do the shooting and I will manage the boat."

This suited me exactly, for hadn't I had the duck fever for weeks and here was my opportunity to get relief? Bert said, "take those two closest ones." I did as commanded, and from that time until nearly dark I kept up a constant bang! bang! At one time I got so excited, as two birds were coming directly over our heads, that I jumped to my feet to make a double, but the double I made wasn't on the birds; I doubled over the edge of the boat and went, as I thought, ten feet under the water, for while below the surface I saw fish that looked as big as sea lions and snakes that were here half a mile long. When I came up Bert was laughing as if his sides would split, but he grabbed me by the coat collar and pulled me into the boat. As soon as I got the water out of my eyes, nose and mouth, I asked him what he was laughing about, and he said that big ducking of mine was enough to make anyone laugh. But for the life of me, though Bert kept laughing most of the afternoon, I could not see anything to laugh at, and I finally told him so.

Notwithstanding that I was soaking wet from head to foot, the opportunity for me to get my satisfy of duck shooting was one not to be lost and I kept on banging away until it was time to pick up my birds and start for camp.

On our way to camp, as we were passing a flock of tame ducks, a wild duck arose from the bunch and started to cross the lake. Bert quickly picked up his gun and, as the bird got straightened out on its course, sent a load of shot after it, and down it went into the lake "as dead as a mackerel." We picked it up, threw it into the boat with the birds I had killed, and pulled for shore.

Seeing that this bird was different from those I had shot, I asked Bert what kind of a duck it was, and what kind those were that I had shot. His reply was that his was a redhead and mine (and then he barst out laughing again) were mudhens.

I was so pleased over my afternoon's shooting that as soon as we reached the shore I shouted to Ed, who was at camp getting supper, to come down to the boat and see my ducks. He came, and as soon as he looked into the boat he too began to giggle. I asked him what in thunder he was giggling at, and then both he and Bert laughing the harder.

"Why," says he, "you have thirty-one mudhens and one duck."

The next morning, having worked off my shooting fever, and not being very much elated over my mudhens, I started for home, and when I got home I counted my shells. And what do you think, I had fired over a hundred shots and hadn't killed a single duck.

ASKS FARMERS TO FEED THE BIRDS

The following correspondence, which recently passed between a New York lawyer and Mr. Polk Miller, of Richmond, Va., president of the Virginia Field Sports Association, proves the latter gentleman to be a sportsman out and out and a true friend to the game birds of his state:

WALL STREET, N. Y., February 15, 1895.

POLK MILLER, ESQ., Richmond, Va.

My Dear Sir:—I wish to inquire of you, if you will permit me to trouble you in the matter, concerning shooting at Lester Manor, King William County.

I have a friend who needs a change, and we thought of coming down for a week's shooting. We were anxious to get turkey. I believe they can be shot in King William County up to the 15th of March. I believe there is no hotel at Lester Manor, and I hardly know what arrangements we could make. Neither I nor my friend have ever been after wild turkey, and our idea was to consult someone at Richmond as to where was the best place to go, and come down to Richmond about March 1 and start from there for such town as promised the best results. Can you advise me in the matter?

I take the liberty of inclosing you addressed and stamped envelope, and trust that you will be good enough to reply.

Yours very truly, ——.

MR. MILLER'S REPLY

RICHMOND, VA., February 16, 1895.

Deara Sir:—I have yovr esteemed favor of the 15th inquiring about turkey shooting in King Willian County, Va. Just at this time we have a deep snow, and it has come one after another, until for more than two weeks the ground has been covered. Game birds of every kind have suffered; in fact, turkeys and birds are on the verge of starvation, and I am calling upon the farmers to feed them. Thousands of the latter have been found stiff, frozen in bevies, and this being the case, I feel that it is only necessary to acquaint you with the [illegible] at the risk of appearing very inho[illegible] that you will give up your proposed t[illegible]

At any other time when I can serv[illegible] great pleasure to do so.

Yours very resp[illegible]

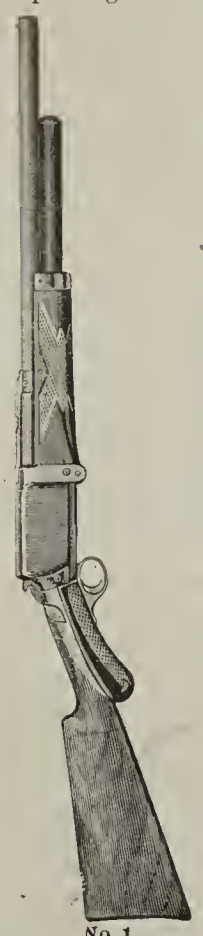
[illegible] Miller,

President Virginia Field Sports' Association.

It will be remembered that in the long and severe spell of bad weather two years ago Mr. Miller made an appeal like the above to the people of Virginia in behalf of wild game, and farmers all through the state fed the birds. As a result the destruction of game in Virginia was prevented.

THE BURGESS FOLDING GUN

The Burgess Gun Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., has lately put upon the market something entirely new in the way of a repeating arm. It is called the Burgess folding gun, and from the illustrations presented herewith, it will be seen that the barrel and stock fold together to shorten the gun to the length of the barrel. The first illustration shows the gun with barrel extended, ready for use, while the second illustration shows it folded up for convenience in carrying. When closed, it can be carried in a holster with belt, or in a valise, or kept in places where a longer gun could not be concealed or made available. The gun is a 12-gauge repeater and is especially constructed for the use of police officers, sheriffs, United States marshals, express messengers, prison guards, banks, etc., and it is, on account of its convenient shape, attracting a good deal of attention, particularly in the Western and Southern states. It takes the place of a revolver and will do much better and more certain work, and when choke bored it becomes a most convenient and effective gun for field and cover shooting.



No. 1.

The breech mechanism is the same as and interchangeable with that of the same company's sporting gun, which has been on the market for two years past; but in place of the separable joint for attaching the barrel to frame, a slip hinge allows the gun to be carried folded and loaded both in magazine and barrel. It is then only necessary to grasp the gun by the pistol grip, and, by a quick motion, throw the barrel outward, when it springs into place and locks, and the gun is ready for use.

No. 2.

The heavy spring on top of the barrel engages the frame to shift the joint vertically and interlock the threaded portions of frame and barrel the instant the gun straightens. The spring may be lifted from the frame by its lever, when the rear of the barrel may be struck down to unlock the threads, so the gun will then fold to half its length.

The weight of the gun is from 5 pounds to 6½ pounds. The length of the barrel is from 19 inches to 30 inches. The gun carries six cartridges. Drawing the gun from the holster and throwing it to the shoulder is accomplished in one motion, and the gun can be drawn and fired six times in three seconds.

One of the objections urged against most repeating shotguns is, that they have to be carried at full length, and therefore are not convenient to take to and from a shooting ground, but this new device overcomes this objection entirely, and on this account the gun will become popular with a large number of people.

NOTES

THE Green Wing Gun Club, which has just been organized at Chicago, promises to be one of the strongest and best equipped clubs of its kind in Illinois. The club's preserves cover 4,640 acres in Bureau and Putnam counties, and include two miles of frontage on both sides of the Illinois River. They also include Spring, Coleman's, Mud and two other lakes, and are well interspersed with woodland and undulating ground, while meadow and cornfield, brook and brush make it a most desirable hunting territory. The membership is limited to twenty-five and is now full, but so great is the demand for admission that it is proposed to soon extend the limit to thirty-five. A steward and five gamekeepers have been engaged and a complete outfit has been purch[illegible] The fishing is excellent and as part of the preserves [illegible] within a few hundred yards of the Bureau Statio[illegible] C. WRITING of the game in Oklahoma and the game laws of that territory, a correspondent of the Oklahoman, a paper published at Oklahoma City, says that, notwithstanding the fact that the law prohibits the netting and trapping of quails, and also makes it a misdemeanor to ship birds out of the territory, either alive or dead, not less than 100,000 quails were unlawfully taken last year, and most of them shipped out of the territory. He says parties would go out with guns (the law permitting a man to shoot game for his own use as food for himself or family), but to get the birds would have nets and traps with them, and would return home with loads of quails, many of them alive, and scarcely any of the dead ones showing shot marks, and that the birds thus illegally taken were shipped to Chicago and New York markets. He says that at the present rate of destruction it will not be long until the quails are practically annihilated, and thus thousands upon thousands of dollars that would be spent there every season by sportsmen coming there for pleasure and recreation would be turned to some other section of the country where the game is protected. His plea is for a better game law for the territory and for the appointment of game wardens to enforce the law when enacted, claiming that without wardens the laws will not be respected or enforced.

J. P. BARNUM, of Prairie du Chien, Wis., and secretary for Wisconsin of the National Association, writes as follows: "We have done some good in this part of the state. There have been three arrests and the parties convicted for seining in the Mississippi river and one arrest and fine paid for illegal shooting. We are laboring under great difficulties here owing to the Iowa laws not working in harmony with our Wisconsin law. Judge Hayes rendered a decision that the state of Iowa held no control over the Mississippi waters, and the result is, the seining and netting is about double it was one year ago, and no doubt the desirable places on the Wisconsin side are netted by Iowa parties. It is so with shooting. Personally I am very much discouraged over the situation, and truly I feel that we can do nothing to save the game here until Iowa comes to the front and works in harmony with us. I have spent lots of money in the interest of protection of fish and game and have had so little support in the matter it is quite natural I begin to weaken. Fish and game are being rapidly destroyed and sportsmen are rapidly increasing, improvements in implements of destruction are keeping pace with the times, so it is now unsafe for a bird to light or a fish to break water."

ON Tuesday, February 12, while Thos. J. Monahan, deputy fish and game warden of Bergen County, N. J., and a member of the Farmers' Game Protective Association of Hackensack, was out feeding some quails, he found a box trap with wheat in it, set to catch the very birds he had gone out to feed, and he concluded to catch the party or parties who were attempting to trap the quails. So that evening early he went back to the place and hid in some bushes to await developments. He did not wait long until the two sons of Mr. Henry Goring, of Englewood, came upon the scene, and their conduct showed plainly that they were the chaps the game warden was lying in wait for, and he arrested them forthwith, taking them, and the quail trap as evidence against them, before Justice Daniel Manning. The preliminary hearing resulted in the boys being placed under bonds of $100 to appear for trial at the April term of court in Hackensack. The prompt action of Warden Monahan saved one bevy of quails at least, and will probably be the means of saving many other bevies during the Winter.

Fort Lee, N. J. PROTECTION.

THE Ohio Fish and Game Commission recently purchased one hundred English and Mongolian pheasants for propagating purposes, which they now have in breeding coops at Celina, and the commission figures that with ordinary luck they will be able to raise nearly 2,000 young birds during the present season. Ten pairs of the birds will be placed on one of the islands in Lake Erie and the rest will be kept in the breeding coops until a law is enacted protecting these birds for a period of two years, when they will be released in favorable localities. Mr. Shorb, a member of the commission, speaking of these birds recently, said: "There is no class of bird in existence which [illegible]hes such excellent sport as the [illegible]nglish pheasant is larger than a prairie [illegible] bird to shoot. The Mongolian is [illegible]ring-neck is larger than either, being a cross between the two. If we succeed in having a suitable law passed, we will soon have any quantity of good hunting. We will enforce the law strictly and every true sportsman will aid us to do so. It is only the miserable pot-hunters we have to fear, and we will make it mighty hot for them if we catch them violating the game laws."

THE sportsmen of Hay Springs, Neb., and many of the surrounding towns, met recently at Chadron, Neb., in response to invitations sent out by the Chadron Gun Club, and organized the Elkhorn Gun Club. The purposes of the club are to purchase a tract of land in the sandhills for a game preserve, select a suitable site on some lake on the tract purchased and erect a club house, and to work for the enactment of an amendment to the present game law of the state which shall prohibit the shipment of game from the state. The membership fee in the club was placed at $25, and the membership limited to forty, memberships to be non-assessable. The club will incorporate under the general laws of the state. The officers of the club for the ensuing year are: President, R. Flanders, Chadron; vice-president, T. J. Thompson, Hay Springs; secretary, J. W. Wright, Chadron; treasurer, A. C. Putman, Chadron; board of directors, H. M. Wilson, Chadron; Herman Peters, Hay Springs; Mortimer Jeuurun, Douglas, Wyo.; D. B. Jenckes, Chadron; J. W. Boyd, Chadron.

THE sportsmen of Evansville have issued and published the following notice regarding a bill that has been introduced in the Indiana legislature to prohibit the killing of quails in that state for a term of five years: "We learn to-day from good authority that the bill to prohibit the killing of quail in Indiana for the term of five years has not yet passed, and perhaps will not, but it will take quick work or we may as well give away our dogs and guns and be done with it. It is the duty of every sportsman whose eyes fall on this to set right down to-night and write to Capt. A. J. McCutchan at Indianapolis and beg him to work for the bill to stop the sale of game, but to sit down on the bill to stop the killing of quail for five years. It is a piece of rank nonsense. The bill of Mr. I. Walter Sharpe covers the case. That is the bill that Senator McCutchan and Representatives Kamp and Holloway should indorse. Which would you rather do, use a two-cent stamp and a few moments of time or stop shooting for five years? A few strong letters will do the work. Don't wait till to-morrow. Write to-night."

WHILE a great many quails have frozen to death during the extreme cold weather of the past month, there will be a fair crop left for next year, and with a favorable Spring there should be fair quail shooting in this county next Fall. Mr. J. M. Page, of the Jersey County Democrat, received twenty-two Mexican quails from Canadian, Tex., last week, which will be turned loose on several different farms here, where they will be protected from pot-hunters and others as well as possible, and with good seasons we hope soon to have Mexican quails here in abundance. They will be kept in a coop until the cold weather is over, and then delivered to farmers who will take care of them. The law regarding quail shooting has been pretty well observed in this county, this season, and very few birds have been killed. out of season.

Jerseyville, Ill. CAMEO.

QUAILS in this vicinity seem to have wintered remarkably well notwithstanding the continuous cold weather and snow, and with a favorable hatching season we will have good shooting next Fall. I know of several bevies of from six to fifteen birds within two miles of town. The rabbit crop will probably be a failure, as the ferret hunters have killed so many for the market. If the legislature will make a law prohibiting the use of ferrets, make the open season on quails from November 1 to December 20, leave the law on Spring shooting just as it is (for we have no snipe and few ducks in the Fall), and then strictly enforce the law, it will just about meet the requirements of sportsmen here.

Peru, Ind. CARDBOARD.

I DID not get down on the ducking grounds this season until February 7. My friend Jamelson and I started that day and got caught in the big freeze. We shot on February 8 and 9 with my friend White and then had to give it up, as everything was frozen solid. We had fine sport, killing over two hundred ducks and geese. I also killed a few English snipes near the house as I came in for dinner. The duck and goose shooting will be fine from now until March 25. The English snipes will commence to come about the middle of March in large numbers, and then the yellowlegs and all kinds of bay birds. We had a large number of quails left over before the freeze, but I am afraid some of them have perished with the terrible cold.

Virginia Beach, Va. EDWIN L. GORHAM.

THE Highland Gun Club of Elkhart, Ind., contemplates the purchase of thirty dozen of Tennessee or Texas quails, which will be placed on the different farms in the vicinity of Elkhart for stocking up that locality, the native birds having become almost exterminated by recent severe Winters. When the shooting season arrives members of the club will be issued cards, which will permit them to shoot over the farms where the birds have been liberated, and only such as have cards will be permitted to hunt on such premises. The farmers upon whose lands the birds will be placed will look after them during severe weather and at other seasons of the year act as game wardens for the club. No hunting will be permitted until birds become plentiful enough to warrant it.

A BILL which has been introduced in the South Dakota legislature for the protection of fish and game, and which it is thought by many will become a law, provides, in addition to the time when it shall be lawful to kill game or take fish in that state, for the appointment of a commissioner or warden at an annual salary of $1,200, who shall have power to appoint as many deputies as may be necessary for the enforcement of the law. To raise a fund to meet the expenses of the warden and his deputies, it provides that a tax of 50 cents shall be levied annually upon each shotgun and rifle owned in the state, and that non-residents who hunt there shall take out a license costing five dollars.

I READ with much interest the article of Mr. W. T. Collings on making a choke-bore gun shoot an open pattern. I have done the same thing by placing a wadding between the charge of shot, and met with good results. I find it best to use different colored paper shells to distinguish different loads. There are the blue, black, salmon and straw and brown colored shells. You do not have to be so careful then, or mark them, to know what load you are using; and they can be mixed if one is crowded for room, and the maker's name on head of shell will tell you which is which by opening the gun, if the shells should be in the chambers of the gun.

Danvers, Mass. RAPID.

THE severe weather this Winter has been very hard on the quails in this section of the country. Farmers report finding a good many frozen to death. The birds found frozen, I presume, are most of them the ones that Dr. Schnatterly purchased in the South and turned out last Fall. He planted out 375 and it was so late in the Fall that they did not become accustomed to our cold climate before the severe weather set in. Sportsmen are now having good duck shooting on the Allegheny River where it is not frozen over.

Freeport, Pa. H. N. ROWLEY.

FOR several years I have watched the extinction of our fish and game with much interest, and I beg to voice not the sentiments of the many—I am sorry to say—and that is the passage of a law which will compel those who carry a gun to have a license also. By this means our laws become self-supporting and no one lover of the manly sport is called upon to pay more than his share. As it is now the 'pork' hunter reaps the benefits, and if I despise anyone it is he who has no respect for our game laws.

Batavia, Ill. W. H. MORRIS.

GAME, I should judge, has wintered well here, unless the recent cold snap has affected the quails, and I have as yet heard no reports to that effect. There being no snow to speak of, the birds ought to have stood the cold all right. The last two or three open Winters have helped greatly to increase the number of quails in this locality. Prairie chickens have been with us in goodly numbers through the Winter, but will soon leave, in quest of more favorable breeding grounds. I have not heard of any attempts at trapping.

Kingsley, Ia. E. D. TROTTER.

COL. G. S. MYERS, a wealthy resident of St. Louis, Mo. has leased 1,700 acres of land near Jackson, Tenn., which he will use as a game preserve. He expects to stock the preserve with quails and Mongolian pheasants, and will also maintain thereon a well equipped kennel of bird dogs. Col. Myers, it is said, now owns a duck preserve in St. Charles County, Mo., and a trout preserve in Montana, where he and his friends spend much of their time during the hunting and fishing seasons.

Two boys at Bettsville, O., Homer Chapman and William F. Myers, were recently arrested by Game Warden A. J. C. Smith for hunting on Sunday. They were convicted and fined $25 each and costs, the total amounting to $34.20 each, which made the game they killed—two rabbits—pretty expensive eating.

THE members of the Lycoming County (Pa.) Fish and Game Protective Association, at a recent meeting, expressed themselves as favoring an open season of only one month—November 15 to December 15—on deer and game birds, except that snipe might be shot until July.

As a partial recompense for his good work in arresting and convicting a violator of the game law, the Tacoma (Wash.) Gun Club recently presented Game Warden Ed. Flannigan with a purse of twenty dollars.

SPORT WITH THE AWASHONK PACK

BY C. W. CIELFELD

Five o'clock! Time the mare had her feed if we want to make a fairly early start this morning. This flashed through my mind as I opened my eyes and bounded out of bed. Hurrying out to the barn I bustled through the feeding and cleaning process, expecting every minute to see my partner, Tom, come along ready for the start. And perhaps the beagles don't know what's up. I have all I can do to keep them from rousing the whole neighborhood with their barking and other ways hounds have of showing their delight at the prospect of a hunt. I hear the gate open and shut and I know that means Tom's arrival. I leave him to harness up while I get a cup of hot coffee that is ready for me when I go into the house. That matter attended to, the next question is, which hounds are going? We soon settle that, and Bell, Zeno, Bingo and Diamond are put into the crate. I never knew, until we tried it, how much easier it is to carry hounds to and from the hunting grounds in this way. They lie down and are perfectly warm, and we have no care of them until they are liberated.

The air is clear and frosty when we start, and we look forward to a good day's sport. We do not count a good day by the number of rabbits we kill, but by the number of "runs;" we have often let rabbits go by when it would be impossible to get a better chance to shoot, simply to hear the hounds "drive." Well, I am off the track again. It is strange what thoughts will come into a fellow's mind when he attempts to write up a hunt; the first thing he knows, he is writing about his particular ways of handling his pack, his horse, and in fact everything in connection with his hunting trip. Our hunting ground for that day was a swamp about nine miles out of the city, and the morning being so cold we had a good excuse for driving a little faster than usual. The time passed pleasantly as we talked of other days we have been off together and of some particularly brilliant work done by some one of our pack, or speculated as to which one would do the best that day. In about an hour we arrived at the farmhouse where we "put up." Then of course we had to talk for a few minutes with the proprietor, who is very fond of a good dog, and we invited him to go with us to see what ours can do; but he declined, saying he is too old to follow hounds, even if they are of the "vest pocket variety."

How some people will laugh at beagles, people who know nothing of them, of their work, or of their staying qualities. How often have I heard them say: "Oh, they are good enough for one day's hunting, but the next they want a set of crutches to get around on." But it is not so, for I have hunted with them for two weeks, day after day, and they were just as eager to go the last day as they were the first, and perhaps more so, and I think every lover of the little hound will say the same.

Well, the four hounds are let go, and we follow them across the clearing into a brush lot. We know there are rabbits in here, for we have started them before, and we have not long to wait before Zeno's tongue warns us the sport will soon begin. Now we hear Bingo's voice. Then they are still for a moment, when suddenly they both give tongue together, and they have him going. Presently we hear Bell's melodious voice and Diamond's too, but it sounds as though he had cut in ahead and was leading by some distance. But he cannot keep ahead of Bingo and Zeno very long when they have a hot track like that; they are soon up with him and are running well together, doing their level best.

"By the way they hold that track, Tom, they have brought their noses with them to-day," I remark.

"Yes," says Tom, "I guess we are in for some sport to-day sure. Do we want to shoot him?"

"No, let them drive him," I reply; "but if they turn him below and bring him back, let him have it."

They are coming down toward us, and giving tongue at every jump. We look down the cart path where we are standing, and there is the rabbit. He pauses to listen for the hounds, but he does not seem to think he can tarry long, and off he goes into the brush; it was a great chance, but we have let lots of them go by in just the same way. We have a fine place to see the beagles cross, and I do not have more than time to think of this before the two "Indians," as we call Bingo and Zeno, came tearing along into the path, followed in quick order by Diamond and Bell. But they don't pause as the rabbit did; oh, no, they are too busy for that. They go up that swamp at a great pace, their voices ringing out on the still morning air, and it beats any band concert I ever heard. But what's the matter? Have they lost him? No, Bell has the track again, and back they come. We now get a "stand" for a shot, and it is dollars to doughnuts that rabbit goes down on Tom's side of the road; he is the luckiest man I ever went into the woods with; he will get the majority of "chances" every trip, no matter whom he is with. And this one is his too, for "bang" goes his gun, and I know it is all up with Bunny, for it is seldom he misses one. Then I hear him hoot and I start over toward him. The hounds have already arrived and are made fairly wild with a taste of the warm blood. This has been a good run, the beagles doing a nice clean piece of work.

We move on a short distance to another part of the swamp, the beagles working the ground in fine style, and it is not long before we hear Diamond giving tongue.

"He jumped that fellow," Tom says.

And away they all go after him. The fun begins again, but this run is not going to be as good as the other. There are many wet places, and this rabbit must have been through the mill before, for he dodges back and forth and around these, puzzling the little hounds for a while. But they got him straightened, and then how they did put him across the swamp and through a low brush pasture, where he turned Having a position close to where he started I stay, feeling sure he will come back to try his first tactics. He comes back and I gather him in out of the cold.

The sport goes on until we have four rabbits killed, and three the hounds drive in; these we will go after another day, unless someone else gets them; and if they do there are others. We return home well satisfied with the day's sport, having been out, including time of going and coming, about seven hours.

Fish and Fishing

LETTERS TO JACK—NO. 3

CAMP FAIRVIEW, LAKE SUPERIOR, June 3, 1894.

DEAR JACK:—This is our third day in camp at this place, and, this afternoon, as I sit here on the bank between the tent and the lake with the beautiful outlook of heaving, swelling waters—for the wind is blowing a gale—I say: "How Jack would enjoy this!" You see, old fellow, that you are not out of mind, although not in sight.

The other morning, as soon as Stephens had finished his breakfast, we put our dunnage and ourselves into the large skiff belonging to the fishermen, and with four strong men at the oars soon left Chicago Bay behind and came on, down the lake, to this place. On the way we passed Horseshoe Bay, a perfect gem of a bay, small but deep as to water, with one or two huge rocks standing as sentinels lakeward. As we passed it one of our boatmen said:

"There's the place to catch the big brook trout; just stand on those rocky ledges, any calm morning or evening, and you can haul in the big ones as fast as you want to."

Stephens wanted to stop at once and try for the big fishes, but the man said:

"Your camp will be only a mile from here, and you can come any morning or evening and try it."

Stephens was content with this and said no more. We rounded a rocky point and were in Washington Bay. We went up the bay about one mile and decided to camp where a clump of spruce trees stood, on a bluff about twenty feet above the water and where a fine sand beach broke the line of rock below. Here we

> Built a wigwam in the forest,
> By the shining, big sea water,
> In the blithe and pleasant Springtime.

Our wigwam, as you know, is the little seven-by-ten wall tent in which you and I passed so many pleasant days and nights last year. The men who had brought us over were going up a creek which came into the bay to look at an outcrop of iron ore, and Stephens decided to go with them. They came back in about an hour, and Stephens had five fine trout that he picked up on the way back.

At dinner, our first meal in camp, we had trout—all we could eat—and never did trout taste better to me.

After dinner we went off into the big pine wood, not getting back until nearly sunset. I heartily wish that you had been along, Jack. It was beautiful in the grand old wood; such giants of pine, cedar and poplar; I never knew that a poplar tree could grow to such size as I saw them that afternoon. Here and there we came across springs of clear, cold water, each one bubbling up at the foot of some monarch of the forest, at which we quenched our thirst in cups made of white birch bark.

We climbed to the top of the range of hills and looking lakeward, saw a picture, painted by Nature, exceedingly beautiful. We overlooked the tops of waving treetops, ranging through all shades from the light green of the newly leaved maple to the very dark black-green of the fir. Beyond these waving treetops lay the lake, a dark beautiful blue, and over all the glorious sky and sunlight giving a touch of beauty and glory to all. To our right, as we looked lakeward, Chicago Bay indented the shore line. Directly in front of us, Horseshoe Bay gave a curve of beauty to the shore; while to our left Washington Bay made a grand sweep in shore, as though it would fain embrace the stately line of hills, upon one of which we stood. By looking closely we could make out the dot of white on the shore that showed where our camp was. We were tired out by the time we reached camp and did not go over to the creek, after trout, as we had intended.

How we do sleep in camp! We go to bed at twilight, and it seems we scarcely touch the pillows—yes, pillows—you need not laugh, for I brought my old red-cased one which I have had with me on so many trips and Stephens brought a clean white one, at least it was clean when we started. Well, we scarcely lie down ere we are asleep, and then, to our dismay, the sun is shining and a new day is upon us.

The first evening we were here, from a tree right over the tent came the clear, sweet whistle of the white-throated sparrow:

"Ah-me, me-me!" he sang.

"Ah-me, me, me-e-e," another answered.

"Ah-me, me-me, me-e," rang back the song of a third. Stephens exclaimed:

"There are your birds, welcoming you back."

"Two years ago, you remember, when Stephens and I went up on Burntside Lake, after landlocked salmon, I was in a continual wonder over these little songsters. Frequently in the middle of the night I'd awaken and hear ringing through the woods:

"Ah-me, me-me!" There is a blithesome cheeriness to the song that does one's heart good to hear. The next morning Stephens said:

"I'm going exploring this forenoon, and you go a-fishing. If you don't bring back fish enough for dinner, I'll turn you out of camp."

So, after breakfast, we started in our different ways, Stephens into the woods and I for the creek. I commenced near the mouth and fished up-stream a long ways without getting a single fish. At length, in a pool where the water came over a log that formed a dam across the stream, I had a rise and landed a fish that weighed about one quarter of a pound; but no other could I get. I was thoroughly disgusted and almost wished that I had gone with Stephens into the woods. I most heartily wished that you were along, so I'd have someone to quarrel with. The sun was getting hot and I started down-stream, trying every likely pool and rapid, feeling more and more sure as I proceeded that if Stephens carried out his threat I'd certainly be put outside the camp. When nearly down to the mouth of the creek, however, I caught a mate to the fish I already had, and then, in a long, still reach of water that extended from the bay for several rods up the creek, forming a fine pool, alder and willow fringed on each side, the trout suddenly seemed to awaken. The hook would scarcely touch the water when there would come a vicious snap, to be followed by a rush down the stream, and when this was checked dashes from side to side, the sport ending with the deposit of the fish in my creel I do not think, old man, that I ever enjoyed a half hour more than I did the one passed there, during which time I caught nine beautiful trout, each running from a pound to one pound and one-half in weight. Just before I caught the last one, the fisherman who owns the land around here came along, and inquired:

"Well, are you getting any fish?"

"Not many. Do you own this creek?"

"Yes, my land runs from that pine grove yonder clear around to where your camp is."

"Have you any objection to our fishing here?"

"No, for I don't think you'll get any."

Just then a trout started off, down-stream, attached to my line. After a short, sharp fight I landed him; a handsome one, and the largest I had caught that morning.

"Why! you've got one; and a big one, too," he exclaimed.

"Yes, that will do for our dinner," I replied, as I reeled up my line preparatory to starting for camp. I did not care to catch more while he was there. We had been warned against that man by the boatmen who brought us over. They told us that he would allow no fishing in the creek. He seemed pleasant enough to me, however. He told us later that he had no idea the trout were in the creek yet, it being so early in the season. I shoved the boat off and started for camp.

As I was fairly out in the bay, I saw smoke [illegible] the tent, and knew that Stephens was back [illegible] tramp. As I neared the landing I saw him on shore with a long pole in his hand. When I drew near he called out

"Can I let you land, or not? You know the terms of [illegible] again into this camp."

[illegible] I rolled up my creel and heaved it at him. [illegible] and I caught the basket but as there [illegible] pounds of fish in it he failed to hold it. One look [illegible] was enough:

"Come home, my wandering brother; welcome to these arms; nobly have you retrieved yourself; fried trout for dinner you shall have." He was greatly elated by the fine catch.

"After dinner we'll go down to Mesquatawanga River," he said. While we were eating we saw great clouds of smoke come rolling up over the tops of the trees in the direction of the river:

"There's a fire in the woods!" we both exclaimed. A serious fire we found it when we were on our way down the shore on our afternoon trip. The roar of the flames was like the sound of the waves of Old Superior on a rocky coast in a great storm. Great tongues of flame shot to the tops of the tallest trees and then leaped into the air many feet higher. It was a grand yet sad sight. Grand in spectacular effect; but 'twas sad to think of the loss and see the great damage done to the standing timber. For a mile or over we rowed along the waterside of the burning forest, of which the eastern boundary seemed to be the river. We landed nearly where Stephens and I did three years ago, and at once proceeded to try the trout, but our success was not great. We caught a half dozen which would weigh about one-quarter of a pound each. Then I caught one in the pool at the falls which weighed a pound, and this was our whole catch at Mesquatawanga River that afternoon. We rowed the three miles back to Washington Bay and stopped at the creek there, where Stephens picked up a couple of nice trout, then on, across the bay, to camp and supper. The evening was most beautiful, but we were tired out with our long row and the tramping up and down the streams, so we went to bed early, having planned to go to Horseshoe Bay in the morning if it should be calm.

After breakfast we started, taking the Grand Marais and Port Arthur trail for a couple of miles, to where the Horseshoe Bay trail crosses it, when we took the latter trail direct to the bay. I ever enjoy going along these trails, the many turns, twists and devious crooks being a constant delight. The trail from Grand Marais to Port Arthur is well worn, and has been traveled ever since the first white man came on these shores; how much longer, no one knows. My imagination paints a wonderful picture of the scenes along this trail, in which long files of dusky men and women with canoes and bundles of furs, soldiers, cruisers, hunters, trappers, fishermen, mail carriers and dog teams, in all kinds of wind and weather, come and go as the great procession of life comes and goes all the world around.

The Horseshoe Bay trail is well traveled from the bay to this other trail, but beyond there are only blazed trees at infrequent intervals which only expert woodsmen can follow. When we reached the bay we found that the wind was rising and the waves were coming in quite heavily, so there was no trout fishing for us. We made many casts, however, but got no rise.

There was a huge rock about fifteen feet from shore that we desired to reach, so getting a long pole about four inches in diameter we threw one end of it over upon the rock and made the other secure on shore, and then we did the tight rope act while the dashing waves furnished the music. I represented the assembled multitude that cheered Stephens as he went across, then he sat down and enacted the part of the thronging thousands that were supposed to be gazing with breathless interest while I did the perilous feat. We mounted to the top of the rock and fished on every side, but without success. The wind was rising every moment, and we concluded that we had better get back ere our bridge of the lone pole was washed away. We returned to camp along the shore instead of by the trail.

After an elaborate dinner we went off into the woods on a prospecting trip, getting back in time for a five o'clock supper. Then we took the boat and went over to the creek. We went up the creek to where it flows through a grand cañon, the rocky walls of which are veined with iron ore some pieces of which I shall bring home to you, old man. The whole afternoon I was regretting that you were not along on this trip, and to-day I said to myself: "I'll not go on a trip like this again without Jack."

Stephens caught one little trout in the pool at the mouth of the cañon.

We took nothing more until we reached the long pool at the mouth of the creek. There Stephens caught three fine fishes while I sat on the bank, too tired and discouraged to make a cast. After he caught his third one, I roused up enough to make a cast. The lure had only touched the water [illegible] a trout seized it and I soon [illegible] There was a swirl and a rush, [illegible]ale of a trout, or, rather, it was hooked to me. For a moment I was in doubt, but the battle was on and the next few minutes the pool was the scene of a contest that was one of the fiercest I ever engaged in with a fish as one of the contestants. Stephens stood an excited spectator, only speaking once to say:

"If you lose that fish, I'll throw you in the lake!"

"I'll not lose him," I answered. But what a time I had to keep that fish from going among the logs and stakes along the side of the pool, or from going out among the rocks where the pool and the lake met. The little rod bent double, again and again, but at length the trout lay upon the grass, and we whooped in triumph. We weighed the fish an hour later. "Four and one-quarter pounds!"

"Good enough!" said Stephens; "we'll have him for our Sunday dinner."

Two more were taken from the pool, then we returned to camp feeling that we had made a glorious ending to the week.

The stomachs of these trout were filled with a black bug or fly about three-quarters of an inch long. During the day we had seen thousands of these insects, in groups and clusters on the rocks, from which the waves frequently washed them. I do not know what they are, but they look very like a large-winged ant that I used to see when a boy, back in New York. Stephens cleaned the big trout and hung it upon the limb of a tree close by the tent, and—would you believe it Jack?—we fried and deliberately ate four of the others as a second supper; and we slept well, too. In fact we were only awakened by the wind shaking the tent. I looked at my watch and found that it was eight o'clock. We had been asleep over ten hours.

But how the wind did blow! As I looked lakeward I could see the top blown off a wave now and then, and carried away in a little cloud of mist. We had to build our fire among the rocks, down on the beach. We dared not start a fire up where the tent stood, lest the wind should take it beyond our control and another forest fire be added to the one which was sending up dense black columns of smoke to the east of us.

While getting breakfast I made an appalling discovery. The big trout was gone! There was the tree and there was the limb! But where was the trout? Had the wind blown it down? To the foot of the tree we ran. Ah! no need to look further! Those two footprints told the story. A bear had taken our trout! Oh, what a wicked bear was he to thus spoil our Sunday dinner. The lines of Holmes came to my mind:

The crows came cawing through the air,
To pluck the Pilgrim's corn;
The bears came snuffing round the door,
Whene'er a babe was born;
The rattlesnakes were bigger round
Than the butt of the old ram's horn
The deacon blew at meeting time,
On every Sabbath morn.

This was a big bear, too, as shown by his tracks, of which we found several in the sand on the beach. But our trout was gone.

"Well," said Stephens, "I hope he'll have the stomach-ache for a week to pay for this."

We had dinner without our trout, and here I sit, writing this chronicle of our trip for you, Jack; and I can imagine just how tickled you'll be over the big trout and the bear. We have seen bear tracks every day while here, and those of the moose also. The wind seems to be moderating a little now, but the heavy swells are pounding in on the shore with great force.

And ever the fitful gusts between,
A sound came from the land;
It was the sound of the trampling surf,
On the rocks and the hard sea-sand.

So it was at the wreck of the Hesperus, and so it would be to-day to anyone along these shores in a boat or on a steamer. We talk of moving camp to-morrow, so my next letter will not be headed Camp Fairview.

NOTES

MUCH having been said lately in the AMERICAN FIELD regarding the pollution of streams by the refuse from manufacturing plants, especially that from paper mills, whereby game fishes were destroyed, our readers will take interest in two such cases in England, recently reported by our esteemed cotemporary The Fishing Gazette of London, both resulting in damages being awarded to the complainants. Last January Major Gilbey, who occupied a fishery at Wooburn House, County of Bucks, upon proving that Messrs. Wiggins, Teape & Co., paper makers, had wrongfully "caused or permitted large quantities of weeds, mud and filth to flow from a certain mill pond at Glory Mill, in the occupation of defendants, into a stream and fishery occupied by the plaintiff, whereby large quantities of fish, the property of the plaintiff, were killed," was awarded damages amounting to thirty pounds sterling, and costs. A vast amount of evidence was given on both sides and the decision of Judge Holl was exhaustive and sustained by numerous authorities. The other case was that of Mr. A. Fawkes, of Farnley Hall, and Mr. John Yeadon, of Otley, riparian owners, and Mr. R. M. Pratt, secretary of the Otley Angling Club, on behalf of the club, against Messrs. Garnett & Sons, paper manufacturers of Otley. The verdict was rendered on February 4, by Hon. Judge Gates, Q. C., in the Otley County Court, who gave judgment for the plaintiffs and assessed the damages at twenty guineas. In this case the evidence showed that the pollution of the river and consequent poisoning of fishes was due to the turning of sewage into the stream before treatment by the filters for that purpose.

DESPITE the great numbers of trout which have been taken annually in the waters of Maine the supply is far from exhausted, as will be seen from the following catches: This Winter, but a week or two ago, Mr. Goodwin, of Bar Harbor, caught thirty trout which weighed seventy-five pounds; and in the Machias waters, a former Winter, Charles Bull of Presque Isle caught 300 pounds; while E. Weaver and one other man caught 500 pounds, and 300 pounds were taken by another party of trout butchers. These were the largest catches known, but many other men have secured large strings in a few days' fishing in the Winter season. During one week in February the Northern Aroostook Fish and Game Association's hatchery at Caribou is said to have secured landlocked salmon eggs to the number of 50,000.

AT Fergus Falls, Minn., Mr. Orrin Cowles recently indited to the Journal of that place a very strong plea for fishways. He calls attention to a previous communication, by Mr. A. J. Sherman, which lamented the scarcity of fishes and attributed the same to netting and spearing. Mr. Cowles asserts that the niggardly policy of mill owners, who have dammed streams and refused to put in fishways by which fishes could ascend to the headwaters, has had more to do with the scarcity than all the methods of catching fishes. The gentleman certainly has reason to complain, if fishways are as scarce in his section as on most dammed streams, and there is much sense in his suggestion that fishes would do much toward propagating themselves if afforded the chance to ascend the streams as instinct teaches.

A SHORT time ago there was such an influx of fishes at the end of the supply pipe of the Ottumwa (Ia.) waterworks as to nearly shut off the water. There was difficulty in getting water for the city mains, and in order to give the big pumps work holes were cut through the ice, and for several days wagon loads of fishes of various kinds and of all sizes were taken out with dipnets. The mesh protecting the pumps would no sooner be freed from the incumbering mass than another school would come down and have to be dipped out. The occasion was a boon to poor people, who carried the fishes away by the sackful, the larger ones—buffaloes, quillbacks (?) and catfish—being relished for food.

AT Calumet Lake, Ill., a few days since, Deputy Fish and Game Warden A. Lenk arrested five men for the offense of fishing through the ice with dipnets. The men—Gustave Lindstrom, A. P. Haws, John Arndt, John Schwabec and Fred Thomas—were arraigned before Justice Wilder, of Kensington, all pleaded guilty, and each was fined ten dollars and four dollars costs, which all paid.

THE New York State Fish Commissioners have appointed Mr. Frank W. Cheney, of Jamestown, a special fish and game protector for Chautauqua County in that state. Mr. Cheney is a veteran fisherman and has been a member of the police force at Jamestown. He has considerable knowledge of piscatorial and game matters, and the sportsmen of that vicinity think his appointment most judicious.

J. A. HELFENSTEIN, vice-president of the National Association, St. Paul, Minn., writes: "Have the legislature of each state appropriate from $5,000 to $20,000 per annum, and use that amount, not for building and repairing fish hatcheries, but for employing men who are not afraid to and who will see that the game and fish laws of their states are strictly enforced."

IN the Washington legislature Senator Joseph Megler has introduced a bill which provides for a close season in Washington on brook, mountain or bull trout from November 1 to March 30 of the following year, inclusive.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 6

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Graham's Water-Snake—Natrix grahamii (B. & G.).—Introduced here on the authority of Dr. W. H. Smith, who embraces it as a Michigan snake in his list published in Science News, October 1, 1879. If this species is found in the great lake region it is certainly not common. It is not embraced in the Indiana lists, and no other observer in Michigan has met with it. As it is but little known, if at all, in these parts, a description need not be given.

Diamond Water-Snake—Natrix rhombifer (Hollowell).—The diamond water-snake is rare in Michigan and so far as I am able to learn has been recorded but once within our boundaries. The specimen was captured by Geo. B. Sudworth, Esq. This species is of a reddish gray in its ground color. On the middle of the back there is a series of about fifty brown blotches. Distributed from Michigan to Louisiana and Texas.

Pine Snake; Bullsnake—Pityophis melanoleucus (Daudin).—Several small specimens which I sent to the National Museum were identified as bullsnakes, though one authority has pronounced them more likely to be Says-snake. It is perhaps this snake's habit of hissing which gives this species the name of bullsnake. I have been repeatedly informed that bullsnakes could bellow like a bull, and could be heard for miles; and that the pine snake was deadly poisonous. Instead of this, the snake, although making a great effort to frighten persecutors, may be handled with impunity. It only makes a hissing noise when approached or handled, and the loud noises credited to it are never heard according to scientists. A light colored snake with blotches along its length. There is a western species found in Illinois which nearly resembles it. The bullsnake is said to sometimes attain a length of eight or nine feet, and is one of the largest species in the Union.

NOTES

On January 9 I was out, with a friend, tracking 'possums on the snow. It was very cold. We found some tracks and upon following one came to a hollow in the woods, where my friend stayed on the bank while I went into the hollow. At the bottom there was a little brook flowing, up which I went about thirty feet, when to my surprise I saw a flatheaded adder snake, with its head and neck for about six inches as flat as could be, coming right for me. I had a club in my hand and soon put the reptile to sleep. Then I called my friend and showed him what I had. I laid the snake out on the snow and found it was about two feet six inches in length. My friend said he never had seen nor heard of a snake being out of its hole, or showing fight like this one did, at this time of the year. Did anyone else?

New Brunswick, N. J. E. G. S.

In the Pennsylvania Senate, the bill known as the "Bird-Book Bill" recently came up for the third reading, on the call of Senator Snyder. The bill provides for the printing of 24,000 copies of Dr. Warren's. work on birds and mammals. It was so amended that the cost of printing and binding shall not exceed $25,000 and that the contract shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder. The bill was then laid aside for printing and its final passage.

The Central Park menagerie in New York has been presented with a pair of rare birds by Mr. E. M. Knox. The birds are the black-necked swans indigenous to South America, but these two came from Wiesbaden, Germany, in which country they are also very rare. Heretofore all attempts to buy any of them in Germany have failed, the intending purchaser being informed the swans were the property of the Emperor Wilhelm.

A bill has been recently introduced in the Pennsylvania House, by Mr. Cotton, to provide for the prevention of cruelty to animals and punishment for the same.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 6

(Illustrated)

BY A. K. DELANEY

Vitus Bering

One of the last imperial acts of that most wondrous combination of iron and energy, Peter the Great of Russia, was a ukase directing an expedition of exploration and discovery to the northeast coast of Asia. The command of this expedition fell to Vitus Bering, a Dane by birth but for many years in the service of the Russian Navy, in which he had risen to the rank of captain of the first grade. Although his name is perpetuated in the geography of the world the knowledge of his expeditions, of the labors and difficulties attending them and of the indomitable energy he displayed in surmounting all obstacles, is so little diffused among the English-speaking peoples that a brief sketch of his discoveries may be not uninteresting to those who care to read about Alaska.

The edict providing for the first expedition was issued in December, 1724, and the first detachment moved out of St. Petersburg on January 24, 1725 (old style), in command of Lieut. Chirikoff, the third officer in rank of the expedition. Four days later the restless monarch who had set the expedition in motion breathed his last, and on February 5 Bering commenced the long and toilsome march from St. Petersburg, across the continent of Asia to an unknown sea, his objective point being the southeasterly shores of the peninsula of Kamchatka.

Some conception of the magnitude of this first step of the undertaking will be had when it is considered that the distance to be traversed was one hundred and thirty degrees of longitude, in the latitute of St. Petersburg, not less than six thousand miles over the most inhospitable portions of the globe. Desolate tundras, lofty mountain ranges, great rivers, trackless forests and frozen wastes lay before him. Across these must be taken not only his command but an enormous train of provisions and supplies, and the materials necessary for shipbuilding when the shores of the unknown ocean were reached. The command crossed the Ural Mountains in the early part of March and on the sixteenth of that month reached Tobolsk, situated on the Irtish River the principal tributary of the Obi. The watershed of Siberia falls toward the Arctic Ocean, and the vast area it comprises is drained chiefly by the rivers Obi, Yenesei, Lena and their tributaries. The route of the expedition from Tobolsk was north, down the Irtish to its confluence with the Obi; thence southeast, up the Obi and its head tributaries, to a portage across the divide to the Yenesei; and thence southeast again, up that stream and across a second portage where the head tributaries of the Lena were reached; and thence northeast, down that stream to Yakutsk, situated at the most easterly bend of the Lena, in Eastern Siberia.

From this point the command was taken across an unbroken and almost uninhabited wilderness a distance of nearly seven hundred miles, to the sea of Okhotsk. A voyage of six hundred and fifty miles, across this sea, to the mouth of the Bolshoya River in southwestern Kamchatka, was followed by a toilsome march of five hundred and eighty-five miles up that stream and its tributaries and across the divide to the Kamchatka River and down that stream to a small stockade fort near its mouth, on the southeastern side of the peninsula, whence the real voyage of discovery was to commence.

The expedition left Tobolsk in May, 1725, and the entire Summer was consumed in reaching Iiimsk, at the western end of the portage between the headwaters of of the Yenesei and the Lena, where during the last of September the command went into Winter quarters.

The Winter, however, was not passed in idleness. A detachment, in command of Lieut. Martin Spangberg, the second officer of the expedition, pushed across the divide to the head streams of the Lena and constructed barges and boats and on May 6, 1726, started down that river, to be followed shortly after by Chirikoff with the rear of the expedition, and by the first of June the entire command reached Yakutsk, the capital of eastern Siberia, comprising at that time about three hundred houses.

The most appalling portion of the journey still lay before the expedition—the seven hundred miles to Okhotsk. The region at this day is not passed without great difficulty and hardship, and one hundred and sixty-five years ago it was a trackless, tenantless wilderness of barren tundras, dense forests and frozen wastes. The temperature often descends below 70° Fahrenheit, and when the fierce blizzards sweep over the snowy wastes a few steps from camp often mean death. At Yakutsk the command was divided into detachments; and on July 7 Spangberg, with two hundred and four men and thirteen rafts laden with materials, started down the Lena with the purpose of ascending its easterly tributaries to the Stanovoi Mountains, and to cross their divide to the headwaters of the Urak River and down this stream to Okhotsk.

Bering left Yakutsk about the middle of August, with two hundred horses in his detachment, pushed overland, and after forty-five days of great hardship reached tidewater at Okhotsk, there to find a semi-civilized settlement of eleven huts and ten families, whose chief means of subsistence was fish. Here timber was felled, and in the fore part of December the commander of the expedition was enabled to sleep in his own quarters.

Spangberg's detachment well nigh met annihilation. Winter fell upon them before the divide of the Stanovoi Mountains was crossed, in the midst of an entirely barren and swampy region, two hundred and seventy-five miles from the nearest known settlement. All the materials on the rafts except necessary provisions were left at the Yudoma, a tributary of the Lena, in charge of an officer and six men, and Spangberg with the bulk of his command started to march overland to Okhotsk, hauling his supplies on handsleds. The severity of the Winter increased to a fearful degree. The mercury congealed and snow fell to a depth of six feet. The handsled train was soon abandoned, and the men thenceforward staggered on under heavy packs of supplies, often wading in snow to the armpits by day and sleeping under such shelter as the snow afforded at night. Week after week the command toiled on, until the provisions grew scarce and the pangs of hunger were added to the horrors of an Arctic Winter. The command was at last reduced to the necessity of gnawing straps, leathern bags and shoes to sustain life. The bare accident of falling in with Bering's trail, where a few hundred pounds of flour were found and dead horses abounded, alone saved this detachment from extinction. On December 21 a courier from Spangberg reached Bering at Okhotsk, and in a few hours relief parties were under way. The last of Spangberg's command reached the sea about the middle of January, 1727, after eight weeks of hardship, privation and toil unsurpassed in the history of adventure. But the last parties of the rear of the expedition, under Chirikoff, did not reach Okhotsk until midsummer of the year.

In the meantime, however, parties in command of Spangberg and Lieut. Peter Chaplin, the junior commissioned officer of the institution, made two trips to the Yudoma to bring in the supplies and material left there, and Bering had constructed a vessel, which was christened the Fortuna, and also had overhauled and repaired an old craft used in 1716 in exploring the Sea of Okhotsk. After a preliminary voyage by Spangberg in the Fortuna, to the Bolshoya River and return, on August 19, 1727, the expedition embarked in the two vessels and crossed the Sea of Okhotsk, reaching the peninsula of Kamchatka at the Bolshoya on September 14.

Another Winter of toil and hardship followed, during which the materials of the expedition were transported up the Bolshoya, across the portage to the Kamchatka and down that stream to the village of that name—situated twenty miles from the river's mouth—where a handful of Cossacks occupied about forty huts scattered along the banks of the river, and where a stockade fort and that omnipresent accompaniment of Russian [illegible] a Greek church, had been erected. There [illegible] 1728, after a journey of thirty-seven [illegible] Petersburg, unsurpassed for the hards[illegible] encountered and for the tireless en[illegible] displayed in surmounting them, Beri[illegible] the point of embarkation for his [illegible] Compared with the long tramp acr[illegible] succeeding voyage of discovery was o[illegible] duration.

On July 9, 1728, the Gabriel, a fairly stanch vessel which Bering had constructed at the Kamchatkan village during the Spring and early Summer of that year, dropped down to the mouth of the river and on July 13 hoisted sail for the voyage into the unknown sea with forty-four souls on board. The route taken was along the eastern coast of Asia, well in toward the land. On July 27 Cape St. Thaddeus was doubled and the Gabriel entered the waters of what is now known as the Gulf of Anadyr and passed round this estuary, stopping on July 31 at Saint Kresta (Holy Cross) Bay. From this bay Bering sailed southeast, along the Chukchee Peninsula, anchored in the Bay of Preobrashensky on August 6 and three days later weathered the southeastern extremity of the peninsula, which he charted as Cape Chukotskoy and determined to be in latitude 64° 18′; a determination subsequently closely verified by Captain Cook, who placed it in 64° 13′.

At two o'clock in the afternoon of August 11, off to the southeast and over the ship's starboard quarter, an island was sighted which Bering in honor of the day named Saint Lawrence. From August 11 to the 12th the Gabriel, although sailing sixty-nine miles, made but 29′ of latitude and at noon of August 12 had reached 64° 49′. During the next succeeding twenty-four hours the Gabriel, unbeknown to her commander, was passing through the strait which now bears his name and at noon on August 14 was in 66° 41′ north, with East Cape over her stern. At three o'clock in the afternoon of August 15, in latitude 67° 18′ north and longitude 193° 7′ east from Greenwich, the Gabriel put about and the return voyage was begun. At nine o'clock of the next day East Cape was again sighted, and shortly after Bering discovered the larger of the two islands which lie midway of the channel between the two continents and named it the Diomede. Though the strait is but thirty-nine miles wide and in clear weather both continents are here simultaneously visible, clouds enshrouded the American coast when Bering passed the strait both outward and inward bound, and although he was firmly convinced that he had weathered the eastern extremity of Asia when he anchored his ship at the mouth of the Kamchatka on September 2, 1728, after his voyage of fifty-three days, he was totally unconscious of his near approach to the American continent and of how little he had lacked of making a discovery that would have instantly covered his name with the halo of glory.

Bering passed the succeeding Winter at the stockade on the Kamchatka River, and from evidences there obtained satisfied himself that land lay at no great distance to the northeast. On July 6, 1729, he started on a voyage in that direction, but the second day out encountered a tremendous gale which carried away some of his rigging and he was compelled to return. On this trip he must have passed very close to the Copper Islands, on one of which he breathed his last twelve years later, but on account of fog he failed to sight them. He, however, discovered the northerly of the Kurile islands and located Cape Lopatka, the southern extremity of the Kamchatka Peninsula, and also explored the intervening passage, thus establishing a new and easier route from Okhotsk to the Kamchatka fort.

On July 14 he steered for Okhotsk, and in March, 1730, after an absence of five years, reappeared at St. Petersburg and submitted to the government his report and a chart of the northeast coast of Asia, both of which met with disfavor and ultimately bitter opposition from the authorities of the scientific world at St. Petersburg.

The Russian Academy of Sciences was then in its infancy and numbered among its members a corps of young men from Germany and France who entertained the most chimerical views as to the geography of Eastern Asia. The German clique under the lead of Gerhardt Frederick Mueller proceeded to discountenance Bering's explorations to the northward, while the French wing led by Joseph Nicholas De L'Isle, on the most flimsy evidence, constructed a territory extending to the eastward of the Kurile Islands known as Gamaland. This latter structure fell to fragments under the explorations of Lieut. Spangberg during Bering's second expedition, but the former was not demolished until the third voyage of Captain Cook, who followed very closely Bering's route along the Asiatic coast and was fortunate enough to see both continents from Bering Strait. This most distinguished navigator of his day seems to have combined a seaman's love of truth and fair play with his fondness for the sea, and in speaking of Bering says:

"In justice to the memory of Bering I must say that he has deliniated the coast very well, and fixed the latitude and longitude of points better than could be expected from the methods he had to go by. This judgment is not formed from Mr. Mueller's account of the voyage or the chart prefixed to his book, but from Dr. Campbell's account of it in his edition of Harris' collection of voyages and a map thereto annexed, which is both more circumstanial and accurate than that of Mr. Mueller."

The map and delineation Cook here refers to are Bering's own chart, a copy of which Cook had with him on this voyage. In speaking of East Cape Cook further says:

"I must conclude, as Bering did before me, that this is the most eastern point of Asia." It was not until years after Bering's death, and after the highest authorities in London, Paris and Nuremburg had given full recognition to his labors and fame, that the discoverer of Bering Strait was awarded justice by his adopted country.

NOTES

The St. Valentine's edition of the Atlanta (Ga.) Journal, edited and manrged by the women of the Cotton States and International Exposition, was one of the [illegible] ever issued from the press of that pa[illegible]. It made a brilliant success, financially, as well as [illegible] as we hear that their treasury is about thr[illegible] dollars richer for the day's work.

To our regret, through carelessness, the letters e and l were transposed in the titles of our two travel illustrations in last week's issue, making us say Wrangle instead of Wrangel. We haste to correct this error lest our [illegible] infer that we have undertaken the [illegible] task of the phonetization of geographical [illegible] discussion such intention; 'twas the simple [illegible] of letters.

THE NEW YORK SHOW

The nineteenth annual show of the Westminster Kennel Club opened on Tuesday, February 19. The record of nineteen great shows held by this club, in nineteen consecutive years, is evidence that the interest in dogs and doggy matters is a thing that has come to stay, and that the Westminster Kennel Club's show is a magnet that attracts the attention of breeders and fanciers from all parts of the world. This is not only due to the fact that New York is one of the greatest cities of the world, but to the fact that the club, in its officers and manager, has men who know all that is required to bring such events to a successful issue and can handle such an affair in a manner that gains the confidence and respect of everyone interested, from the handlers of exhibits to the wealthiest patrons of the show. Mr. Thos. Terry, secretary, who is probably the most actively interested member in the direct working of the show, and Mr. Jas. Mortimer, superintendent, are men that are known on both continents as thoroughly practical dog men and acquainted with the the wants, and willing to comply as far as it is possible with the desires, of the exhibitors of every breed. Spratts Patent is also at home here, and the benching, feeding, and other details that are so necessary for the success of a large show have the attention of their whole force of men from Mr. Cleather down, and the result is that nothing that can be done for the comfort and safety of the dogs has been neglected. The show just held has been one of the most successful ever held by the club, having an entry of 1,406 dogs benched, over two hundred of which were entries in two or more classes, as follows:

Mastiffs	14	Boston terriers	31
St. Bernards	147	Basset hounds	4
Bloodhounds	12	Dachshunde	46
Great Danes	29	Beagles	54
Newfoundlands	7	Fox terriers	143
Borzois	22	Irish terriers	50
Deerhounds	3	Black and tan terriers	18
Greyhounds	40	White English terriers	9
Foxhounds	15	Dandie Dinmont terriers	11
Retrievers	2	Bedlington terriers	16
Chesapeake Bay dogs	6	Scottish terriers	46
Pointers	113	Skye terriers	9
English setters	105	Yorkshire terriers	29
Irish setters	83	Toy terriers	2
Gordon setters	48	Pugs	10
Spaniels	121	Toy spaniels	39
Collies	98	Italian greyhounds	8
Old English sheepdogs	10	Schipperkes	6
Poodles	78	Miscellaneous	9
Bulldogs	60
Bull terriers	80	Total	1,636

The weather was fine, and consequently the aisles were crowded the greater part of the time from ten a. m. to nearly midnight each day. Dr. H. Clay Glover, as usual, attended to the veterinary work, and it is a noticeable fact, that his attention to those duties in previous years has had a good effect, as there are very few dogs presented at the doors that have to be turned away.

All of the judges that were on the list, with one exception, were on hand. The absentee was Dr. Sauveur, who had the collie classes, and they were given to Mr. James Taylor, who already had a large number of breeds assigned him. There was, as usual, an occasional "kicker," but on the whole there was, I think, less grumbling than usual, and all of the exhibitors seemed to be in good humor and enjoying themselves.

There was, however, an affair that created great excitement on the last day and filled the minds of all with a feeling of horror. Mrs. Ferd Stenn, who has for years been a breeder and exhibitor of pet dogs, principally toy spaniels and Yorkshire terriers, has been so unfortunate as to [illegible] of some miserable and revengeful [illegible] it was a wholesale poisoning [illegible] highly prized pets. Mrs Senn [illegible] Yorkshires and King Charles, [illegible] Japanese spaniels. At closing time on Thursday night Mr. Senn took Champion Romeo and three others home with him, and the other twenty dogs were put, in lots of five, into four hampers left convenient to the cages for that purpose. Soon after 9:30 Friday morning, when Mr. Senn arrived at the show, he found, on opening the first hamper, that the Yorkshire dog Brandy was dead; in the next hamper the King Charles bitch Lady De Lena and the Jap Kiku were also dead; two Japs and a Prince Charles were dead in the third basket, and in the fourth two more Japs, Yokie and Chin, making in all eight of the choicest specimens of their respective breeds. In spite of Mr. Senn's desire to keep the affair quiet it was soon noised about, and everyone in the show was talking of it. It would have gone hard with those who were guilty of this horrible crime if they had been detected. Later in the day two large cards were printed and posted on the door of the office of the club, reading as follows:

$500 will be paid by the Westminster Kennel Club for information leading to the detection of the party, or parties, who poisoned the dogs of Mrs. Senn.

The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals will pay $500 in addition to the above named reward. John P. Haines, Secy.

It is to be hoped that the liberal offer will result in the guilty parties in this most horrible affair being brought to justice. A fund was raised to recompense Mrs. Senn for the loss of the dogs. I did not hear how much was subscribed, but understand that it was in the neighborhood of $300.

Pointers.—(Mr. Charles Heath, judge.) Challenge heavyweight dogs had five entries. King of Kent was for exhibition only; he was looking well, and although nine years old bids fair to continue his usefulness and keep on producing winners on field and bench for some time to come. Robert Le Diable, also for exhibition only, was absent. Lad of Kent, shown in his usual good condition, was the winner, and second went to Sandford Druid. Molton Banner was not looking as well as he should; he did not carry flesh enough; in proper condition he should change places with Druid. Heavyweight bitches had four entries. Hempstead Pearl was transferred to the lightweight class, leaving the old-timers, Woolton Game, Lady Tammany and Josie Bracket, to fight it out. Game, of course, won; she looks about the same as last season. Lady Tammany beat Josie Bracket for second place. Josie is best in head and general character throughout, and might have had the place. Open heavyweight dogs brought out a rather good new one, Sir Walter, by Prince Regent, last year's winner in the same class. He is a better dog than his sire and was placed over him; he has a fairly good head, but it is a trifle houndy in expression and somewhat throaty; back of this he is excellent, has good feet and legs and is put up for a worker, though he shows considerable quality compared with the rank and file of heavyweight dogs now going the rounds; he is a good active mover and carries himself well. Mr. Mott, his owner, is said to have refused $500 for him. Prince Regent, his sire, was properly placed second to him; he has a fairly good head and neck, but is low on the leg, flat in loin and straight in his stifles—a dog with pointer character and strong in many points, but lacking in symmetry. Ridgeview Bow, third, is a good headed dog and shows more quality, but he is not quite true in front and might have a better stern. Ridgeview Regent was reserve; he has a well formed but heavy head and is throaty, is not quite right in pasterns and feet, and was shown too thin in flesh. Lord Bracken, who was third last year in the same class, was fourth now; he is short in head. Prince's Lad, Gamester, Naso Bang and Hempstead Prince were each awarded V.H.C. There is not a great deal to choose between any of those that were back of first and second King of Lynn, if he had been in good condition, might have beaten any of them, but he was badly shown and was unplaced. They were mostly large and coarse, though, all of them were well-made and workmanlike-looking dogs In heavyweight open bitches there were twelve entries, and Lass of Kent was the winner; she is plain and coarse in head, not good in shoulders, and does not move well. Devonshire Pearl, second, is a better bitch; she is straight and good in her legs, and is well formed. I do not like her expression. Springside Nell is well known; she has been placed over both the winners. Kent's Belle, fourth, is also well known. Mr. Heath placed her first in this class last year, also in the novice class, and gave her the special for best bitch by King of Kent, placing her over Kent's Pearl and Wild Lily. Renie II, reserve, is a neat bodied bitch; she is short and coarse in head and not strong in pasterns. Lass of Tammany, third last year, was out of shape and shown altogether too heavy in flesh; she was given three letters. Brighton Leda and Urada were also awarded V.H.C., and Dido A got H.C. Leda has a very coarse stern. Urada is quite a nice bitch and deserved the letters, as did also Dido A.

Lightweight challenge dogs brought Duke of Hessen, Arthur and Tenny together. Duke still holds his own and is good as at any time in the past two years; he was the winner, and Tenny was awarded second place, over Arthur, who was well shown, being lighter in flesh than last year and consequently not showing so much thickness in shoulders.

Tenny is best in head and shoulders, but not as good in forelegs and pasterns. Hempstead Pearl, transferred from the heavyweight class, Miss Rumor and Wild Lily were the contestants in the lightweight challenge class for bitches. Pearl is the best of the three; in head she is decidedly the best, and her form throughout is better. Between Lily and Miss Rumor there is little to choose in heads, but Lily is better in shoulders, chest and loin, and equally as good in other points. Miss Rumor got the award, and Pearl was placed second. Open lightweight dogs had the same dogs for first and second as last year, Ridgeview Comet and Chancellor; the latter is in better form than last year. I heard it remarked that Chancellor's condition should have put him over Comet, but I think Comet wins rather easily from him; though he is coarse in head and throaty. Comet has excellent body, legs and feet. Springside Tammany and Ridgeview Prince were third and fourth. The former was the winner in dog puppies last year; he is not true in front, but otherwise a good dog showing lots of quality and character, and is a good mover. Prince wants a grand filling out. Prince of Pontiac was unplaced, but he might have had a notice. Hempstead Carlo was the reserve; he is a fair dog of the usual workmanlike type that comes from that line of breeding. The open lightweight class for bitches was won by Springside Lady, with Springside Jill second. Lady was the winner in last year's puppy class, and has fulfilled the promise that her puppy form indicated; she is clean cut and full of quality, very active, and gamy in appearance, though somewhat throaty for one of her size. Jill was third among last year's puppies; her coarse faults are in muzzle, which is not square, and shortness of head. Lady Bracken was third; she is coarse in head. Brighton Faustina was fourth; she should have held the same position that she did in puppies last year, viz., second to Springside Lady. She is decidedly better than the bitch placed second; her head is fair, but somewhat broad and short, beautiful legs and feet, and she beats Jill in muzzle and front and is equally as good otherwise. Marguerite Kent was reserve. Brackette, a nice lemon and white, was shown too light in flesh or might have had that place. Belle of Lancaster, V.H.C., is coarse in head; she is good otherwise. The dog puppy class had ten entries, a brace of Prince Regent puppies scoring first and second. Young Americus, first, has a good head and excellent shoulders and chest, is a well-formed one, but carries a coarse stern. Prince's Boy, second, is not quite as good in head nor as strong in body, but with more quality and a good stern; he is likely to best his brother when they meet again. Beaufort of Kent, third, was out when I made my notes; Prince Regent Jr, reserve, is short and plain in head and is outclassed by the winners. Phryne won in bitch puppies; she is rather common. I like the second winner best; she wins in head and is a fairly good puppy all through, except that she is coarse in stern. Trudie Howell was third and Princess Grace reserve; she is small, short and high on the legs, but a cleanly made, pretty bitch, showing more quality than any in the class; she would have done for second place, with Trudie Howell third and the winner fourth. In novice dogs Sir Walter was again first, with Springside Tammany second and Ridgeview Prince third. Springside Lady and Springside Jill were first and second again in the novice class for bitches, with Brighton Faustina third. Sandford Druid was placed over Duke of Hessen in the field trial class. Duke beats the winner well in head and general type and character, and only loses to him in the lack of "bloom" and youthfulness; as he was not set back on account of his age in other competitions he should have won in this class. Mr. George J. Gould won the kennel prize with Josie Bracket, Ridgeview Comet, Miss Rumor and Marguerite Kent, against the Springside Kennel's Duke of Hessen, Lady Tammany, Springside Lady and Kent's Pearl. From the position held by the latter kennel in other classes, I cannot understand this award. Duke of Hessen had beaten Comet; Lady Tammany had beaten Josie Bracket; Springside Lady was first in her class, and Marguerite Kent reserve, and Kent's Pearl was second to Miss Rumor.

English Setters.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) In challenge dogs, Cactus won from Glendon, who was second. Cactus is a more compact and truly made dog, a stronger and better mover, and wins quite easily. Spectre won in challenge bitches; she was shown in good condition. Blue Nell, shown soft, is not as good in front or chest. Albert's Nellie, not so good in head as either of them and shown fat, was placed second. Victress Llewellyn was also shown. The Earl won in open dogs; he was looking well. Second went to Dad Monarch, a long-bodied dog, low on the leg and bad in shoulders—a bad mover, with little to recommend him but coat and color. Third went to Albert's Ranger, who has improved greatly since last shown; he is light in muzzle, but outclasses the second dog. Harry L was fourth, and Roi d'Or reserve; he is light in muzzle, but aside from this, about as good as any in the class. Nimrod, V.H.C., has become throaty and was short of coat. Beau Brummel, V.H.C., has a fair head, is high on the leg and flat in ribs, but is a handsome dog and will improve. Washtenaw Grouse has a good head, but it is a trifle coarse; he is a little flat in ribs and would show better with more flesh; he seemed dull, but, I think, if shown in good form would stand very high in good company. Old Champion Antonio was shown, but not for competition. Real English undoubtedly shows weakness in his hind parts; he is a splendidly formed dog, and I hear that he would have been placed third had he not been taken out of the ring. He should not have been placed. If he was sound he should win, if not sound he should get no notice. The fact that his weakness does not affect his progeny was proved by English Jack, a nice little dog, though unplaced; he is perfectly sound, though by Real English bred directly back to his own dam, and if this weakness could be transmitted it would have come out in this way of breeding. Critic and Bald Rock were unnoticed; the latter was given first at Pittsburg by Mr. Davidson. He is a heavy, coarse dog with a bad coat. Robin Goch was H.C. In spite of the defect in his tail he has been placed high in good company, and he has improved and is better than ever before; he has an excellent body. Gamester, H.C., was well shown; he lacks in head qualities. Cincinnatus' Pride has also improved; I like him better than the fourth dog. Roderigo's Ned, unplaced, is too large and lacks in show quality, but is a grandly made dog, powerful and active, and of a good type to breed small bitches to; although a big fellow, he is active and a good mover. Open bitches were a strong class of twenty-one entries and only one failed to get a card, eight of them coming in for three letters. Countess Zoë was the winner, and Maid Marian was second. Furness Maid was third; she has a strong head, that would look better on a dog. Nellie Breeze, fourth, has a light head, of the Gladstone type; a neat bodied little bitch. Some really fine bitches were in the V.H.C. division; and some of these with but one or two letters to their names have been placed at previous shows. Among these I noticed Flower of Sulphur; she had to be satisfied with C. Dog puppies had twelve entries. The winner, Larkspur, was not on his bench when I took my notes. I did not like Allister McAllister, second; he is too much like his grandsire that had the same place in the open dog class. If they are to be used for yard dogs that kind would do, but for the field they are not what are wanted. Mr. T. G. Davey showed several workmanlike looking youngsters, but there were none in the class that looked like making future winners on the bench. The winner of the bitch puppies was also out. I liked the third bitch, Vic Hollymere, better than Lady Platt, placed second. Vic has a fair head and is a well-formed bitch. In novice dogs Count Beaufort, V.H.C., in the open class, won. He is a good headed dog with good length of neck, but the curly hair about it detracts from his appearance; he is deep in chest and flat in ribs, not very good in forelegs and shoulders, and rather long and low in body. Rockland, second, has a bad head, is full between the eyes and cheeky. I liked Cincinnatus' Pride, third, best for the place. The novice class for bitches brought out a very good new one that was placed second to Furness Maid, third in the open. I liked her best for first; she is good throughout and of a type that, although showing quality and finish, is at the same time put up for field work. Wild Rose was third; a small bitch, neat and well formed; she resembles her dam, Princess Beatrice. Flora was reserve. Rody, a pretty bitch but undersized and flat in rib, was V.H.C. A dog of the same litter that was not entered was substituted for Splash and received V.H.C. The kennel prize was awarded to the Victoria Kennels with The Earl, Lady Gathmoy, Lady Richmond and Countess Christine, a nice even lot of setters shown in good condition.

IRISH SETTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge). Kildare won in challenge dogs, and Finglas was second. Blarney Jr, Montauk Jr, Glenmore and Duke Elcho were also shown. In challenge bitches Queen Vic and Norna took their accustomed positions. Shamrock O'Moore won in open dogs. He is inclined to snipiness, is deep but narrow chested and elbows in; he is too straight behind, but has good color. Second went to Bob Jr, a small dog with a light head and a broken tail, but shows the most quality of any in the class. Henmore Shamrock has a plain head and sturdy, workmanlike body, is truly made, and has good color; he is about the best in the class, though he falls short of being a first-class show dog. Pemberton was fourth; he is well known. Dick Finglas, reserve, has a plain head and was shown in low condition; a dog of good type and character. Lady May Swiveler won in open bitches. She is broad in skull, has good color and is well made; shown too fat. Nona was second and Eudora third. I liked the latter better than the winner; she is light in muzzle, but aside from this is better in type and character than anything in the class. Ruby Glenmore, reserve, was shown too thin; she is of a good type and if shown right will be well up. Rosamond, well known, was fourth; she was shown in soft condition. River Roe, Maid of Borstal and Shandon Belle were V.H.C.; all have won firsts. In dog puppies Henmore Shamrock won; he has a fair head, good color, stands well on legs and feet and has good shoulders and back. Glenmore IV, second, was out. I did not see the third. The reserve card went to Henmore Shamrock Jr; he has a plain head, but good body and color. In bitch puppies Miss Ruby Eudora II and Biddy Finglas were placed in the order named. The latter was considered the best of the lot by most who saw them. The balance of the class were ordinary. Shamrock O'Moore repeated his previous win in the novice class for dogs, with Cappoquin second and Killane third. In novice bitches Lady May Swiveler was "in it" again, River Roe second, and Nancy Finglas third Redstone Kennel's Lady Noreen, a good big bitch, was reserve. In the field trial class Finglas won with Edna II second, and Bedford third.

GORDON SETTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) Challenge dogs had five entries. Heather Lad was quite an easy winner, with Leo B second and Heather York reserve. Although Homer S is plain in head I liked him best for second place. Highland Yola won in the corresponding class for bitches, and Heather B got second place. In open dogs Highland Kent, with a common head, and in fact a rather common dog throughout, was first. Dick Noble was second; he is light all through and not a very good setter. Heather Bruce, third, is better than either in head, coat, color and type; he was shown a trifle thin. In open bitches Dwight Pearl won easily; she afterward won in the puppy class and was second in novice. Sally Beaumont, well known, was third. Back of the winners they were an ordinary lot. The dog puppies were also a poor lot, and the bitch puppies I did not get a chance to examine, as they were, some of them, off the benches. Dick Noble won in novice dogs, and the winners of first and second in the open class repeated in bitches.

FOXHOUNDS.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) English foxhounds had but three entrees, two of which were in the challenge class. Vexation won over Rosemary, who is best in head, loin, front and action. Songster was alone in open dogs; a powerful dog, and though large looks like a goer.

American foxhounds had three in the challenge class. Bowsprit was first, Commodore second, Ranger II reserve; all are of different type. Open dogs had five entries. Four of them, from the White Oak Hill Kennels, were all of one type. Duke, Clay and Zack were placed as named. In open bitches Flirt was first, Glenwood Belle was second, and Sunmaid third. Sunmaid is the type of the winner, and Glenwood Bell is another sort; they should have changed places.

CHESAPEAKES.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge). There were six entries, of which some were very good and some very bad. Deacon, first, is a fine looking dog with good limbs and a handsome head, but lacking under-coat; his outer-coat was fair, but showing the skin plainly through it. He should have had third prize. Pride, second, is a fine specimen of the "otter breed," showing a dense coat of sedge color well lined with the under-coat and has fine legs; a powerful bitch, and ought to have been placed first. Bigelow's Rose, good color and showing under-coat, was a trifle light in bone but ought to have been second. Tuckermuck Favorite, V.H.C., and Mary II, third, are both away below size. Wonder, H.C., is well named, for it would be hard to say what he is. It seems unfortunate that more specimens of this breed could not have been gotten together, but the fact that there was not a separate class for each sex kept entries down.

BEAGLES.—(Mr. Jos. Lewis, judge.) Challenge dogs had three entries. Royal Krueger was for exhibition only. The same owner's Sherry was the winner, and Frank Forest was second; he has more bone than the winner, is cobbier, and a better type. Lonely won in the class for bitches from Elf, second. Elf was shown too fat. Ringleader won in open dogs over 13 inches. Furrier was second, Lee III third, and Trueman reserve. The latter is better in head and ear and as good otherwise as the second, and crowds the first prize dog for that position. Lee III has a good body but is snipey. Tyrant was V.H.C. and Roger W was H.C.; the balance, four in number, were unnoticed. In open bitches over 13 inches Daisy Corbett won. She is rather long in back but has a sweet head and expression. Oracle, second, is better in shoulders than the winner but loses in head. Popsey, another lovely headed one full of quality, was properly placed third. Emerline II got the reserve card. In open dogs not exceeding 13 inches, first prize was awarded to Razzle, and second to his kennel mate Little Wonder; both are well known. Third went to Laich's Roy, second at the National Beagle Club's trials in 1894. Laddie, winner at the same trials, was reserve. Open bitches not exceeding 13 inches went to Lonely II; she is a good bodied bitch, a trifle thick in shoulders and not particularly good in head and expression, but wins easily from Evangeline except in head. Dazzle is a very nice bitch, but light in muzzle. Kitty Clover was the reserve, and Spider V.H.C. The puppy class had dogs and bitches together. The winner, Alice, is rather a nice bitch, but long cast and a little snipey. The balance were rather ordinary. Alice won in novice class for dogs and bitches, and Trueman was second. The field trial class had Frank Forrest, Eva W and Laddie, placed as named.

W. TALLMAN.

MASTIFFS.—(Mr. James Taylor, judge.) The lamentable scarcity of entries in this breed denotes that the old English mastiff is losing popularity and is being ousted in favor by the more gayly-colored and picturesque St. Bernard. Beaufort's Black Prince had no competition in the challenge class for dogs owing to the absence of his most formidable rival, Ingleside Minting; and the well-known Lady Diana was the only entry in the corresponding class for bitches. Emperor William, the open dog class winner, has a good head and deep, square muzzle, but is rather light in middle piece and lacks the heavy, massive body which is looked for in a really first-class specimen. Webster's Caesar, second, is a large, good-boned, plain dog, whose size and soundness are his chief merits, and little harm would have been done had he given way to Hans Sach, a smaller but much more typical mastiff. Prince Edward II is not a big dog, neither is he excellent in head properties, but his good legs, feet and hindquarters merited and gained recognition. The bitch class contained three entries, of which Lady Cameron and Maggie Murphy were newcomers. The former has a grandly wrinkled and massive head, but was shown a bit below herself in condition. Both are good specimens and easily outclassed the home-bred Princess Leta. Young Prince, the winning puppy, has fair size and good bone. Nellie Bly, second, is very short in face, but heavy in ear.

ST. BERNARDS —(Miss Whitney, judge.) Challenge rough-coated dogs saw Sir Bedivere once more in the lead; he was scarcely in his best form, but his coat shone with the glow of health as he stood in the ring, neck and shoulders above his rivals. Between Altoneer, second, and Otos, reserve, it must have been a very near thing, as both were looking their very best. Rustic Beauty, who had such a successful career last year, lowered the colors of Lady Livingston, a very beautiful and well-known specimen, who in turn defeated the well-known Lady Anna, whose lack of size is accountable for her defeat. The open dog class contained thirty-five entries and the quality was much above the average. Le Prince, shown for the first time in this country, made a successful debut scoring in massiveness and bone, depth of muzzle, coat, markings, and all-round symmetry and finish. Demetrius, a beautiful headed dog, occupied a similar position to that at the specialty show, where he was second; he loses in size and bone to his more fortunate rival, but is by no means a small dog. Wach Eardman, third, is a massive white and brindle dog whose straight bone, good body and grand head are much to be commended. Booth's Duke of Lincoln is a strikingly handsome dog and attractively marked, and had he bone in correspondence with his immense height and size he would prove a veritable thorn in the sides of the champions; he has a grand body and moves well, but might be a trifle deeper and blunter in muzzle. Mauprat, V.H.C., is a wonderfully good bodied dog with the best of legs and feet and immense bone, but his head is plain and his eyes a shade light. Ashland Jumbo, reserve, has a grand body, good bone and massive head; his expression might still be improved. Ardmore, V.H.C., was hardly looking his best, and Vindex, a white dog with a massive head and good bone and an excellent mover, was scarcely done justice to with a single letter. Dian, H.C., is very attractive in color and coat but lacks face markings, and Ben Butler's rich coat would be improved by a white collar. Lord Wilton, V.H.C., is the same good honest dog as ever, but he was in too warm company this time to do better than receive empty honors. La Princess won in the bitch class, and her immense size, bone and soundness will always keep her well in the lead; she is a trifle narrow in skull but well defined in stop and very deep through the muzzle, and although deficient in facial markings she has the correct expression. Kingstonian Beauty was a good second; she is correctly marked and in addition to her good size is very pleasing in expression. Huddersfield Belle, third, has a grand body, good coat and handsome markings, but is weak in muzzle; a grandly bred one that should produce winners. Otto Ruth, reserve, has a good body but her head is small and deficient in type. El Oro, fourth, has nice markings, fair size and good bone; a little more stop would improve her. The white-faced Countess Madge, whose grand head is a study, could not do better than H.C., a rating altogether too low for her, for barring her white face she is troubled with very few faults. The puppies were not a very promising collection and with the exception of the actual winners need but a very brief description. Adams' Jupiter, the winning dog, has a well shaped head and good legs and feet, but is small for his age. Otosson, second, resembles his sire in color and shape of eye. American Belle, the winning bitch puppy, is rich in color and correct in coat and markings, and if she goes on will render a good account of herself; now she is a trifle undersized. Countess Plinlimmon is a very small one, and Donna Nora, though fairly well grown, is weak before the eye.

In challenge smooth dogs Alton II won from Melrose King, his litter brother, being better in expression, also in action; but the latter's more massive head and rich coloring made it a very close decision. Empress Theodora had no easy task set her to win over her sister bitch Melrose Belle, but her grand head [illegible] were equal to the occasion. Miss Alton [illegible] Bellegarde was transferred to the open class, and the smooth dogs Alton Jr fairly smothered [illegible] with the utmost ease, also capturing the Challenge Cup for the best American [illegible] and other specials. Plinlimmon V, [illegible] and was in faultless condition. Council, third, has improved on his puppy form, but his eyes are still too light in color. Leicester Jr, fourth, has a rather too profuse coat for a smooth. Jack Elberon well deserved his reserve card. Prince Napoleon, V.H.C., is a well-grown dog, a bit plain in head and expression, and Romeo II has good body, legs, feet and size, but lacks character in head. Smooth bitches were a very nice lot and very even in quality. Lady Hannay very properly won, having a nice head and expression, a grand body and good bone. Pandora, second, is just a trifle houndy in head, but her good body, legs and feet and excellent coat entitled her to her position. Charmion, third, is well known; a trifle light all over but very pleasing in expression and nicely marked. Julia, fourth, is not too sound on her pins but nicely marked. Melrose Judith, reserve, was in very poor condition or she must have been in the money as her head and expression are very nice. Bellegarde had to be satisfied with three letters, but she is a very sweet bitch although a trifle undersized. Richard B won rather easily in dog puppies, as Colin, second, is poor in head. Silver Prince, third, lacks the requisite shadings and is weak in muzzle, albeit his body, bone, legs and feet are much above the average. Apollo, reserve, is a tall dog but does not move nicely. Patrol II was absent. In bitches Guide's Belle, a large, roomy puppy that looks like growing into a big one, had an easy win, second prize going to Lady Isabella, and third to Madam Bedivere Watch, who was commended in the open class. In the novice dog class Kingstonian Guide won; a smallish dog with a good typical head and nice coat and color. East River Prince, second, is a big, heavy boned dog with a very fair head, but he is undershot. Wach Eardman was placed third, and as in the open class he was placed over Duke of Lincoln, this would, on collateral form, make Kingstonian Guide a better dog than Duke of Lincoln, in which opinion I fancy his owner would scarcely concur. Most of the mentioned ones were in the open or puppy class. Lady Hannay won in novice bitches, with the well-known Princess Eulalie second, and Faint Heart third, the latter a new face but a very nice one.

BLOODHOUNDS.—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) The newly organized Bloodhound Club has stimulated interest in this breed and there was a consequent improvement in the number and quality of entries. Champion Victor won in challenge dogs from Belhus, whose head is scarcely so good as the former's, and he is almost too close to the ground for symmetry. Champion Judith won in the corresponding bitch class, but Kaween was by no means disgraced. The latter's head is a trifle short and strong in skull, but is beautifully wrinkled, and she cannot be excelled in body, bone, legs and feet. In open dogs, Jason, a wonderfully well developed puppy of eleven months, was placed first. Alchymist, second, shows the effects of age but he is a grand old dog. Berry's Bradshaw, third, is a bit dished in face and coarse in skull. Brough, reserve, is faulty in set-on of ear and does not show haw, but in color and coat he is very good. In the bitch class Delfan was lucky to beat Stella III and Lady Marjorie. The latter is a nice quality bitch though a bit light in bone and substance. The Westminster Kennel Club's special for the best team was won by J. L. Winchell with Victor, Judith, Brough and Jason, the latter winning in the puppy class, also taking the club's challenge trophy for the best dog or bitch, the handsome gold medal for the best dog in the open class, and the silver medal for the best dog puppy.

GREAT DANES.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) Major McKinley, in beautiful condition, was placed over Stanley, whom he beats in size, straightness of bone and general contour. In open dogs Faust IV rightly won. He is a very large blue dog with a good neck, excellent legs and feet, and a good mover; he is, however, a trifle round in skull and a bit slack in loin. Honeybowl, second, is a nice brindled puppy tight in lip, though a trifle weak in front of eye and on the small order. Rolf the Great was not for competition; he is a large, coarse-headed brindled dog with immense bone, but not straight in pasterns and splay-footed. Pasha, third, is a plain one, and were Bismark D better at his elbows I should prefer the black dog for the place. Mrs. H. Bord's Leo, V.H.C., is rather light in bone. Tigre, a harlequin, is wide in chest and out at elbow, otherwise a fair dog. The winning bitch, Juno, is a trifle weak in muzzle, but good in neck and body with good shoulders, legs and feet. Cyrene, second, is light in bone; and Phrynne, another harlequin, dips a little behind the shoulder but has a nice head, clean neck and good bone. The winning puppy, barring being a trifle dished in face, is very promising and bids fair to be a good one. Chief, second, is better in body than Caesar D, who is very raw and unfurnished. Lora, reserve, is weak faced and light in bone.

NEWFOUNDLANDS.—(Miss Whitney, judge.) These were the usual collection of black dogs, none of which call for notice except Mr. Miller's Rover, a very fair specimen entered for exhibition only.

BORZOIS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) In challenge dogs Col. Dietz was alone, and in the corresponding class for bitches Princess Irma, shown in beautiful condition, was placed over Vinga, who carried too much flesh and now shows rather badly in front. Ataman IV won easily in open dogs; he is a large dog with a very characteristic head, good coat, excellent legs and feet and good hindquarters. Sorvanets, whose name does not appear on the catalog, through a clerical error, was an easy second; of the same time type as Ataman he loses to him in chest, elbows, legs and feet and shows age. Trojan, third, is a bit short in head. Adrooski, reserve, is coarse. Czar, V.H.C., is nice in outline but weak in head and would have made a better bitch. Thrupp, H.C., is long cast and has very poor feet. Zlobella won in open bitches, being best in shoulders, legs and feet and also in [illegible] quarters. Zmeika, second, has the correct [illegible] expression, but was quite out of coat. Dagmar [illegible] in neck and front, but is nice in loin and quarters. [illegible]

IV, reserve, is short in head and straight in face; legs and feet fairly good. Leekhoi the Great won in puppies; very long head, nice profile, good bone, legs and feet, body light as yet and unfurnished. Alma, second, has the correct head and was shown in nice condition, but her shoulders [illegible] like casting. Inkerman was in the open class, [illegible] plain in head.

[illegible]—(Mr. John Davidson, judge.) As the [illegible] Kennels were not represented there [illegible] of entries. Neither of the challenge class [illegible] were only two entries in the open dog class and one in the bitch class. Lochiel won easily in dogs from Stag, beating him in head, coat and general appearance. Kelpie, the only bitch, was so fat that her outline was destroyed, and she looked light in bone.

GREYHOUNDS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) Gem of the Season won in challenge dogs, with Lord Neverstill second and Imperator reserve. These are all old faces and well known. In challenge bitches Bestwood Daisy won; she is cleaner in shoulder than Southern Beauty, but she lacks the bone and substance of the latter and is beaten in these particulars by Wild Rose and Spinaway. A new one came out in open dogs in Toon & Thomas' Southern Rhymes, a big, powerful black and white dog, with a good neck, fair shoulders, a very useful set of legs and feet and powerful quarters, but wanting a little in quality. Norway Star, second, is a racy looking brindle, faulty in ear and not perfect in feet. Jack of Clubs, third, is good is neck, shoulders and outline, but might be harder and more muscular in quarters. Oldstone, the brindled and white dog, looks like staying, but is a bit coarse. Dakota, reserve, is a powerful dog, that looks like galloping. Randy, V.H.C, is light in loin and short in neck. Hornpipe has wretched feet but is a rare topped dog, with well sprung ribs and good chest, loin and hindquarters. Spring of the Valley has gone heavy in shoulders, but his good ribs and powerful loin and quarters merited at least three letters, and the same may be said of Chester, who is, however, very wide in chest. Open bitches were a useful lot, headed by Wild Lily, a bit lucky in beating Southern Gay Girl, who, it must be said, fails slightly in pastern and feet. Bed of Stone, third, I was unfortunate in not finding on the bench. Best of Fashion is a useful-looking bitch, a trifle short of substance all through. Chips, H.C., is well known; she seems a hard bitch to condition and suffers therefrom.

SPANIELS.—(Mr. E. M. Oldham, judge.) The spaniel entry was a large one, and the quality was, on the whole, very good, while one hundred and twenty-three entries beats the record in America. In Clumbers there were ten entries, Messrs. Little and Preston having taken hold of this grand old breed. In open dogs the good dog Friar Boss won easily over Glencoe, second, who beat Albert, third, in bone, head, length and action. In the corresponding bitch class Glenwood Greeting won with the same ease. Vandal, second, wants more flesh, and head not quite right, but beats Meta, third, behind the head; with more flesh she will look better.

Irish water spaniel dogs had but two entries; both well known. Dennis scored in coat and body, legs and feet. topknot and tail. Musha scores a trifle in head and muzzle. Marguerite won easily in her class. Belva, second, loses to her in head, coat, topknot and curl. Venus, third, got her place through Kitty of Cork's bad condition.

There were no entries in challenge field dogs, but the corresponding bitch class saw two old-timers enter the ring in poor condition. Bridford Ruby beat her kennel companion, Rosedale Bess, handily. In open dogs a new importation, Royd Monarch, won. His head is not quite right, ears look badly set, is too straight in stifle, good body and front, substance and coat good, moves well and shows character. Staley Baron, second, has gone off considerably since the Hempstead Farm's show. Shown very light in flesh and short of feather, he just managed to beat Warwick, third. In bitches Midnight III had an easy win. Gossip, second, beat Maid through the latter losing in condition and coat. Dame Trot has gone off badly, and will never see her old form again. Drayton the Shrew secured the blue in "other colored" bitches; she was not shown in such good condition as last year. In "other colored" dogs Coleshill Rufus won from Drayton Shrewder. Both were shown in poor condition, the older dog looking a bit better that the puppy; the latter will improve with age. Toby, the winning puppy, might have more length of body and his head could be improved upon, but he has plenty of time. Drayton Shrewder was second.

In black cocker spaniel challenge dogs, Black Duke again scored and beat his son Pickpania, with something to spare; the latter is a good one, showing cocker character. In challenge bitches there were no entries. In the challenge class for dogs and bitches of any other color there were three old faces. Red Jacket was entered to compete for specials only, and Red Roland won, beating Bambo easily. In open dogs (black) Woodland Prince, in good condition, won handily from Bell Boy, with Chief third. The winner has improved since last year, and but for his hind action would be very good. The typical-headed Baby Ruth scored again in the open bitch class, with Woodland Princess second and Rideau Reine third. Princess loses to Ruth in head, but beats her in body and coat. Rideau Reine is looking well again. In open dogs (red or liver) Red Robin won, with Derby second, and Cardinal third. The winner could be better in head, but scores in body, moves freely and was in good condition. Cardinal is a fair specimen, but the rest do not need comment. In the corresponding bitch class Tonita won from Woodland Bessie, second; the winner is well known, has good skull and nicely set on ears, is a little too long in body, stands straight in front. Mr. Preston took the special for the best kennel of spaniels over 28 pounds with his team of Clumbers, the most level team of the four competing.

COLLIES.—(Mr. James Taylor, judge.) These classes were to have been judged by Dr. L. C. Sauveur, but as he failed to put in an appearance Mr. Taylor kindly consented to take them. In challenge dogs Sefton Hero, looking better than ever, scored a good win over Wellesbourne Charlie, who was [illegible]rcely in full bloom. Rosiyn Will[illegible] reserve. Charlton Phyllis [illegible]es; she was in full coat but [illegible] since last year. Highland Floss, always a favorite of mine, was second, and Jakyr Dean, reserve. In the veteran class Wellesbourne Charlie was first, with Hempstead Zulu, the black and white dog that still retains his good head and perfect ear carriage, second, and Christopher third. Don Giovanni, reserve, is rather thick in skull with low carriage of ear. In open dogs Rufford Ormonde was shown with one leg bandaged, having injured it in jumping from the window of his kennel; he was, however, quite good enough to win on three legs. He is a very large dog, rich sable in color, with a most lovely head and expression, perfect ears, a very dense coat of proper texture, good loin and quarters, and nice carriage of stern. Domino II, second, was rather a disappointment, as great things had been told of him; he is a big dog with a very long head, light in eye and sour in expression, and is pig-jawed; his ears are small and well carried, plenty of good, straight bone and capital forelegs and feet, with a profuse coat of fair texture, but he is straight in stifles and hocks and moves badly behind. Woodmansterne Trefoil, in grand coat and condition, came third, and Woodlawn Trefoil, fourth. This dog has improved very much since last September, when I saw him at Providence, and would have been my choice for second place. Hempstead Chief, reserve, is a large, upstanding dog, gone a bit thick in skull, is pig-jawed slightly, is good in bone, legs and feet, too gay in carriage of stern, and is not in good coat. Hempstead Rex was unnoticed, and Marvel and Silver King were absent. In open bitches the Providence winner, Woodlawn Sunset, scored a good win; she is on the small side but full of quality. Flora May has a lovely head and perfect ears, but her coat is soft in texture and she is a bit wide in front. Cragston Dulcet, third, is short in head and light and full in eye; she is a beautiful bodied bitch with a good coat and small ears, which are not quite orthodox in carriage. Cragston Pearl, reserve, is prick-eared, short in head and light in eye, but has a grand coat and was in very good condition. Ormskirk Susie, fourth, is not flat enough in skull, but she is a very sweet bitch with a charming expression and good coat. Woodmansterne Deborah, V.H.C., a black, white and tan, was out of coat. Trefoil Princess, H.C., has a dense coat and plenty of size and bone, but her head is short and she is faulty in ear. In the class for dogs under two years Domino II was first and Woodlawn Trefoil second. Ford, reserve, is a good bodied dog, a bit strong in skull. Fifeshire Mark, V.H.C, has nice ear carriage and expression. Sefton II was out of coat, and Kriss Kringle is a bit weedy and gets his ears up too high. In the corresponding bitch class Woodlawn Sunset again won, with Cragston Dulcet and Cragston Pearl second and third; these were in the open class. Domino II won in dog puppies, with Cragston Douglas, a big sable and white puppy, a bit heavy in head and ear, but good in body, bone and coat, second. Cragston Blue Ruin won in the bitch puppy class; a pretty little blue merle who will never get size enough. The winners in the novice classes have already been described in the open and other classes, except Cawdor Mayflower, a very nice headed bitch who received three letters.

In smooths Sedgemore Piebald was awarded first; his ears are small and well carried and he has fair bone, but I did not quite like his expression; he is short in head and snipey. Hempstead Maid has rather large ears, which she can carry very well. Blue Light is a nice bitch, but begins to show age and has thickened in skull.

OLD ENGLISH SHEEPDOGS.—(Mr. R. F. Mayhew, judge.) Boxer III, the winner, has a rare good square head, and when in full coat will take a lot of beating. Herdsman II, second, was well shown, but his coat is soft and he has drooping quarters. Sir Charles, third, is a nice, typical dog, with a bad front; and Lord Mayor, reserve, is on the small side, but full of character, nice in color and has the wall eye so much admired in the blue and white sheepdog. Mayoress of Newport should have won in bitches; she is a good-shaped, large bitch, whose coat is inclined to curl. Clarissa, who won, lacks the squareness of head and body that is characteristic, but she is a pleasing bitch, with a good coat.

POODLES.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) In the challenge class for cordeds Lion was alone and was well shown. In the corresponding class for curlies Champion Milo, who was looking very well, was entered for exhibition only. This allowed the Morey Kennels' Rajah to win, closely pressed by the brown Diamond, whose general style is better than the winner's. In challenge bitches (curly) Mr. H. G. Trevor won with Chloe, whose nice head, good style, and close curl are the correct thing. Vivette, second, is an excellent poodle in every respect, but the blacks seems to be the favorite color. Champion Dinah, who by her many victories has earned an honorable retirement, was also in this class, for exhibition only. Tell I won in the open corded class, scoring in length and fineness of cord. Lady Marquise, second, is a very handsome specimen, not quite so good in coat as the winner but with a really nice head and good style. Flora, third, was shown very fat; and Czar's coat was rusty. British Lion, V.H.C., was short of coat, but when it grows the winners will need be in their very best form or they will have to retire. The open class for curly dogs was very well filled, the winner being Emperor, a very stylish dog from Mr. H. G. Trevor's kennel, shown in beautiful condition. Cæsar, second, is a larger dog with more bone; he has a very good head, dark eye and very close coat, but he was light in loin and not quite nice in his skin. Carnot is a handsome dog in good form. Mignon and Carlos are fine specimens, but shown a bit light in condition as to flesh—a poodle should be in fairly good flesh, so as to present a nicely rounded, smooth appearance where their bodies are shaved. Nero, V.H C. moved badly, and although he has a fairly long head, he also has an objectionable light eye. Rip and Bijou were absent. In the bitch class Josephine was placed first, Leah second, and Coquette third. Niniche got H. C., and Cybele, and Diane were each given one letter. These awards were not as easy to follow as those in the dog class. It is true that one or two of them acted badly in the ring, refusing to show themselves to advantage, and this in all probability accounts for their relative positions. In open dogs (other than black) Mrs. F. H. Benedict's Zip and Marron were placed first and second; both are beautifully formed dogs, but too soft and open in coat. Patsey, given third, is a white, with good legs and feet but rather strong in head. Poobah, reserve, has a correct coat, and is moreover a very stylish dog. Giest is a white dog with a nice head and good body. In the bitch class Hill Hurst Dinah won handily, with Posey from the same Kennel, a good second. Yum Yum, third, has wretched legs and feet. The puppies were not a very promising lot, several of them seeming to be weak on their pasterns as though badly reared.

BULLDOGS.—(Mr. J. H. Matthews, judge.) There was a large entry of bulldogs, which must have been very gratifying to the judge, who is also president of the Bulldog Club, and who donned the ermine for the first time. Mr. Matthews had Bathos, Reve Royal, Dolly Tester and Bow Bells benched for exhibition only. In challenge dogs His Lordship was placed first, and King Lud second; the latter was shown in very good condition, and barring his bad stern and hollow back is a grand little dog. The winner was shown in good form and has no bad faults; he might be better in cushion, more up-faced, and he is inclined to be beefy behind and coarse in stern. Wal Hampton got the reserve card. Saleni won in challenge bitches, with her kennel companion, Graven Image, second; both looked uncommonly well and seem good for several more years if no accident befalls them. In open dogs, 45 pounds and over, King Orry made his first appearance, and it is safe to say that no grander specimen of his breed has ever been seen in America. His head is a study; he has the squarest skull, the biggest nose, the deepest stop, the shortest face, the most layback, and the squarest and best finished underjaw of any bulldog living, added to which are the neatest of ears, grand width of chest, capacious ribs, a well-arched loin, light muscular hindquarters, and a properly set-on fine stern, which he cannot carry wrongly. It is true he is higher on the leg than the extremists like, but he is proportionate and symmetrical and cannot be called a leggy dog. Handsome Dan, second, is pinched in nose, too short in skull, and not deep enough from eye to lower jaw; and he should have given way to Sheriff, whose head properties are very good. The latter's ears are heavy and his body could be very much improved. Rustic Sovereign was looking very well but his down-face will always be his misfortune. In open heavyweight bitches White Venn very properly won and there is little to be said as to the placing of Katisha and Hucknall Gypsy. The former has rather the larger skull, but Gypsy scores in finish, bone and quality. Mr. Storell's Queen is a dudley-nosed one and would be disqualified in England; here she gets the reserve card, and while "straining at the gnat" because one bulldog has a little black coloring the dudley-nosed one is very highly commended reserve, and the "camel is swallowed." Miss Venn, V.H.C., well deserved her card. Sister, V.H.C., has a bad stern and plain face. Grosvenor Lass, H.C., is a big fine bitch that should make a good matron. Mischief was unnoticed. In open lightweight dogs Damon, placed first, has a big skull, very long back and flat ribs, and, in my opinion, should have changed places with Nugget, second, and Heathen, H.C. The latter is very nearly, if not quite, the best bodied bulldog we have and has proved his merits as a stud dog by producing Monkey Brand, a dog that has won his way to the front in the best company in England; besides, he is as good in head properties as Damon and has absolutely nothing but his color, which is black and brindled (not disqualifying), to which any serious objection can be taken. Here again Napper, another dudley, is awarded a very highly commended card. Baron Killarney, third, is a very leggy, light boned dog with a plain, pinched face and bad stern. Counsellor, H.C., has improved very much since last Spring and is now a very fair bulldog. In lightweight bitches a grievous mistake was made in placing Juno II and Daisy Belle over that grand little bull-bitch Haphazard. Juno II is down-faced and heavy in ear, and Daisy Belle's body is on her front legs instead of swinging between them in the orthodox manner. In making these rather severe criticisms I trust the judge and exhibitors whose dogs are criticized will take my remarks in the same spirit as they are given. Bulldogs, as well as other breeds, must be judged by the standard; an intelligent conception of which and a purging of the mind of all individual fancies is absolutely necessary to the proper discharge of the responsibilities which a judge assumes when he steps into the ring. Puppies were a very moderate lot and the least said of them the better. King Orry won in novice dogs, with Sheriff second and Baron Killarney reserve. Several decisions arrived at in the open class were upset in this class, which is altogether inexplicable and misleading. In the open class Counsellor was highly commended and Captain B was reserve; in the novice class Counsellor was very highly commended and Captain B only highly commended. Bandy Boy, who failed to attract the judge's notice in the open class, got the same award in the novice class as did Captain B, who was awarded the reserve card in the open class. In the novice bitch class Hucknall Gypsey very properly won; and Primrose (formerly Princess Nan) was awarded second prize, although unmentioned in the open class, where Sister was very highly commended and received a similar commendation in this.

BULL TERRIERS.—(Mr. James Taylor, judge.) In challenge dogs Cardona and Carney met, and the verdict was in favor of the former. It was a very close thing. Cardona had a trifle the best of it in eye, but Carney wins in loin and stern, and I should not be at all surprised to see this decision reversed. In challenge bitches Edgewood Tipsy won, with Attraction second and Vesper Bell next in order. Tipsy, perhaps, scores a little in eye, and the old bitch, Attraction, had an overloaded stomach and was dead out of form. It was a big challenge class, with seven entries and not a bad one among them. In open dogs Duke of Rochester won, with old Diamond King second and Topsparkle third. These are well known. The winner was shown in good form and has a nice clear-cut head; a shade light in eye and a too gayly carried stern are his worst faults. Diamond King has a powerful head, which has kept its form, and a good eye; while Topsparkle's failing is his rather bad front. Jack the Great is a grand-bodied dog. White King is gone in head, but his good ribs, loin and stern are very commendable. Brady has a stern which is not proportionate in length. Admiral Mello is slack in the back, light in bone for his size and coarse in stern. Gully Boy has a good eye and short back; a very promising puppy. Greenhill Nunthorpe, who a few short months ago was winning prizes in England, could get no higher than a highly commended card, but he was not in good shape and the two letters are no real indication of his merits, although perhaps almost as much as he deserved on the day of judgment. In open heavyweight bitches Edgewood Flossie and Edgewood Trilby, two very nice young bitches, were first and second, the former the longer in head and best in body. Bonnie Kate, third, is a bit long-east. Maggie Cline, reserve, is light in bone and inclined to be a bit bossy at the shoulder. Newmarket Syren, V.H.C., is improving in body, but is still a bit weak in face. In lightweight dogs Rookery Boy was awarded the highest honors; he was always a bit thick in skull, but his grand body and stern and bull terrier expression will always get him there or thereabout if the company is not too hot. Little Flyer, second, must have pressed him closely, but he has not the bone and substance of Rookery Boy, although cleaner in head. Tarquin, third, has a longish stern and light body and must have had Ted Pritchard close on him at the finish. In the corresponding bitch class the patched bitch from New Haven won, with Sabutia, a nice headed one with a good stern, second. Bess of Rochester, third, did not show well in the ring, and Pearl Rochester is rather lippy and light in bone. In the class under 20 pounds Edgewood Rose was adjudged the winner, but Nellie Harper and Edgewood Sport are nearly as good. Sport will in all probability turn the tables on his conqueror at some future day. The winners in the puppy and novice classes have already appeared; nothing new turned up except Mr. Croker's Sir John, a rather light-bodied dog inclined to show too much lip.

BOSTON TERRIERS.—(Mr. Chas. F. Leland, judge.) There was a marked improvement over last year's exhibit, and the thirty odd entries were a decidedly even lot. In heavyweight dogs Prince Walnut was placed first, beating Mr. Hollander's Peter, whose body is a trifle long and his tail could be improved. Prince Walnut is slightly throaty. Pilot, third, is a good bodied dog whose expression is spoiled by wall-eyes. Bob, reserve, is a moderate specimen, rather too short on the leg for symmetry; color, ears and stern good. First and second prizes were withheld in the corresponding bitch class, and third prize was awarded to Nankin, whose condition was bad and she has gone off in eye and head. In lightweight dogs Spider won; a good little dog with a short body and excellent legs, feet, stern and markings: a trifle more depth of muzzle would improve him. Tom, second, has an equally good body, but loses to Spider in head. Commissioner II was third; a nice dog, whose stern is a trifle too long. Topsy won in lightweight bitches; she good in color, head and markings, but a bit coarse in shoulder. Peggy, second, has large ears which are not well carried. Miss Thora, third, is rather long in body and out at shoulders, but her head, stern and color are good and she was well shown.

BASSET HOUNDS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) There were only four entries, and Royal Hector won easily. Turk, second, is light of bone and weedy. Drayman has good ears but is very long in loin, and Rockey is a very big dog lacking in character and very faulty in set-on and carriage of ear.

DACHSHUNDE.—(Mr. Jas Taylor, judge.) In challenge dogs Jay, shown in fairly good form, had little trouble in winning from Don Quixote II, short in body and out at elbow. Jargonelle won in challenge bitches, showing more quality than Janet, who has grown coarser with age and maternal duties. Open dogs found Mr. E. S. Woodiwiss' King Sol well in front. He is a very nice headed red dog, full of quality, and only wants a wee bit more bone and a more slightly arched loin to make him nearly an ideal. Hempstead Farm's Tack was again second, the position he has occupied on every occasion on which he has been exhibited; he is a sterling good black and tan dog, with a good head, powerful legs and feet, good length of body and well ribbed up. Windrush Kennels' Pedro is a liver and tan puppy with a capital head, good bone, a very lengthy body and beautifully arched loin, but he will, I fear, be too large when fully matured. Leviathan is a long and low dog with a good head, a little plain in set-on of ear. Wamba, V.H.C., is strong in head, and Janty, V.H.C., has very high ear carriage. Pretzel was rather harshly treated with a commended card, but he is very weak in his hocks and rather short in body. In the bitch class the new importations carried away first and second prizes, with Mr. Manice's Princetta whipping in third; first prize being won by Widgeon, a daughter of the renowned Jackdaw, and second by Dinah Belle, a red bitch, rather light in bone but nice in quality and ear carriage. Jane Austen, reserve, is a black and tan bitch, very neat in head, good in body and brisket with powerful bone. Windrush Kennel's Princetta was third, and afterward was awarded first in competition for the Manice Cup. Hempstead Farm's Weasel, H.C., has a very neat ear, is close to the ground and very lengthy in body, but showed signs of approaching maternal cares. Pedro won in the puppy class, with Albany Tobe second, beating Janty, reserve, in head and ear. Teckel B, V.H.C., has a light eye but is very long in body and close to the ground.

FOX TERRIERS.—(Mr. R. F. Mayhew, judge.) In smooth challenge dogs Blemton Victor II, in rattling good form, rightly won. Warren Safeguard, second, is a sterling good terrier, but just lacks the high quality of the winner. Ripon Stormer got the reserve card, thus beating Blemton Rasper, who is much the better in front, but too straight in stifles and hocks. Warren Captious was alone in the challenge bitch class; and Raille, still looking well, was the only entry in the class for veterans. Blemton Stickler, the open class winner, never looked better than on this occasion; still he must have been uncomfortably pressed by Warren Daybreak, a very good youngster of nice size, with a rare head, eye and expression, neat ears and the best of legs and feet, but who unfortunately went lame at the critical moment by running a splinter of wood into his foot. Beverwyck Royalist, whose head does not improve, was third and Warren Captor fourth; the latter is on the large side, good in bone, head and ear, but a bit soft in coat. Raby Rival, reserve, is too much on the leg and wants letting down in body; his head, ear, eye, front and legs and feet are good, and he should improve. Sentinel, V.H.C., is a stylish puppy with a good head and front. Warren Solo has the longest head I ever saw on a terrier, and quite dispels the opinion that Safeguard cannot get long heads. The open bitch class brought out a rare terrier in Warren Capture, correct in size with a most lovely head and expression, rare top, a good coat, and excellent legs and feet. Cowthorpe Gem, second, is a quality terrier, slightly wanting in bone, nice coat, good legs and feet, and a very nice head and ears. Warren Sentence, third, only wants time; a charming puppy that must, if nothing befalls her, do a lot of winning. Richmond Victory, fourth, is a nice bitch, just a trifle strong in head, lovely little ears, good bone, legs and feet and excellent coat. Richmond Pearl, reserve, a tan marked one, is a good terrier; and so is Ray of Light, but her coat is soft. This was the best class of bitches ever seen here. In dog puppies Warren Daybreak, recovered from his lameness, won easily. Sentinel was second, and Blemton Emperor, third; the latter has good coat, nice head, ears and eye, good front legs and feet—quite a nice youngster but a little raw at present. Warren Capture, first, and Warren Sentence, second, in bitch puppies have been previously spoken of. Warren Leaflet, third, has good front, legs and feet; a terrier, but well beaten by her kennel companions. Mere Julesta, V.H.C, is quite a terrier, has heaps of coat, might be a little harsher in texture, good in neck, front and legs and feet, good bone, nice head and ears; wants time. In novice dogs Warren Daybreak was first, Sentinel, second, and Blemton Emperor, third; and in novice bitches Warren Capture was first, Cowthorpe Gem, second, and Warren Sentence, third, being the same placings as in the open classes.

In wirehaired challenge dogs, Cribbage, first, looked a little light and short of coat on body; not broken enough. Oakleigh Bruiser, second, was in grand form. In challenge bitches Surrey Janet was alone. Open dogs, Endcliffe Banker won; very fair head and nice neck, front feet and body, good texture of coat. Marden, second, is quite a huntsman's terrier, nice size, level back, good quarters and loins, also legs and feet, good expression, nice head and ears and right in texture of coat. Third, Yale Tramp is quite a good sort, nice head, eye and expression, good legs and feet; a dog of right size, wants hardening in coat and his ears are too rounded. Bushy Bramble won in open bitches; a grand terrier and in the best of form. Brittany, second, is a little wanting in front; afterward a nice tarrier in size and body properties with a good hard jacket. Brittanic, third, is a nice one in head and outline, a little long in back, but from her breeding should produce winners. In dog puppies, Endcliffe Brisk won; very fair coat, nice in head, eye, legs, feet and front, good ears (at times carried a little high). An all-round promising youngster. Hill Hurst Trick, second, is nice in head, eye and front, good legs, feet and outline, a fair coat, and looks like having a future. First in bitch puppies was Butterflies, a nice little terrier wanting in size and texture of coat. Hill Hurst Bud, second, is just a fair sort.

IRISH TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) The judge evidently laid great importance on good natural ears, and Jackanapes, the only uncropped dog, won, Jack Briggs getting second, and Boxer IV, reserve. Merle Grady was too fat and carried too much coat, which handled soft. Dunmurry could not be denied in challenge bitches; she was looking very well. Candor, second, is going a bit strong in head and was dead out of coat. Hill Top Surprise has thickened and was not seen to advantage, and Judy was heavy with pup; a rather nice little bitch with an open coat. The open class brought out a good entry, at the head of which was Brian O'K, a sterling good terrier with a good head, very neat drop ears, a grand coat, and the best of legs and feet. Briggs' Best, second, is a sterling good puppy and will do a lot of winning; he has good natural ears, a nice head, and rare bone and front. Marton Shamrock, third, was looking much better than when at Boston, but he is full big, soft in coat, and light in eye. His Honor got the reserve card, and Fenian Boy and Brickbat Bruiser were both very highly commended. In open bitches Deramore Biddy won with ease from a nicish puppy in Brickbat Brickie. Milton Droleen, third, was quite out of coat. Peggy Rhue, reserve, has a fairish body and legs and feet, but is thick in shoulder. Briggs' Best won in puppies, with Milton Droleen second; and in the novice class Bryan O'K and Briggs' Best were placed as in the open class, Deramore Biddy getting the reserve card.

BLACK AND TANS.—(Mr. James Taylor, judge.) The challenge dog class saw Broomfield Sultan a winner, with Glenwood second; and in the corresponding class for bitches Champion Meersbrook Maiden and Gypsy Girl accounted for the money. Open dogs were not a very wonderful lot. Chicago Spider won well enough from Rochelle Rush, who is a bit long in body. Sully, third, has fair bone and style, but his cropped ears are badly carried. Rochelle Master, reserve, is an August puppy. In open bitches Surrey Gem, a very richly marked little bitch, won from Gypsy Queen, whose markings are not so well defined. Chicago Maiden is a low-set one, and Canada Queen was shown very fat.

WHITE ENGLISH TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) These were by no means a good lot, and the best terriers were shown in such poor condition that they were beaten.

DANDIE DINMONT TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) Amphion was placed over King o' the Heather, second, and Ainstey Daisy, reserve. These are well known. Rhoderick Dhu, a very good puppy with lots of bone, won in open dogs from Punch, a nice headed dog but light in bone. Heather Deacon, the puppy that won at the terrier show, was quite lame. The winning bitch, Lothian Judy, is a very nice one and won easily. Heather Daffodil is a bit short in body but very low to the ground, and in this beat Heather Darling, placed third.

BEDLINGTON TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor, judge.) Mount Vernon Tibble won in the challenge class; best in head, shape and carriage of ear, and set of eyes. Qui Vive, second, carries his stern too gayly and has thickened a bit all over. In open class Postmaster has a very bad stern and is too full in eye. Financier is not as good in head as the winner, Professor, who is far removed from high-class form.

JAS. MORTIMER.

[Unfortunately the balance of the report—dealing with Skye, Scottish and Yorkshire terriers, pugs, schipperkes, Italian greyhounds, toy spaniels, and the miscellaneous class—has not come to hand at the time of going to press.—ED.]

CLUB MEETINGS

The American Kennel Club

The annual meeting of the American Kennel Club was held at Madison Square Garden February 22, Vice-President Thomas H. Terry presiding. Present: Associate member, Dr. H. T. Foote; American Mastiff Club, George G. Stephenson; Duquesne Kennel Club, J. Morehead; English Setter Club, Wilson Fiske; Massachusetts Kennel Club, Robert Leslie; Mascoutah Kennel Club, C. F. R. Drake; National Beagle Club, H. F. Schellhass; New England Kennel Club, Edward Brooks; Northwestern Beagle Club, Frederick S. Webster; Omaha Kennel Club, Dr. M. H. Cryer; Pacific Kennel Club, James Mortimer; Southern California Kennel Club, James Watson; New Jersey Kennel League, E. H. Morris.

The secretary read the minutes of the last annual meeting, which, on motion, were accepted and placed on file.

Credentials were then read of the following named gentlemen to represent the following-named clubs: St. Louis Kennel Club, C. A. Pratt; Brunswick Fur Club, O. F. Joslin; Boston Terrier Club, L. A. Burritt; Columbus Fanciers' Club, Maj. J. M. Taylor; Washington City Kennel Club, Joseph H. Hunter; Westminster Kennel Club, Thomas H. Terry; Danbury Agricultural Society, J. E. Sears.

Secretary Vredenburgh then read his annual report, which, on motion, was accepted and placed on file, and is as follows:

NEW YORK, February 21, 1895.

TO THE OFFICERS AND DELEGATES OF THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB:

Gentlemen:—I herewith submit my annual report for the year which ends to-day. The effects of the hard times and the general stagnation of business have been very appreciable in kennel club affairs. In every department the falling off of our income is marked, but fortunately we carried over from the previous year a sufficient accumulation to enable us to meet our current expenses, and also to diminish our bill for legal expenses to an amount of four hundred and seventy-two dollars, the sum of three hundred dollars having been paid since my annual financial statement as published in the Gazette of January, 1895. This leaves an unpaid balance on that account of thirteen hundred and seventy-eight dollars. We practically can pay this balance in installments, and at our convenience. We have no other liabilities except the deposits we have received from clubs claiming show dates and the cost of p[illegible] of the stud book, which will be one [illegible] card index has been paid for, and all [illegible] th No. 1 in Volume 1, up to date have [illegible] the new plan has been found by [illegible] pletely and greatly facilitates the busi[illegible] ment.

[illegible] during the year (the annual meeting of February 22, 1894), at which eighteen delegates were present. The executive committee held its four stated meetings, the average attendance being fifteen delegates present. The advisory committee held three meetings, at which it investigated and acted upon twelve cases submitted to it. Our active membership consists of 45 clubs, with applications from 2 now pending. We have lost during the year by resignation 9 clubs.

Our list of associate members consists of 204, with applications from 2 now pending. We have lost by resignation 13, by death 1, dropped for non-payment of dues 50, while 42 were admitted. Our relations with the Canadian Kennel Club remain unchanged. The agreement ratified by this club one year ago to-day has not yet been officially reported upon by the Canadian Kennel Club, and at the meeting of our executive committee of December 6, 1894, a resolution was adopted granting said club ninety days within which some action must be had on the agreement pending. The time thus granted will expire March 6, 1895, and definite instructions should be officially given to your secretary at this meeting on the subject. While on this subject, your secretary would recommend a ratification by the club of the action of the executive committee at its meeting on May 18, 1893, at which time the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, that the compact between this club and the Canadian Kennel Club be hereby discontinued." It is claimed that the original agreement was entered into by the club, and was discontinued by its executive committee, and therefore the annulment was illegal. Under the resolution above quoted your secretary has refused to recognize the awards made at Canadian shows held subsequent to the date of said resolution, and would therefore ask that a resolution of ratification of the act of your executive committee be passed at this annual meeting, which will remove all doubt in the matter.

Your secretary would urge upon every delegate having an interest in the success and well being of his club to work in its behalf in its behalf in such a way as to increase its revenues. The cost of carrying on the work is necessarily large, and although it is managed as economically as is possibly consistent with good service, yet the income has fallen far below the average of former years, in the years 1893 and 1894. Undoubtedly this loss has been occasioned by a general retrenchment on the part of all who have suffered in the widely felt depression of the business of the country, yet with a little personal work by each delegate, our business will soon reach the normal again. The club celebrated its tenth anniversary on September 17 last, and it is hoped that the occasion was an enjoyable one to all who participated. May the completion of its second decade be as successful is the fervent wish of your secretary. The following comparative tables have been compiled by your secretary at no little labor, and he trusts they may be of interest to you, and that the financial one may point out the way in which you aid the club with which so many of you have been so long identified.

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT FOR SIX YEARS OF AMERICAN SHOWS

The above table is not absolutely accurate, for the reason that several of the clubs in making their reports failed to state the actual number of entries and absentees at their shows, yet it practically serves the purposes of this report.

A. P. VREDENBURGH, Secretary

The treasurer presented his report, which, he stated, had been published in the January number of the Gazette.

Mr. Schellhass: I move that the same be accepted as published in the American Kennel Gazette. Motion seconded and carried.

Mr. Vredenburgh: I will now read the certificate of election of associate members.

NEW YORK, February 6, 1895.

TO THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB:

This is to certify that we, the undersigned, representing the President of the American Kennel Club and the President of the associate members, met this day at the office of the American Kennel Club, for the purpose of opening and canvassing the votes received by the Secretary for officers and delegates of the associate members. The total number of votes cast was 55; the number of votes rejected on account of irregularity, 1.

We, therefore, declare the result as follows: President, H. B. Cromwell; vice-president, Edward Brooks; secretary, A. Clinton Wilmerding; delegate 1, H. T. Foote; delegate 2, H. H. Hunnewell Jr.; delegate 3, A. Clinton Wilmerding.

Signed, A. D. LEWIS,
Representing August Belmont, Prest. A. K. C.
C. F. R. DRAKE,
Representing H. B. Cromwell, Prest. Asso. Mem.

Attested, A. P. VREDENBURG, Secy. A. K. C.

Mr. Vredenburgh: I desire to state to the delegates that I wrote a letter to Mr. Belmont stating that I had met, during the past month, quite a number of the delegates of this club concerning the election of officers of the club, and that the expression of opinion on the part of the delegates was unanimous in the desire that Mr. Belmont should serve the club for another term as president. I asked him in this letter to advise me whether he would or would not act as such. Mr. Belmont was in Albany yesterday, before the racing bill committee, and was unable to receive my letter until last night. He has just had an interview over the telephone with Mr. Terry, in which said that he desired it distinctly understood that he cannot give time to any personal work for the kennel club, and that he desired the delegates to distinctly understand that, such being the case, if they desired to re-elect him, he would serve; otherwise, if they desired a president who could devote his time to the club, that it was his desire that some other man should be elected. I desire to make this statement in justice to yourselves and Mr. Belmont.

Mr. Schellhass: I desire to say that we are a great deal better off with Mr. Belmont, as president, out of the chair—that is to say, in the chair occasionally, at such times as he can be here—than we would be with any other man whom we have with us and who would be in a position to occupy the chair a great part of the time; and I will tell you why. The American Kennel Club is not very well known in a great many parts of the country, and I have myself felt that we had a great deal of strength in the fact that we had Mr. Belmont as president, in the simple use of his name. A great many people who are interested in dogs, or who are liable to be interested in dogs, would become more interested if they knew that the American Kennel Club was an organization of standing. Everybody in the country knows Mr. Belmont. They know Mr. Belmont where they would not know any of the rest of us, and, as I said before, Mr. Belmont's name carries a great guarantee with it, and is worth a great deal to us, and for that reason I am very strongly in favor of Mr. Belmont as president. He occupies the chair very often, and for that reason I want to propose his name as president of this club.

Mr. Watson: I desire to second the motion, and to say that it is not only as presiding officer of the American Kennel Club that I desire Mr. Belmont to serve, but in his position as a member of the advisory committee. His judgment in all cases that have come before him has been unexceptionally sound, and I think we would miss a good deal if we did not have him as a member of the advisory committee.

Mr. Terry: Are there any other nominations for president?

Mr Webster: I move that the nominations be now closed. Motion seconded and carried.

It was moved that the secretary cast a ballot for Mr. Belmont as president of the American Kennel Club. Motion seconded and unanimously carried.

The Secretary: I have cast a ballot for Mr. August Belmont as president of this club, as directed, and I declare him to be elected as president of this club.

Mr. Webster: I desire to nominate as vice-president of the American Kennel Club our present vice-president, Mr. Thomas H. Terry.

On motion the nominations were closed.

On motion the secretary was directed to cast a ballot for Mr. Thomas H. Terry as vice-president of the American Kennel Club.

The Secretary: I have cast a ballot for Mr. Terry as vice president of this club.

Mr. Vredenburgh: There are two members of the advisory committee to be elected, in place of Mr. Edward Brooks and Maj. J. M. Taylor.

Mr. Leslie: I nominate Mr. Brooks as a member of the advisory committee.

Dr. Foote: I do not see how we can improve much on the names as they now stand.

Mr. Vredenburgh: I received a letter from Major Taylor yesterday, who was quite ill, in which he said if it was possible for him to be relieved of the duties of the advisory committee he would be very glad, because he is called away so much that he does not feel that he can do the office justice.

On motion of Mr. Schellhass nominations for members of the advisory committee were closed.

It was moved and seconded that the secretary cast a ballot for Messrs. Brooks and Taylor for members of the advissory committee for the ensuing year. Carried.

The secretary stated that he had cast such a ballot, and the chair declared the gentleman named duly elected.

Mr. Vredenburgh: There are three members of the stud book committee to be elected. The present committee consists of Messrs. Watson, Cryer and Fiske.

Dr. Foote: I do not think it advisable to make any changes in the stud book committee. The members of that committee hold positions which require a great deal of experience and I think the same members should serve as that committee for the next year. I move that the committee, as now constituted, be reëlected.

Dr. Cryer: I desire to state that I am now in Philadelphia and Mr Watson is in New York, and under the circumstances I am of very little service to that committee, and I think it is to the interests of the club that I withdraw from that committee; and for the further reason that I am not at present taking the interest in dogs that I have been taking. And, as it requires someone who is constantly reading the papers and watching dogs to properly serve on that committee, I feel that it is my duty to decline to serve, on the ground, as I stated, that it is to the interests of the club that I should withdraw.

Mr. Webster: In view of the withdrawal of Dr. Cryer from that committee, and as it is absolutely necessary that that committee should be as well equipped with men of experience as possible, I nominate Mr. H. F. Schellhass instead of Dr. Cryer. Motion seconded and carried.

Dr. Foote: I nominate Messrs. Fiske and Watson as the other two members of the stud book committee.

Mr. Webster: I move that the secretary be instructed to cast a ballot for Mr. Watson and Mr. Fiske and Mr. Schellhass as members of the stud book committee. Motion seconded and carried.

The Secretary: I have cast a ballot for the gentlemen named for members of the stud book committee.

Mr. Terry: And the Chair declares them duly elected.

Mr. Vredenburgh: There is yet to be elected a committee on field trial and coursing meetings. The present committee consists of Messrs. James M. Taylor, L. C. Whiton, Frederic S. Webster, William C. Baylles and H. F. Schellhass.

Mr. Morris: I move that the same committee be reelected, and that the nominations for members of such committee be closed. Seconded and carried.

Mr. Terry: It is moved and seconded that the secretary cast a ballot for the reëlection of the committee as named. Motion carried.

The Secretary: I have cast a ballot for the gentlemen named, as directed by the motion.

Mr. Terry: The Chair declares them duly elected.

Mr. Vredenburg: There is also to be elected at this meeting a committee on constitution and rules. The present committee consists of Messrs Watson, Schellhass, Webster, Foote and Vredenburg.

Moved and seconded that the committee, as at present constituted, be reëlected. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the secretary cast a ballot for the reëlection of the committee as named. Carried.

The Secretary: As directed, I have cast a ballot for the committee on constitution and rules as named.

Mr. Terry: And the Chair declares them elected.

At this point Mr. Terry resigned the chair to Mr. Edward Brooks.

Mr. Vredenburgh: Under the head of general business I suppose the matter of the Canadian Kennel Club properly comes up, although it was acted upon by the executive committee at the last meeting. The executive committee ordered that they must take action within ninety days after that meeting.

Dr. Foote: Was it not the intention of that motion to limit the time to this meeting?

Mr. Vredenburgh: The time does not expire until the sixth day of March, but I think it was the intention to extend it until this meeting.

The secretary then read the communication of the Canadian Kennel Club, which is as follows:

TORONTO, February 2, 1895.

A. P. VREDENBURGH, ESQ., Secy. Am. Kennel Club, New York.

Dear Sir:—The following motion was passed at the executive meeting held yesterday re A. K. C.: "That this club will be willing to recognize an agreement on the basis of a mutual recognition of wins and disqualifications, the wins at shows held under C. K. C.

rules to be published in the A. K. C. Stud Book. All dogs exhibited from Canada in the United States to be listed or registered with the A. K. C. All dogs from the United States shown in Canada to be listed or registered with C. K. C. prize winners; in either case where qualified must be registered with the club under whose auspices the show is held. Messrs. T. G. Davey, R. McEwen and T. S. Wetherall were appointed a committee to confer with the American Kennel Club. If further information is necessary please advise me.

Yours truly,

H. B. DONOVAN,
Secy.-Treas. C. K. C.

Mr. Vredenburgh: I have just held an interview with Mr. Davey, who, I believe, is the only one of that club present, and he handed me a letter which was written by Dr. Niven, president of the Canadian Kennel Club, to Mr. McEwen, who is not present. Mr. Donovan, the secretary of the Canadian Kennel Club, has sent an official communication to the American Kennel Club in the way of a corrected proof, which is to be published in the American Kennel Gazette.

Dr. Foote: If I understand that properly, that brings us back to nearly the same position in which we were before, when we broke all relations with the Canadian Kennel Club, with possibly a very slight exception. The principal object we had in the appointing of a committee a year or more ago to meet their committee was to make arrangements for the establishment of a single stud book, and it seems to me that the agreement between those committees was most favorable to both clubs, and I am certainly opposed to any agreement which will leave two stud books. If we cannot come to an agreement which will leave but one stud book I think we might just as well stay where we are, and if a motion is in order I will move that the proposition on the part of the Canadian Kennel Club be not accepted; and, if the previous agreement is not accepted by the Canadian Kennel Club before March 6, that we break off all relations in the matter.

Mr. Vredenburgh; Don't you think it would be better to leave it to the committee which was appointed by this club, and let that committee report at the next meeting?

Dr. Foote: My only objection to that is that we acted upon this matter a year ago. The Canadian Kennel Club did absolutely nothing until last September. Their first act was derogatory to the arrangement made, and since then I do not think they have accomplished anything, except to make a proposition to us which virtually places us in the same relation which we severed three years ago; and at the last meeting we gave them ninety days in which to accept the arrangement, and I should like to have some action taken which will terminate the matter when the ninety days expire. They seem to think we have everything to lose, and we seem to think they have everything to lose, and we might just as well find out now who will be the loser by breaking off any relations which have heretofore existed between the two clubs.

Mr. Watson: Your motion is to put a stop to the thing?

Dr. Foote: Yes, when the ninety days expire.

Mr. Watson: That will put us in the position that we recognize nothing done by them. At the time that old contract was wiped out, we refused to acknowledge their disqualifications, and I think that was a great mistake. I quite agree with Dr. Foote about the stud book. They have no stud book, and the fact of their registering or listing anything is nothing at all, because we have no opportunity of ascertaining the particulars. I do advocate our recognition of their disqualifications. We do not want the Canadian club to send their disqualified men to show with us, nor would we want our disqualified men to show with them.

Dr. Foote: Can we not by special act recognize their disqualifications, and if they wish to do that with us they may?

Mr. Brooks: We have that agreement with them now.

Mr. Vredenburgh: I think it would be right, as I recommend, to pass a resolution ratifying the action of the executive committee of May, 1893.

Dr. Foote: I move that the action of the executive committee of May, 1893, relative to our relation with the Canadian Kennel Club be ratified by this meeting. Motion seconded and carried.

Dr. Foote: Now I move their present communication be tabled, and that we abide by the motion of the December meeting relative to the old agreement accepted by us at our last February meeting.

Mr. Watson: I cannot see the use of that, because we have no agreement. We are not wiping out anything by our motion.

Dr. Foote: The word "agreement" is perhaps improper there. I should have said, and I desire it embodied in my motion, that the "report" of the committees be accepted.

Mr. Watson: I move that the matter be referred to the committee with instructions to accept a mutual agreement as to disqualifications.

Dr. Foote: We can take special action, recognizing their disqualifications, and they can do the same if they wish.

Mr. Watson: I agree to that. I make a motion that the American Kennel Club recognize the disqualifications of the Canadian Kennel Club under a mutual agreement.

Dr. Foote: I will second that motion after my motion has been acted upon.

Mr. Watson: But if it was referred to us as a committee we would then have to come back again and report to you and ask you to give us definite instructions whether or not to close with them.

Mr. Morehead: Why not leave it to the committee with power to act?

Mr. Brooks: That is practically the motion, that this committee should make an agreement with the Canadian Kennel Club with regard to disqualifications.

Dr. Foote: In the first place, have not we got to take some action upon this proposal made to us by the Canadian Kennel Club?

Mr. Watson: My motion was that the communication be left to the committee that is still in existence, with instructions to make an agreement with regard to disqualifications.

Mr. Vredenburg: I think Dr. Foote's idea is this: We have a communication here from the Canadian Kennel Club which requires action in some way. His idea is to receive that communication and lay it upon the table. That disposes of that. He then branches out into something new and advocates the passage of a resolution by which this club will recognize all suspensions and disqualifications imposed by the Canadian Kennel Club. We end it there. We do not care whether they recognize our disqualifications or not, but we voluntarily will recognize theirs, and all that is necessary to be done by this club is to notify the Canadian Kennel Club that we have not acted upon their letter, but we have passed a resolution by which we recognize their disqualifications.

Dr. Foote: Now I move to lay this communication from the Canadian Kennel Club on the table.

Mr. Webster: It seems to me that that communication from the Canadian Kennel Club is a final one, and you must either accept it or reject it.

Dr. Foote: I will substitute in my motion the word "reject."

Mr. Vredenburgh: Why would it not be well to pass a resolution that this club decides to stand upon the action of its executive committee at its meeting of May, 1893?

Dr. Cryer: I think the day will come when the line between the United States and Canada will be wiped out, and I think it would be well for the American Kennel Club to wipe it out in regard to dog matters. Let us sail under our own colors and under our own rules, and if they care to sail with us under our rules, well and good.

The motion of Dr. Foote, that the proposition contained in the letter from the Canadian Kennel Club be rejected was seconded and carried.

Mr. Watson: I now move that we recognize the suspensions and disqualifications of the Canadian Kennel Club. Motion seconded.

Mr. Schellhass: I would like to move an amendment to Mr. Watson's motion. It is very desirable that we recognize the disqualifications of the Canadian Kennel Club. On the same principle, if we disqualify a man we want to prohibit that man from showing as much as we can. For that reason I would like to move as an amendment that the Canadian Kennel Club be conferred with, say, by the committee already appointed to confer with it, and that it be suggested to them that disqualifications be mutually agreed upon, such committee being given power to act.

Mr. Morris: I second that motion.

Mr. Watson: I accept that amendment.

Motion, as amended, carried.

Mr. Vredenburgh: The committee on constitution and rules gives notice of the following proposed amendment: "In the event of any persons or club, not a member of the American Kennel Club, holding a show at which the entry of any person not eligible to make entries at American Kennel Club shows is accepted or who may be permitted to show dogs or act as agent for any other exhibitor, and officiate in any capacity at the show, every person officially connected with such show shall at once be suspended by order of the president and deprived of all privileges of the American Kennel Club, pending the holding of the next meeting of the executive or advisory committees, at which meeting the commttee must either remove the suspension or impose a penalty of disqualification for such period as they may decide upon."

Mr. Morris: I object to that resolution being passed. I claim that it is outside the jurisdiction of this club to interfere in such manner. I think it will seriously interfere with country shows. Any such resolution will be injurious to the dog interests of America. I move that it be not embodied in the American Kennel Club's rules.

Motion seconded, and a call of the ayes and nays on the motion to adopt the proposed rule, as read, resulted in the following vote:

Ayes: Messrs. Foote. Joslin, Morehead, Fiske, Schellhass, Brooks, Webster and Watson. Nays: Messrs. Stephenson, Morris, Mortimer and Sears.

Mr. Vredenburgh: I call the attention of the delegates also to the proposed amendment, Section 2, Regulation XIII: "The secretary of every show must forward to the secretary of the American Kennel Club a duly certified copy of the judge's awards, within seven days of the closing of each show."

Dr. Cryer: I move its adoption. Seconded and carried.

The annual meeting then adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING

A meeting of the executive committee was then held, Mr. Edward Brooks presiding. Present: Associate member, Dr. H. T. Foote; Mastiff Kennel Club, George G. Stephenson; Brunswick Fur Club, O. F. Joslin; Danbury Agricultural Society, George E. Sears; Duquesne Kennel Club, J. Morehead; New England Kennel Club, Edward Brooks; New Jersey Kennel League, E. H. Morris; Northwestern Beagle Club, F. S. Webster; Pacific Kennel Club, James Mortimer; Southern California Kennel Club, James Watson; Westminster Kennel Club, Thomas H. Terry; St. Louis Kennel Club, C. A. Pratt; Omaha Kennel Club, Dr. M. H. Cryer; Boston Terrier Club, L. A. Burritt.

The minutes of the last executive committee meeting were read and, on motion, approved.

The secretary read his report to the executive committee of the American Kennel Club, which, on motion, was adopted and placed on file, and is as follows:

NEW YORK, February 21, 1895.

TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB.

Gentlemen:—I have the honor to report the following applications for admission to membership:

December 3, 1894, English Bloodhound Club of America, Bostou, Mass.

February 9, 1895, Wilmingtou Kennel Club, Wilmington, Del.

These clubs have complied with all of our requirements and are eligible to membership.

The followiug resignations have been received:

December 31, 1894, Saratoga Poultry aud Kenuel Club.

January 1, 1895, Western Michigan Kennel Club.

These clubs were in good standing at the time of mailing their resignations, and I would recommeud tbe acceptance of the same.

Credentials have been filed by the following clubs:

January 15, 1895, Thomas H. Terry, Westminster Kennel Club.

Jauuary 15, 1895, O. F. Joslin, Bruuswick Fur Club.

January 31, 1895, John Morehead Jr., Duquesne Kennel Club.

February 8, 1895, C. A. Pratt, St. Louis Kennel Club.

February 18, 1895, Geo. E. Sears, Danbury Agricultural Soelety.

The following claims for prefixes have been duly filed:

January 21, 1895, "Bedford," by James B. Blossom.

Jauuary 21, 1895, "Ballywyuu," by A. M. Young.

These claims do not conflict with any prefixes so far recorded, and I would recommend that the same be allowed.

I beg to report that under date of February 28, 1891, Mr. William A. Bruette was duly suspended for misconduct in conuectiou with dogs, having failed to pay W. E. Sandars of Tamworth, England, for two Welsh terriers. Said suspension was to remain until the debt should be paid. Mr. Sandars advises me, nuder date of February 4, 1895, that he compromised his claim for one-half of the original amount, and acknowledges the receipt of that sum, which he accepts in full liquidation of his claim. Bruette now prays that tbe penalty of suspensiou be removed. I beg to say in conuection with this case, that Bruette advertised quite exteusively in the American Kennel Gazette during the year 1889, and several times ameuded his advertisement, each time costing the club extra money for such alterations. I have repeatedly seut bills for the amount he contracted to pay, amounting to $20, but beyond pro[illegible] uever received anything from him. He claim[illegible] interest in his kennels to a man by the name of [illegible] sumed the debts of the kennels. We have neve[illegible] on this subject. It is a question in my mind [illegible] claim against Miuer, and am quite certai[illegible] claim against Bruette.

This club on October 27, 1893, upon the re[illegible] stud book committee, disqualified Thomas [illegible] giving a false pedigree to a fox terrier [illegible] Potter uow appeals for a removal of the [illegible], and is also backed in his appeal by Miss Clark, who says she evidently was mistaken when makiug her charge, and requests the removal of the penalty.

I will submit certain correspondeuce in the matter of a ruling requested by the American Spaniel Club, which could not well be given until acted upon by that club, and as it is important to establish a precedent you will be called upon at this meeting to take action in the premises.

I will also submit a letter from the Pacific Kennel Club, inclosing a copy of resolutious passed by said club. The matters referred to are of vital importance and should be promptly met by this body.

A claim by Platt Bros. of Des Moines, Iowa, against the Des Moines Kennel Club for an unpaid special prize of five dollars has beeu filed. The letters will be submitted to you.

The lease has been signed for the uew offices at No 55 Liberty Street, aud I would request that I be authorized to expend the necessary amount to cover moving expenses.

Respectfully submitted.

A. P. VREDENBURGH, Secretary.

The treasurer's report was read and is as follows:

NEW YORK, February 20, 1895.

TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB.

Gentlemen:—I herewith beg to submit my quarterly report of all moneys receeived and disbursed by me since January 1, 1895.

Balance on hand, January 1, 1895	$2,003.94
Receipts from all sources to date	1,518.50
	$3,522.44
Disbursements from January 1, 1895	774.81
Balance on hand	$2,747.63

I also report the following clubs as being in arrears for the annual dues for 1895: Rhode Island State Fair Association, Rhode Island Poultry Association, Great Daue Club of America, National Beagle Club, Georgia Poultry aud Pet Stock Association, Southern California Kennel Club, American Pet Dog Club, National Greyhound Club, English Setter Club, Louisville Kennel Club.

On motion the same was accepted and placed on file.

The report of the stud book committee was also read, and on motion accepted and placed on file. The same is as follows:

NEW YORK, February 22, 1895.

TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB.

Gentlemen:—The stud book committee submits the followiug report on cases submitted to it for action:

Bloodhound pedigrees—Romp (32557) and Frula (33556). These are undoubtedly fraudulent and manufactured pedigrees. The dogs were registered by Dr. W. T. C. Werntz, of Lancaster Avenue, Philadelphia, who has failed so far to give a satisfactory explanation of how he obtained the pedigrees. The usual course of suspension uutil he sees fit to give the required information is recommended.

Dr. A. L Spanogle, of Altoona, and pedigrees of beagles. This case was submitted through the Beagle Club's pedigree committee. Dr. Spanogle sold a beagle uamed Monkey Boy to Mr. T. W. Martiu of New York, and on investigatiou it was found that stud book numbers were given to ancestors which had never been registered. Mr. Martin failed to get the explanation he required, and the stud book committee wrote for the desired information. A reply was received which contradicted previous letters to Mr. Martiu in so many particulars that another letter (February 9) was sent, in which those conflicting statements were set forth and an explanation asked for. To this Dr. Spanogle sent answer (February 12) that he had already given all the explanation he would submit, and declined to notice any further communications. A case of a similar nature was drawu to the attention of the stud book committee, and it would therefore appear that this is not unusual with Dr. Spanogle, and his permanent disqualification is therefore recommended.

The Boston Terrier Club. The Boston Terrier Club has submitted a proposition that no pedigree be admitted which has more than one first cross from a bulldog or English terrier iu the third generation. This removes any ground for objection to a continuance of the registration of Bostou terriers, and the committee recommends its acceptance.

JAS. WATSON,
Chairman Stud Book Committee.

Mr. Vredenburgh also read the report of the auditing committee, as follows:

106 E. 23RD STREET, NEW YORK, February 14, 1895.

MR. A. P. VREDENBURGH, Secretary Americau Kennel Club.

Dear Sir:—The Auditing Committee desires to state that it has examined the accounts of the American Kennel Club for the year 1894, aud found them correct.

In connection with the indorsement of the same, it found that the bills were not indorsed by two members of the advisory committee, as provided for by the resolution of the American Kennel Club at the annual meeting of 1893.

At the time the members of the present committee audited the accounts of 1894, they were not aware of the existence of this rule, hence the accounts were checked as found.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully,

FREDERIC S. WEBSTER,
HERMAN F. SCHELLHASS,
JAS. WATSON.

On motion the same was accepted and placed on file.

Nominations for the offices of secretary and treasurer being now in order, Dr. Cryer nominated Mr. A. P. Vredenburgh for that office.

Dr. Foote: I second the nomination, and in doing so I desire to make the statement that the affairs of our club have been in such a satisfactory condition during the administration of Mr. Vredenburg for so many years that I do not think it would be advisable in any way to change the working force.

On motion the Chair was directed to cast a ballot for Mr. Vredenburgh for the position of secretary and treasurer of the American Kennel Club, which was done.

The applications of the English Bloodhound Club of America and the Wilmington Kennel Club were read, and on motion they were elected as members of the American Kennel Club.

The resignations of the Saratoga Poultry and Kennel Club and the Western Michigan Kennel Club were read, and, on motion, accepted.

On motion the following prefixes were granted: To James B. Blossom, the prefix "Bedford;" to A. M. Young, the prefix "Ballywynn;" to S. J. Bradbury, the prefix "Drayton." The application by Mr. G. W. H. Ritchie for the prefixes "Mr." and "Mrs." was, on motion, refused.

In the matter of the appeal of Mr. Bruette for rein[illegible] statement to membership, Mr. Schellhass stated as follows: I desire to state that I regret that, according to the resolution of this club, it is obligatory on our part to reinstate Mr. Bruette. I desire to go on record in this matter, for the reason that I think it is just as well to let Mr. Bruette and this class of men and the public know that it is not the sense of the members of the American Kennel Club that these men should go around when it pays them in dollars and [illegible] to be honest, and when it is not to their interest [illegible] honest to work irreparable injury to the public, [illegible] the club of which they are members. I think it [illegible] misfortune of this club that the resolution was fram[illegible] such a way as that we are compelled to reinstate [illegible] men. Some men will cheat or swindle somebody or steal from someone, as the case may be. Two or three years afterward, if they can make a dollar by repairing the wrong which they have done, and if they can force their clubs to compromise with them, then they think they may be reinstated and desire to be railroaded [illegible] I think it is a great mistake for us to disqualify a man for such a way that makes it compulsory on our [illegible] whenever they are ready to come [illegible] it, this man Bruette wants to accept some position with the Mascoutah Kennel Club. It probably pays him in dollars and cents to settle with this Mr. Sandars. He comes around and wants to be railroaded into the club. He states that he has rectified the wrong that he has done and wants to be reinstated. It is my opinion, and I think it is the opinion of the majority of the members of this club, that it is very poor taste on the part of the Mascoutah Kennel Club, or any other kennel club that is part and parcel of the American Kennel Club, to take up with such a man as he. I move that if it is compulsory on us to reinstate him he be reinstated.

In the matter of the appeal of Thomas Potter, for removal of suspension, for misconduct in relation to dogs, Mr. Morris moved that he be reinstated. Motion seconded and carried.

In the matter of the request contained in the communication to the American Kennel Club, from the American Spaniel Club, Mr. Schellhass moved that it is the sense of the American Kennel Club that the ownership of the cup referred to stands vested in the American Spaniel Club, and that, whereas Mr. Bell is not the owner of that cup, under the circumstances it is perfectly proper that the American Kennel Club should sanction further competition for it. Motion seconded and carried.

Mr. Vredenburgh: At the September meeting I was directed to prefer charges against George Bell. Charges were made and sent to Mr. Bell. and he was requested to put in his answer. The answer was received in due time, and it was one of the most scurrilous answers that I have ever read, or that could be couched in the English language. It villified everybody in the American Kennel Club that had the power of trying Mr. Bell. He called them all sorts of names, and this matter was referred to the advisory committee. The committee very promptly disqualified Mr. Bell permanently. He now sends us an appeal, and the funny part of it, to me, is that the name of a particular friend of mine is drawn into the matter. I will read you his communication, which is as follows:

TORONTO, February 19, 1895.

TO THE EXECUTIVE AND ADVISORY COMMITTEES OF THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB.

Gentlemen:—I hereby respectfully solicit my relief from the disqualification imposed on me by your body, and in so doing wish to apologize for everything in my letter, in answer to the charges of your club, dated October 5, 1894, that is offensive to you, begging your pardon for my wrongful act in so doing. Such parts of that letter as are strictly a defense against the charges formulated against me before you I wish to renew, but to withdraw all offensive portions.

As a partial excuse for my addressing you in the terms I did, I wish to state that in so doing I acted under the advice of Mr. W. Wade, of Hulton, Pa., of whom I took counsel in the matter, and that I bitterly regret having acted on such unwise advice.

Yours respectfully, G. BELL.

Dr. Foote: I move that the letter be referred to the advisory committee. Motion seconded and carried.

On motion the charges preferred by Messrs. Platt Bros. against the Des Moines Kennel Club were referred to the advisory committee.

The secretary read the following resolutions adopted by the Pacific Kennel Club:

TO THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB, New York, N. Y.

Whereas, the American Kenuel Club was organized for the purpose of fostering the general interest in dogs throughout the United States; and

Whereas, a very large portion of the dog men of the Pacific Coast are members (through their clubs) of said American Kennel Club and are therefore interested in all of its acts and legislation; and

Whereas, the Pacific Kenuel Club was led to join the said American Kenuel Club through the representation and belief that it was a national organization, laboring for the best interests of the dog owners and kennel organizations of the whole country, regardless of location; and that the young and the weak would receive the same consideration and the same fostering care as was accorded to the strongest and most powerful; and

Whereas, the isolation of the Pacific Coast from other populous centers is such as to produce conditions that do not obtain elsewhere, and cannot, with justice, be controlled in all respects by rules that may be just and advisable for other sections, without seriously crippling its best interests; and

Whereas, section one of Rule XV has in the past, does now, and will for many years to come, work an injustice and a positive injury to this and other clubs on the coast, viz., by making it absolutely impossible for an exhibitor to advance his dog beyond that of a challenge class winner; the effect of which is to cool his enthusiasm, and by the realization of the evident injustice wrought by said rule, to cause him to lose his interest in shows and cease to patronize them, therefore be it

Resolved, that the American Kennel Club be, and it is hereby, earnestly requested to so amend Section 1 of Rule XV, so far as it applies to shows held west of the Rocky Mountains. and to dogs, the bona fide property of residents thereof, that three firsts in the challenge class, one of which is won in a show of not less than 300 entries, shall entitle the winner to the title of champion.

Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the said American Kennel Club, requesting that it take immediate action thereon.

Dr. Cryer: I move these resolutions be referred to the committee on rules. Seconded and carried.

On motion, the charges preferred by E. H. Morris against George R. Preston were referred to the advisory committee.

On motion of Mr. Morehead, the secretary was authorized to make the necessary expenditures for the removal of the furniture, etc., of the American Kennel Club to its new headquarters at No. 55 Liberty Street.

The secretary read a communication from the American Mastiff Club, as follows:

NEW YORK, February 21, 1895.

TO THE AMERICAN KENNEL CLUB.

Gentlemen:—We desire through our delegate, Mr. Stephenson, to submit to you the accompanying statement, duly signed by three of our members, reciting the facts in the case of the suit brought against a member of this club for the recovery of a dog.

The recent decision reached in this case in a court of justice is such a manifold miscarriage of justice, that it has become, we think, a matter of the gravest interest to all owners of dogs.

The facts of the case are briefly these: A dog bred by a member of this club, the pedigree duly registered at the hand of the chairman of the committee on pedigrees of the American Mastiff Club; the dog in turn transferred to another member of the club, exhibited at shows held under the rules of the American Kennel Club; the identity of the animal amply secured by depositions and testimony in the courts of law of his successive owners; yet, notwithstanding all this, the ownership of the dog has been denied.

Whereas it is the intention of the American Mastiff Club to secure a reversal of this unjust verdict, we respectfully ask that our action [illegible] ment of the American Kenuel Club.

[illegible] ve that it is the sense of the American [illegible] he dog now in the possession of [illegible] rt Prince, bred by J. L. Winchell, [illegible] l by Charles B. Fraleigh, Herbert Meade and Dr. C. A. Lougest and that the said dog be debarred from competition until restored to the possession and ownership of Dr. Lougest. Motion seconded and carried.

On motion, the recommendation of the stud book committee, that Dr. W. T. S. Werntz of Philadelphia be suspended for giving out fraudulent pedigrees, was adopted, as was also the recommendation of the stud book committee that Dr. A. L. Spanogle be permanently disqualified.

After some discussion, and on motion, the recommendation of the stud book committee concerning the Boston Terrier Club was also adopted.

Dr Oldham presented the following resolution: The American Kennel Club deplores the poisoning of the toy spaniels in the building of the Westminster Kennel Club's show this morning, and earnestly hopes that the culprit be brought to speedy justice.

Mr. Brooks: I move that the matter of licensing such members as the Country Club of Brookline and the Hempstead Farm be referred to the committee on constitution and rules. Motion seconded and carried.

The meeeting then adjourned.

The St. Bernard Club

The minutes of the annual meeting of the St. Bernard Club of America, held Tuesday, February 19, at 8 p. m., at the Westminster Kennel Club's show, New York, are as follows:

Present: Edward Booth, Miss A. G. Chandler, Miss C. A. Goodenow, Mrs. A. Mackenzie-Hughes, W. H. Joeckel Jr., J. F. Lutz, D. Mann, A. L. Martin, C. A. Pratt, Col. J. Ruppert Jr., H. D. Johnson, H. B. Turner and Miss Whitney.

Minutes of the previous meeting were approved as printed.

Miss Whitney reported having examined about 300 pedigrees, sent to the club by the stud book committee of the American Kennel Club for examination and approval, and found evidence of gross carelessness in many of them. Mr. Pratt was appointed to confer with the committee to ascertain what could be done to secure greater accuracy and lighten the labor of examination.

The report of the treasurer showed a balance of $313.30 in the treasury.

Mr. Joeckel stated that the sweepstakes decided upon at the Hempstead Farm show in May, 1894, to be competed for at the show which was expected to be held next May, had received only one entry although blanks had been mailed to all the members. He also reported that Mr. Terry stated that the Hempstead Farm show would not be held in May, but in November during Thanksgiving week.

Mr. Pratt informed the meeting that he had had the pleasure of visiting Mr. Hopf, the first president of the club, during the Summer, and was very much surprised to find that although he had so much to do with designing the club medal he was not the possessor of one. It was thereupon resolved to present a medal to Mr. Hopf and to have inscribed upon it sentiments of esteem and respect in which he is held by members of the club.

The following officers were elected for 1895: President, W. H. Joeckel Jr ; vice-presidents, Miss A. H. Whitney, R. J. Sawyer and Col. J. Ruppert Jr.; treasurer, J. S. Hoyt; governors, W. C. Reick, C. A. Pratt, A. C. Shallenberger, E. H. Moore, H. D. Johnson, K. E. Hopf, C. J. Bausfield, E. Sauerhering and H. B. Turner.

W. H. JOECKEL JR., President.

The Collie Club

The Collie Club of America held its annual meeting at Madison Square Garden on February 20, Mr. Jenkins Van Schaick presiding.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, and the secretary-treasurer delivered his address as follows:

GENTLEMEN:—In presenting this, my seventh annual report, it affords me pleasure to show a net balance of cash on hand of $699.49, a considerable increase as compared with January 1, 1894. With most clubs the past year has been a trying one, but. although it has required some extra work, the financial result, so far as this club is concerned, is, I trust, satisfactory.

More time and attention should be given to developing a greater interest than is at present shown in competing for the various stakes and prizes. There has been a great falling-off in this respect which with proper care might be regained. I feel, however, that it is impossible for me to give the time necessary to carry on this work, and the interest of the club requires that you should select some one to take my place. I cannot omit referring to the interest shown by Mr. John L. Lincoln, one of our executive committee, residing in Chicago; he has obtained, during the past year, three life and five annual members, thus adding one hundred dollars to our income If others would exert themselves in the same line the result would be highly beneficial and enable us to do more effective work.

The Collie Club Trophy was won for the fourth time by Roslyn Wilkes, and the President's Cup by Sefton Hero. at the Westminster Kenuel Club's show of 1894; and the same wins were repeated at the specialty show in May of same year.

Our vice-president, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, has shown his interest in the club by offering some very valuable special prizes, for competition by members, at the Westminster Kenuel Club's show of 1895.

I regret to announce a much smaller number of entries for the sweepstakes of this year than ever before. The object of this club is to stimulate an interest in such matters, and I trust some plan can be devised to accomplish this end.

Mr. Shotwell, the secretary-treasurer, then tendered his resignation, which, after much hesitation and regret, was accepted.

An election of officers for the ensuing year followed. Mr. A. D. Lewis was elected secretary to succeed Mr. J. D. Shotwell, and Mr. Shotwell was elected treasurer. The old board of officers was reëlected, with the exception that Mr. A. D. Lewis will succeed Mr. Charles H. Jackson as a member of the executive committee.

The meeting adjourned.

The Spaniel Club

The annual meeting of the American Spaniel Club was held at Madison Square Garden on February 20, and, in the absence of President A. C. Wilmerding, Dr. S. J. Bradbury presided.

Secretary R. P. Keasbey read a report reviewing the work done by the executive committee during the past year, and Dr. S. J. Bradbury reported a balance on hand of $188.

The following members were duly elected to serve on the executive committee during the ensuing year: Messrs. R. P. Keasbey, E. M. Oldham, James Watson, Marcel A. Viti and S. J. Bradbury.

On motion adjourned.

At the meeting of the executive committee, which followed, Mr. E. M. Oldham was elected president, Mr. R. P. Keasbey secretary and Dr. S. J. Bradbury treasurer.

On motion adjourned.

The annual dinner of the club was held at Zangheri's at 8 p. m. Owing to the late judging at the dog show some of the members who were interested in other breeds and also some of the invited guests were unable to attend, consequently a smaller number than usual sat down to do justice to the fare provided. But, although fewer in number, the quality was all there, and after full justice had been done the menu music and toasts followed in rapid succession. To the toast of the American Spaniel Club Mr. Watson made a capital speech bristling in strong points in favor of the club and the spaniel. Mr. B. F. Miller then delighted the members and their guests with Thomas' Romanza, from Mignon, and to an enthusiastic encore gave "I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby" in a way that brought down the house. Speeches were made by Messrs. S. J. Bradbury on the field spaniel, W. T. Payne on the cocker, Andrew Laidlaw on the Irish water spaniel and Mr. George R. Preston on the Clumber spaniel, the breed he is so fond of. Needless to say, "Uncle Dick" was there in a fairly good "working" mood. And to close the evening's pleasure Mr. H. W. Lacy, responding to the toast of the Press, made a very interesting speech which was loudly applauded. "Friendship" and "Auld Lang Syne" followed.

The Mastiff Club

The annual meeting of the American Mastiff Club was held on February 20 at Madison Square Garden, President Dr. R. H. Derby presiding.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and accepted.

The question of continuing the fund for the maintenance of examinations of pedigrees for the American Kennel Club Stud Book was discussed, and it was resolved that the usual sum be appropriated and the work continued.

The disgraceful miscarriage of justice in the case of Dr. Lougest, whereby he was deprived of his mastiff Beaufort Prince, was taken up and freely discussed, and it was resolved that the delegate of the club attend the American Kennel Club's annual meeting, on February 22, for the purpose of laying before it the full facts in the case, with the view that a sufficient remedy shall be provided for the protection of dog owners.

It was announced that the club is in treaty with an artist for a reproduction of Barye's group of mastiffs pulling down a bear. A picture of this famous work was published in the AMERICAN FIELD, of April 14 last.

As appeals from western clubs have been received by the Mastiff Club, reqresting the selection of a western resident to judge in their section, it was the sense of the club that the list of judges should be extended to cover the whole field.

The board of officers of last year were reëlected.

The Bulldog Club

The annual meeting of the Bulldog Club of America was held on February 19 at Madison Square Garden. The president, Mr. John Mathews, presided.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and accepted. In the absence of the secretary Mr. Winthrop acted as secretary pro tem.

The president's report gave evidence of the prosperity and excellent condition of the club, and the treasurer's report showed the handsome balance of $332.21 on hand.

The question of reducing the membership fee was discussed, and it was resolved that the old fee shall continue in force.

In the case of Mr. Mariner's donation of a special prize of $10, which was competed for at the New York show of 1894, it was decided to refer the matter to the president, with power.

An election for an executive committee for the ensuing year followed, resulting in the election of Messrs. E. K. Austin, E. A. Woodward, J. Mathews, J. H. Congdon Robert D. Winthrop, R. C. Crawford Jr. and C. F. McLean.

It was resolved that the officers of the club for the ensuing year shall be elected by a small vote to be conducted by the executive committee.

A vote of thanks was tendered the officers for their services during the past year, and the meeting adjourned.

The Irish Setter Club

The annual meeting of the Irish Setter Club of America was held at the Madison Square Garden, New York, on Thursday, February 21, 1895, at 4 p. m., Mr. W. L. Washington in the chair. Present, Messrs. W. L. Washington, G. Largran, J. B. Blossom, Dr. G. G. Davis and Geo. H. Thomson, and, by proxy, Ray Tompkins and J. B. McKay.

The reading of the minutes of the previous meeting was dispensed with.

The treasurer's report was read and approved.

It was moved and seconded that a committee of two be appointed by the Chair to revise the constitution and by-laws, which shall be subject to the approval of a majority of the members of the club. Carried, and Dr. G. G. Davis and Geo. H. Thomson were appointed.

The following officers were then elected to serve during the ensuing year: President, Dr. G. G. Davis; vice-president, James B. Blossom; secretary-treasurer, Geo. H. Thomson; executive committee, C. T. Thompson (Philadelphia), F. L. Cheyney (Pittsfield, Mass.), G. Largran (Yonkers, N. Y.), W. L. Washington (Pittsburg, Pa.) and Ray Tompkins (Elmira, N. Y.).

There being no further business the meeting adjourned.

GEO. H. THOMSON, Secy.

The Pointer Club

The Pointer Club of America held its annual meeting at Madison Square Garden on February 21, the president, Hon. John S. Wise, presiding.

The reading of the minutes of the last meeting was dispensed with.

The secretary's report on the work of the year was accepted.

The treasurer's report was read and accepted. The club has a cash balance on hand of $181.47.

Messrs. George J. Gould and George S. Mott were elected to membership.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Mr. Wise having declined a renomination for the presidency, Mr Thomas H. Terry was elected president; Mr. T. G. Davey, vice-president; Mr. F. S. Webster secretary, and C. F. Lewis, treasurer. The following directors were elected: Hon. John S. Wise, George Jarvis, James Mortimer, George W. La Rue, George J. Gould and B. F. Seitner.

George Jarvis was elected delegte to the American Kennel Club.

The meeting adjourned.

The Great Dane Club

The annual meeting of the Great Dane Club of America was held on February 22 at Madison Square Garden, New York, Mr. William Youngs, the vice-president, presiding.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mr. Charles Fisher; vice-president, William Youngs; treasurer, Henry Bord; secretary, Clifford Wood; delegate to the American Kennel Club, Clifford Wood, 59 Wall Street, New York.

There were ten new members added to the roll of membership.

It was decided to request the American Kennel Club to submit to the club's committee on pedigrees all pedigrees offered for registration, thereby to insure correctness.

A meeting of the club will be called in the near future for a conference on the correct standard of the Great Dane, at which all persons interested in this noble dog will be invited to express their views as to what standard shall be adopted.

It was resolved to incorporate the club, and regular meetings will hereafter be held every two months.

The meeting adjourned.

The Eastern Field Trial Club

The annual meeting of the Eastern Field Trial Club was held at Madison Square Garden, on February 21, the President, Mr. P. Lorillard Jr., in the chair. There were also present Messrs. F. R. Hitchcock, Geo. W. Ewing and Washington A. Coster.

Messrs. E. H. Osthaus and F. A. Hodgman were elected to membership.

A general discussion on field trial rules, etc. followed, and it was resolved that the trials shall commence on the third Monday in November, and that the Derby, All-Age and Subscription Stakes are to be run under the same conditions as last year; it was resolved that the Selling Stakes be abolished; and the Members' Stakes hereafter be run as a sweepstakes of ten dollars each, all winners in public all-age stakes to be barred.

The meeting adjourned to convene on the last Tuesday in March, at the office of Mr. F. R. Hitchcock, 67 Wall Street, at 1:30 p. m., and as this meeting will be of vital importance to the members it is hoped that a large attendance will be present.

The Bedlington Terrier Club

The American Bedlington Terrier Club held its first annual meeting on February 20, at Madison Square Garden. The club was organized on January 18 last, and although young is full of the enthusiasm of its youth.

The president, Mr. William Henry Russell, delivered a most interesting address on the object of the club and the progress made in the breeding of this fine little dog, suggesting "Floreat Bedlingtonius" as the club's motto.

The members of the club are most enthusiastic about this breed of dogs and desire that all lovers of the breed should interest themselves sufficiently to become members of the club or communicate with the president or secretary on all matters of interest in connection with the breed.

The election of officers, for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Wm. H. Russell; secretary-treasurer, Thomas Pearsall; executive committee, W. H. Russell, Thomas Pearsall, C. W. Lougest, Martin H. Thelberg and John Hopkinson.

The Gordon Setter Club

The annual meeting of the Gordon Setter Club of America was held at Madison Square Garden on February 20, pursuant to notice; there being present in person or by proxy twelve members.

President Blossom's report of the trials at Assonet last November was approved; as well as that of the secretary-treasurer, Mr. Van Zandt, showing a balance of over $50 in the treasury.

The old officers and executive committee were re-elected.

It was resolved to hold field trials next Autumn, and the president was authorized to take necessary steps therein.

The club is much pleased at the evident improvement in Gordon matters generally.

The Morcy Kennels sold the poodle Tribune to Mr. P. E. Hall of New York.

Mr. J. B. Blossom purchased from the Redstone Kennels the Irish setter bitch Lady Noreen, a good-looking big, strong bitch of good type and color, for the purpose of breeding to his field trial winner Bedford; she is splendidly bred, being by Echo Jr out of Noreen, and should produce good-looking as well as working dogs from Bedford. Mr. Pearsall has sold her, reserving some interest in her breeding.

Mr. L. A. Van Zandt sold the Irish setter dog puppies, Brian and Riley, third and V.H.C., to Mr. Goodman of Philadelphia; and a white English terrier to Mrs. De Pope Wescott, of Oneida, N. Y.

May of Chicago. Wawaset Baron was entered in the novice class at the New York show, but, injuring a foot when jumping out of his crate, did not compete.

GREAT DANE TYPE

Stuttgart, Germany.

Editor American Field:—There has been so much written on the question of Great Dane type in the esteemed American Field that I very much dislike to say another word upon this subject. I am compelled to do so, however, because of a remark made by Mr. Muss-Arnolt in his long article in the American Field of November 24, 1894, wherein he says, among other things, that the judge (meaning me) who was imported in due time by the German Mastiff Club should give preference to bigger, "coarser" dogs. That would be a great mistake and is quite an erroneous apprehension of Mr. Muss-Arnolt's. Hellos has with us received as many and indeed more first prizes and prizes of honor than Hannibal, and if some say that Hellos is perhaps too heavy, others take Hannibal as too light, and they have also found the head of the latter perhaps more fit for a female than a male.

To dispute about such things, however, leads to nothing, because they are mere matters of taste. But as Mr. Muss-Arnolt has never seen our exhibitions I would be greatly pleased if some one of your kennel clubs would send him over to us, so that he could be enlightened on some points, of which he now has but a meager knowledge. Then we could for instance demonstrate what a great mistake it is to combine all complexions of our dogs into one class, as the dogs of different colors show also a certain difference in type, which was distinctly noticed at the last exhibition in Berlin, where I was also judge.

The judge will only be able to give satisfaction by his judgment when the different colors are separated, which theory I most distinctly maintained at the exhibition in Chicago in 1890, and if the Great Dane Club would only make the experiment they would without doubt at once be convinced of the correctness of the theory.

I do not intend to carry this discussion any further with Mr. Muss-Arnolt.

NOTES

Entries for the Mascoutah Kennel Club's annual dog show number 886; a very respectable total, though not quite up to the club's best effort. This is the club's sixth show and previous years' figures show that a good beginning was made in 1889 with an entry of 555, which was increased in 1890 to 650; the following year the figures jumped up to 822, and this total was topped in in 1892 with 894. In 1893, it will be remembered, the club did not hold a show, which brought into existence the Chicago Kennel Club with two shows that year, in February and December, the entries being 535 and 466 respectively. Last year the Mascoutah Kennel Club only succeeded in drawing 685 entries, in spite of a very liberal premium list, and as the class prizes this year do not compare with those of last the increased entry must be credited to the number of "local" specials. The entry list given below is worth comparing with the New York list recently published for the reason that it demonstrates the popularity in the central and western states of a few breeds that were not represented in quantity at New York last week—for instance, the Chicago entries include 31 mastiffs, 57 Great Danes and 33 pugs, against 14 mastiffs, 29 Great Danes and 10 pugs at New York—and because it shows how little interest western owners of sporting dogs take in dog shows. The bloodhound has not, a yet, found much support in the territory tributary to the the Chicago show, and the deerhound and the borzoi are quite neglected, but the number of greyhounds, foxhounds, pointers and setters in the central, western and northwestern states is enormous, yet we find only 18 greyhounds and 7 foxhounds entered for the Chicago show, the New York figures being 40 and 15, and but 43 pointers and 100 setters at Chicago against 111 and 236 respectively at New York; there are a good many beagles and spaniels, too, in the Chicago territory, but the combined representation of these breeds is less than half of what it was in the New York catalog. In terriers the Chicago show loses tremendously to the New York show, the figures being 214 and 444, and so it does in poodles, bulldogs, and toy spaniels; in St. Bernards and collies, however, the entries compare very favorably with those of the great eastern show. Owners who have not made entries should do the next best thing, viz., attend the show. The entries are:

Mastiffs	31	Boston terriers	13
St. Bernards	121	Dachshunde	21
Bloodhounds	3	Beagles	29

The sale of the pictures of the late J. M. Tracy took place on the evenings of February 20 and 21 in New York. The first night's sale realized $5,777.50, and the second $5,762.50, a total of $11,540. Although another picture auction took place in the locality, the Tracy sale was largely attended. Dog fanciers were the principal purchasers, the Westminster Kennel Club purchasing two for its rooms. The highest price of the first evening was $425 for "The Lamb Pen." The lowest prices were paid for black-and-whites, dog subjects, which ranged from $20 to $60. Some of the best of the paintings offered were "Jerseys in the Pasture," $310; "Snipe Shooting," $260; the setter "Darkie" sold for $250; "In Full Cry," $235; "Over Hill and Dale," $235; "Duke of Hessen," $195; 'Gladstone," $140; and "Rockingham," $115. The picture of Salvator, the famous racehorse, sold for $110, and "Champion Gloster" brought $75. Seventy pictures were sold on the second evening. "Champion Barnum Retrieving a Wild Goose" realized $425, the highest price of the evening. An excellent scene, "Woodcock Shooting," sold for $350; the pointer "Jessamine" for $315; and "Southern Field Trials" and "Champion Stakes" brought $250 each. Other noted paintings sold were: "On the Scout," $185; "Viscount," $145; and "Lalla Rookh," $115. The large painting "Candidates for the Horse Show" was not sold, a satisfactory bid not being offered.

Brighton Tobe, the Canadian field trial crack, has left Canada for a home in Philadelphia. Tobe has been on the market for the last four months, and at the International trials we heard Mr. George Gould had the refusal of him at a pretty steep figure; however, W. E. Warner, manager of Mr. Gould's kennel, did not close with the offer, and Tobe has now been purchased by Messrs. Chas. H. Phelps and Theo. Sturges, who lately purchased the famous Antonio. Brighton Tobe's performances were mentioned so recently in these columns that it is unnecessary to refer to them now; as Mr. Davey pointed out, Tobe "improved with age," but we are inclined to think it was not so much age as John Armstrong's handling that was responsible for the improvement. Mr. Davey is fortunate in disposing of his well-known setters and pointers at high figures, as just now few dogs are fetching their value, and we expect it will be a good many days yet before he retires, for we notice he has just been appointed on the Canadian Kennel Club's committee on field trial [illegible] has been elected vice-president of the Pointer [illegible] haps he intends to retire, like Madame Patti on the installment plan. Anyhow, until he does give up the game he will be a dangerous competitor, for he has a lot of likely youngsters coming on.

Mr. Shirley Stewart has been having poor luck with his Great Danes. Brenda whelped eleven puppies a week [illegible] with the thermometer seventeen below zero, [illegible] was in a warm kennel the puppies got [illegible] mailing sixteen Danes (young and old) [illegible]ember. However, he had the good [illegible] favorite Don Cæsar Jr a few [illegible] us the following account: "Mr. [illegible]ary of the Canadian Fox Terrier Club, telegraphed me that he had seen Cæsar on the street in Whitby, Ont., and that I would have to go down myself and take out a search warrant to get him. I went down and recovered my dog, and after a little conversation with the party who had him I learned that he had been sold by a man from Toronto to a friend of his, and that he was only keeping the dog for him. Since then Mr. Grery, who supposed he was the lawful owner of my dog, called on me and informed me that he bought the dog at the station in Toronto. I have another bitch due in about a fortnight and I hope my luck will change." We are glad to hear he has got his dog again, and hope he and Mr. Grery, between them, will be able to ferret out the thief that sold Don Cæsar Jr to the latter gentleman.

The cowardly poisoning of eight toy dogs at the New York show will be deplored by all our readers, and one and all will join us in the earnest hope that the inhuman wretch who fed poisoned meat to the little creatures will be caught and punished to the utmost extent of the law. That it was poisoned meat is certified to by Dr. Glover, the veterinarian of the show, who made a post mortem examination of one of the victims and discovered unmistakable signs of strychnine; and it subsequently came to light that it was only by chance that more of Mrs. Senn's dogs were not poisoned, for pieces of meat containing strychnine were found in each of the hampers in which her dogs were. The New York police authorities have taken the matter in hand, and in view of the very liberal rewards offered by the Westminster Kennel Club and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals the detectives are not likely to be lukewarm in their efforts to trace home the crime.

In response to a call issued by a number of prominent breeders and exhibitors a meeting was held February 22 at Madison Square New York, to organize a social club, the name suggested being the Metropolitan Kennel Club, with headquarters in New York. There were twenty-five gentlemen present. The meeting was called to order by Dr. H. T. Foote, who explained the object. The purpose is to establish a purely social club, and a temporary organization was effected. A committee of five was appointed to prepare and issue a circular to be addressed those who are interested and reside in the metropolitan district with a view to securing the names of those who desire to become members. Dr. H. T. Foote was elected temporary chairman, and Mr. E. M. Oldham secretary. Dr. Foote announced that he would name the committee on February 23, and that when a sufficient number of names had been secured a meeting would be held for permanent organization.

Mr. L. F. Perrin, an old and well-known Irish setter breeder from the other side, is visiting this country and is the guest of John Brett, at Spratts' Kennels. He has been for the past three years in British Columbia, where his brother resides. His impression of the Irish setters at the New York show was that they were not up to what they should be. From photographs which he had in his possession and from his conversation in regard to dogs he has shown and handled in trials on the other side he should be competent to judge. It is to be hoped that he can be induced to bring out some of those that he claims to have at present. There is room for more good ones.

In the article on my kennels in your issue of last week, your correspondent quotes me as saying: "Ormonde was the sire of more prize winners than any mastiff ever in America." This is not what I said. My claim is "that at the time of his death he was the sire of more prize winners than any mastiff then in America." This only includes the mastiffs in America at that time while the other statement includes all that were ever in this country, and we all know that Beaufort alone can claim this title, with Ilford Caution a close second.

Peoria, Ill. C. E. Bunn.

Ben Lewis had thirty-six entries in charge at the New York show, and left for Detroit with seven aditional entries for that show. Among those he arranged for at the show were the English setter dogs Cactus and The Earl, the pointer Tenny and the English setter bitch Miss Shattuc. The latter, it is said, is to be a competitor for a Cook County special at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show, but as her owner lives in New York it is not exactly plain how she can compete.

There is a good deal of talk going on just now in New York about forming a ladies' kennel club and holding dog shows for the benefit of charitable institutions. No doubt the enthusiasm of the dames of New York has been fired by the example of their English sisters, the Ladies' Kennel Association in England having quickly developed wonderful strength and independence and being quite fashionable to boot, several ladies of title being at the head of the affair.

There was a rumor on Thursday at the New York show that the champion lightweight pointer bitch Lady Gay Spanker had died that day in giving birth to puppies. On Friday W. E. Warner, manager of Mr. Geo. J. Gould's kennel, said that this was not the case; she had some trouble and lost the puppies, but at that time she was feeling as well as he did, and that was very well indeed.

There will be a called meeting of the Board of [illegible] States Field Trial Club held at [illegible] on Monday, March 4, at 10 a. m. All [illegible] invited to be present at the

From a letter from Mr. W. J. Higginson we gather that he went to the New York show prepared to back up his side of the bull terrier argument with Dr. Huidekoper, but just as he thought everything had been satisfactorily arranged to match the two dogs, the negotiations fell through. Thus ends one more spectacular play.

The annual sale of fox terriers of Messrs. L. & W. Rutherfurd took place on February 21 at the American Horse Exchange, New York. The prices obtained were poor, ranging from $5 to $35. In all twenty-seven were sold averaging $11.25 each.

The United States Field Trial Club will probably hold a field trial at Newton, N. C., immediately after the conclusion of the Eastern field trials.

In consequence of the space required for the report of the New York show this week many communications and Names Claimed, Visits, etc., are held over.

The annual meeting of the American Fox Terrier Club will be held at Boston during the New England Kennel Club's show.

Hot Springs, Ark.—Solid Train Through from St. Louis

Commencing Sunday, February 17, the Iron Mountain Route will run a solid train through from St. Louis to Hot Springs, consisting of vestibuled sleeping cars, reclining chair cars (seats free), and baggage cars, leaving Grand Union Station 6:35 p. m. daily, arriving at Hot Springs, 12:30 noon, next day. The climate at this famous resort is mild and invigorating, coming as it does from the pine clad mountains surrounding the "Valley of Vapors." The three grand hotels, accommodating two thousand people, are villages in themselves, music being furnished in the rotunda, as well as many other attractive features, such as dancing, progressive euchre, etc. The donkey parties, horseback riding and drives to the many adjacent springs and resorts in the mountains are well patronized, and very enjoyable, as the roads are fine, and the scenery beautiful. Descriptive and illustrated pamphlets furnished free on application to company's agents, or H. C. Townsend, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis.

"AMONG THE OZARKS"

The land of big red apples, is an attractive and interesting book, handsomely illustrated with views of South Missouri scenery, including the famous Olden fruit farm of 3,000 acres in Howell County. It pertains to fruit raising in that great fruit belt of America, the southern slope of the Ozarks, and will prove of great value, not only to fruit growers, but to every farmer and home-seeker, looking for a farm and a home. RECTIFYING A JUDGE'S DECISION

To let sleeping dogs lie is an adage old and wise and it will be readily understood that to rake up the Baron—Van Aafke affair at La Crosse is not, personally, a pleasant matter, but believing that if coursing can be benefited by so doing personal feelings should not be allowed to stand in the way, it is purposed to go into the affair at some length here. It may seem rather late in the day to do so, but not knowing whether Dr. Van Hummell would appeal from the Altcar Coursing Club's executive committee's decision to the Coursing Board we have refrained from bringing the case up. However, the London Sportsman of February 9 devotes nearly a column to reviewing the unfortunate incident, and as the opinion of one who has been writing on English coursing for several years cannot fail to be of interest to followers of the sport in America we append his remarks, with some comments thereon. After half a column devoted to probable contestants for the Waterloo Cup, the writer says:

"During my enjoyable sojourn at Birkdale, I met Dr. Quincy Van Hummell, of Indianapolis, owner of Van Aafke, one of the greyhounds concerned in the recent American case of the judge's decision in favor of the white collar being 'reversed.' The Doctor is evidently a good all-round sportsman and took considerable trouble in bringing over in the Lucania four live hares, which are now in one of the Earl of Sefton's paddocks, and are intended to be turned down in the Altcar ground. It is the doctor's intention to see the Waterloo Cup run for, and he hopes to take both English hares and pheasants back with him, as well as a few greyhounds, his visit to Mr. Coke being in connection with the purchase of the last named.

"As we had a pleasant meal together in the comfortable parlor at the Blundell Arms, our conversation naturally enough took a wide range. American coursing, I gathered, is quite unlike ours. A clever, stout runner with fair pace is what is preëminently wanted. 'When the faster greyhound after winning for half a mile tires,' said the Doctor, 'the other takes command of the hare, does all the remaining work, and wins the money!' Such a reversal as that would hardly be possible here, over our biggest countries, though I have often enough at Amesbury seen courses finish a mile and a half away from where they started. What the Doctor was more interested in than anything else was in having my opinion upon the action of the committee of his club in giving the stake to Baron after it had in the first place been given to his own dog, Van Aafke. And I must at once pay tribute to his manly sportsmanlike feeling by saying that although I expressed it as my opinion that in the stake being awarded to Baron the justice of the case had been met, Dr. Van Hummell said he hoped I would write something about it that might help to guide them in the future. The facts briefly stated are as follows: Baron and Van Aafke went to slips for the decided course wearing collars (all couples run in collars there), and at the end of it the judge displayed the white handkerchief, the flag steward thereupon raising the white flag; and as it was the last course of the meeting the latter official then rode away off the ground. The judge, however, immediately intimated to both owners that his white signal was a mistake, arising through his carelessly having both handkerchiefs in one pocket; and that he intended his flat to be in favor of the dog wearing the red collar (which was Baron). Nothing more was done at the time, but the committee, considering the matter subsequently, reversed the first decision. Herein, of course, all the difficulty lies. The club runs under our English N. C. C. rules, and the rule bearing on the case says: 'The judge shall, on the termination of each course, immediately deliver his decision aloud, and shall not recall or reverse his decision on any pretext whatever.'

"What appears to me to be the crucial point is whether it was a case of reversing or rectifying the decision. The judge admittedly at once mentioned his mistake, but was under the impression that the clause I have quoted prevented his undoing what he had already done. His announcement, however, that he intended his decision for the red collar and not for the white was, to my mind, a sufficient justification for an immediate correction. Of course, the clause that a decision shall not be recalled may be urged against my line of argument; but I take it that a deliberate decision is there referred to. A decision based upon mistaken premises through confusion of colors is, with us, occasionally rectified, and thereby recalled or reversed, and I can call to mind an instance at Brampton many years ago of the judge, Mr. A. Dalzell, where the dogs ran in collars, after first deciding for one, saying it was the other that won, the corrected decision being the one accepted. It would never do, however, to give much latitude in this direction, for there might be danger of the judge correcting to suit public opinion. Fortunately, there is not the faintest suspicion of his having done so in this American case. Dr. Van Hummell assures me that the independence and bona fides of the gentleman who officiated are not in the slightest degree called in question. And this testimony, be it observed, is expressed by the man whom the judge's double action deprived of the stake. The most regrettable feature in the case, inasmuch as it might establish an unfortunate precedent, is perhaps the circumstance that the corrected and permanent fiat emanated from the committee, and not from the judge. But even here, perhaps, the committee thought they were acting within their powers. There is no such thing as a clause in the rules saying that the judge's decision is final, and without appeal, though such no doubt is the intention. All things considered, it seems to me that the committee came to the happiest solution possible under the circumstances. Had Van Aafke got the stakes a manifest injustice would have been perpetrated on merely technical grounds.

"The course, both from the American Field's report and according to Dr. Hummell, was closely contested. Now, it may easily have been that the judge, distinguishing the dogs up to a certain point, partly by their names or colors, as well as by the collars they wore, became confused as to their identity in the cloud of dust, and then got them mixed in his mind's eye. Of course, he had to decide for one or the other at once, and then after seeing the dogs picked up by their respective trainers he discovered that he had not decided as he had intended. Under such circumstances 19 men out of every 20 would have let the matter pass, especially with the course a near thing, but here was a high-minded judge, whose conscience would not allow him to perpetrate an injustice whatever discredit the admission might entail. And instead of saying, 'I intended to decide for Baron, and was under the impression for the moment that he wore the white collar,' took refuge under the simpler though not less humiliating acknowledgment that he pulled out the white handkerchief instead of the red." We might here interpolate that the judge simply stated what was a fact. Having concluded its remarks on the Baron—Van Aafke affair, our English cotemporary devotes itself to one or two other subjects, as follows:

"There is, to my mind, a very useful object lesson before us. The thought rarely occurs to the great majority who frequent our coursing fields of the many qualities that have to be embodied in a coursing judge. A perfect knowledge of the sport, and unswerving honesty of purpose, combined with good horsemanship, would mostly be set down as the full requirement. As a matter of fact there are many other sterling qualities required—a sturdy independence of spirit, perfect confidence in your own innate knowledge, sufficient intuitive judgment to be nearly always in the right place, the power of looking into a course even when badly placed, the faculty of casting aside every consideration as to owners, breeding or reputation, when a brace of greyhounds are slipped, seeing only a fawn and a black between which you have to decide, and most important of all great strength of will, so that by excluding every other thought you may be able to concentrate your mind absolutely upon the course time after time, never forgetting a single phase of the trial until your decision be given.

"If our American friends had rightly appreciated the difficulties attaching to the satisfactory discharge of a coursing judge's duties, I think they would hardly have adopted the practice of running every couple in collars. It must assuredly add considerably to the tension of the judge's mind, and bring about a greater proportion of mistakes. I remember it being suggested many years ago that we should do the same thing here, the argument being that it would obviate all mistakes (an occasional one, no doubt, being never rectified) on the part of the flag steward. But the more weighty consideration of never increasing the judge's difficulties at once prevailed. Fancy imposing upon a judge the monotony of remembering between collars time after time, instead of giving the relief that comes in the opposition of totally different colors. It is true they have in America a difficulty to surmount in the course finishing such a long way off, and by the judge always using red and white signals his decision becomes more readily known; but even as it is the flag-steward is mounted, and a competent man need not be far out of hearing distance when the course ended. At any rate, even if there were a slight wait, one consideration surely outweighs the other. To go on, course after course, with the dogs continually changing in colors, and never forget whether the red or the white collar led up, is to my mind quite beyond any human powers.'

The writer's opinion that the crucial point is whether it was a case of reversing or rectifying the decision is in accord with our own, but we might point out that in American coursing delivering a decision aloud is more honored in the breach than the observance, that a judge invariably signifies his decision by flying a red or white handkerchief, and that his doing so is, by custom, accepted as his decision. Such being the case, a judge in America would naturally feel doubtful about his right to correct a decision so rendered. How or why it has become customary for judges here to make known their decisions by use of the colored handkerchiefs we do not know, but it was probably resorted to for some reason—possibly inexperienced flag-stewards—at the earliest meetings, and has been continued ever since. It would be better in the future to abandon the custom. But to return to the question of reversing or rectifying, can there be any doubt, in view of the English precedents mentioned by the Sportsmen, that a verbal decision may and does rectify such an error as occurred at La Crosse? We believe there cannot be; but perhaps the coursing board will be asked for a ruling, so we will not pursue the subject any further.

The Sportsman refers to the circumstance that the corrected decision emanated from the committee, and says: "But even here, perhaps, the committee thought they were acting within their powers. There is no such thing as a clause in the rules saying that the judge's decision is final, and without appeal, though such, no doubt, is the intention." This is true, perhaps, to the extent that there is nothing positive in the rules to prohibit an appeal to the governing body, such as the National Coursing Club of Great Britain or the American Coursing Board, from a judge's decision, though it would not be well if the practice became common, but as far as the stewards or executive committee are concerned their lack of power to reverse a judge's decision is clearly defined by Rule 33, which says: "The stewards shall, if requested to do so, express their opinion whether the explanation is satisfactory or not, and their opinion in writing may be asked for and published afterward, but the decision of the judge, once given, shall not be reversed for any cause." Whether this should be construed as meaning that a decision shall not be reversed under any circumstances by the governing body we are not prepared to say, but it certainly implies that the stewards or executive committee have not the power. The question therefore arises, did not the executive committee at La Crosse exceed its authority? It certainly looks as if it did, and probably the correct course would have been to refer the case to the Coursing Board for a ruling. The committee's decision was to the effect that similar mistakes had been made by judges in Great Britain and the decisions had been corrected, and so it pursued a similar course. From the Sportsman it is evident that such errors have occurred across the Atlantic and been corrected, but the committee at La Crosse based its finding on a paragraph on Page 170 of Vol. XIII of the English Stud Book, and after carefully reading said paragraph it appears that the finding was not well grounded. The paragraph referred to says: "In a complaint by Mr. James Tutty that his dog, Ballynarris Boy, was put out in the Portadown stakes, Gilford meeting, December, 1893, after having gained the judge's decision, in consequence of the wrong flag having been put up, parties having been heard and several witnesses examined," etc. This seems to have been a case exactly opposite to the one at La Crosse, for here the dog, Ballynarris Boy, was put out, after having gained the judge's decision, in consequence of the wrong flag having been put up (by the flag steward).

There is another matter to which attention might be called in connection with this case. The Altcar club's executive committee consisted of Dr. Norman, Mr. T. W. Bartels and Mr. F. A. Withers; the last named was not present and Mr. Bartels of course could not act, consequently only one committeeman was available. At the annual election of officers of the American Coursing Club at Huron, three weeks previously, we had called attention to the fact that such a circumstance as this had occurred one year at Great Bend and might occur again anywhere, and had suggested that the executive committee of that club be increased from three to five. The suggestion was well received and five members were elected to serve on the executive committee. It would be advisable for other clubs to do the same at their annual meetings next Autumn. In the La Crosse instance the then secretary-treasurer, Mr. S. W. Vidler, acted in conjunction with Dr. Norman, but we cannot find anything in the constitution and by-laws of the Altcar Coursing Club that makes the secretary-treasurer an ex officio member of its executive committee.

Referring to the question of dogs always wearing collars, on which the Sportsman has something to say, it might be remarked that when the dogs are of different colors a judge is not likely to pay much attention to the collars until the end of the course, when it is not uncommon to see him, when they kill, ride up very close and look carefully to see which collar the winner wears, so that he may make no mistake about flying the right color for the flag-steward's benefit. We have already referred to the prevalence of this custom in American coursing, and have hinted that it might be due to having inexperienced flag-stewards. We believe this surmise is correct. In California they see to it that the flag-steward is a man of experience, but how often is he at meetings on this side of the Rocky Mountains? The idea seems to prevail that anybody will do for a flag-steward, and it is no uncommon thing for a man, or even a boy, with little or no coursing experience to be appointed to fill this important position. They are mounted, which no doubt is a convenience when a course is finished a long way from the starting point—but our courses are not all long ones, though the Sportsman seems to have got from Dr. Van Hummell an impression that they are—and the chief idea of most of these mounted flag-stewards seems to be to ride close up and see all they can of the trials, no matter whether they get in the way of the judge and the owners, or their representatives, riding to pick up the dogs. With such flag-stewards as are generally employed the mistakes would be innumerable if a judge confined himself to a verbal decision instead of flying a colored handkerchief, and if after a course he informed his flag-steward that the black dog, or the fawn bitch, had won he would probably be promptly asked, "which color shall I put up?"

When dogs are always run in collars bringing the collars back to the slipper is a source of some annoyance to the judge. So frequently do owners and trainers forget or delay to return the collars that the slipper runs short and in despair usually asks the judge if he would mind getting the collars when a course is finished and bringing them back, the judge good-naturedly consents (and occasionally forgets all about it, which is not unnatural) and then his peace of mind is in danger. Many and many a time have we heard a judge, after having started on his return journey, exclaim: "There, I've forgotten those collars again!" And he generally refers to "those collars" in strong language.

The Sportsman's remarks on "the many qualities that have to be embodied in a coursing judge" are excellent. But the "perfect confidence in your own innate knowledge," like the perfect confidence of the public, can only be obtained by long service, and the "concentration of your mind absolutely upon the course" is apt to be disturbed when you feel your horse suddenly swerve and from the tail of your eye you catch a momentary glimpse of a couple of holes that he has just missed, or when you find he is plunging down the bank of a totally unexpected ravine.

THE WATERLOO CUP.

Owing to the unusually cold weather prevailing in the British Isles, the Waterloo committee wisely decided not to attempt to bring off this famous meeting last week. Though this is not the first time a Waterloo Cup meeting has had to be postponed, never before has it been found necessary to announce a postponement a full week before the date set. However, it undoubtedly was a politic move, for, supposing that a thaw had set in, there could have been no certainty that the Altcar plains would be in any condition for coursing over, and it was quite out of the question that greyhounds could come to slips in condition; in fact so seriously has training been interfered with that a really fit dog will be the exception, should the running take place this week, and it seems odds on the winner coming from those greyhounds that were thoroughly wound up and ran at meetings just before the spell of severe weather set in. No fewer than nine other meetings stand postponed, among them the popular Corrie meeting, over Sir Robert Jardine's estate near Lockerbie, Scotland, and though his gamekeepers have been providing the hares with food a number have been found dead.

GREENVILLE RIFLE CLUB

GREENVILLE, O.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The Greenville Off Hand Rifle Club held its tenth annual meeting on February 11. The meeting was well attended and all present displayed much of their old-time enthusiasm. Thirteen new members were admitted to the ranks of the club, making the active membership to date, thirty-five. The club is in good shape financially and, being practically self-sustaining, is one of the leading clubs of the state.

Mr. A. N. Wilson was called to provide over the meeting and the following gentlemen were elected officers of the club for the ensuing year: President, D. S. Hime; vice-president, J. H. Schwable; secretary, A. J. Marling; treasurer, A. N. Wilson; captain, J. Chas. Hahne; assistant captain, Wils. Kirby; range committee, J. H. Schwable, J. Chas. Hahne, Wils. Kirby.

On motion, Miss Annie Oakley, the expert lady rifle shot, was elected an honorary member of the club, this county being her birthplace and former home. The secretary was instructed to notify Miss Oakley of this action of the club.

The hunters' reunion and picnic is held on the club's range annually, which brings together riflemen from all sections of the country, and at these gatherings there are frequently seen a hundred or more lovers of the rifle participating in the day's sport.

Before adjournment the following resolution on the death of President G. A. Katzenberger was introduced and passed unanimously:

Resolved, That by the death of our former president, Mr. G. A. Katzenberger, the club has lost one of its most enthusiastic members, of whom it can be truly said that those who knew him best loved him best. His kindly, winning manner made him many warm friends and he enjoyed a wide popularity both in and out of his business, and his memory will always be cherished by all members of this club. A. J. MARLING, Secy.

NOTES

THE great rifle shooting match between New Jersey and Georgia teams took place on Friday of last week, at Wormsloe, about nine miles from Savannah, Ga., on a private range owned by Mr. De Renne, a wealthy member of the Georgia Hussars, whose guest the Jersey party is while in the South. The Jerseymen shot well, but the Georgians shot better and won by 41 points.

MR. A. J. VANDEUSEN of Winona, Minn., on February 21, at 20 yards range, scored 2,254 points out of a possible 2,500. Mr. Vandeusen is a member of the Buckeye Gun Club of Winona, and also a member of the sharpshooters' organization of the same city.

THE AMERICAN TRAP SHOOTERS' LEAGUE

At a meeting of trap shooters held at the Astor House, New York City, on January 24, to organize a governing board for trap shooting, a committee consisting of Messrs. J. A. H. Dressel, W. H. Wolstencroft, B. C. Everinghim, L. H. Schortemeier and Edward Banks was appointed to draw up a constitution and by-laws for the organization, and to report at the adjourned meeting to be held at the Astor House on the evening of April 3. This committee presents the following as a result of its labors:

NOTES

THE programs for the Interstate Association's grand American handicap tournament at live birds, to be held at Willard Park, Paterson, N. J., on April 3, 4 and 5, have been issued and can be had by addressing Manager E. E. Shaner, 122 Diamond Market, Pittsburg, Pa. Willard Park, where this popular event is to be held, is beautifully situated on the Passaic River, about 30 minutes' ride by steam cars from New York City, thus enabling those who wish to attend the tournament and yet be with friends in the city mornings and evenings to do so without any inconvenience or necessary loss of time. On the first day of this meeting there will be four events, the "Willard Park Introductory," "Passaic Falls Sweepstakes," "Nitro Powder Handicap," and "Sportsmen's Handicap," all at live birds, and all class shooting, with three moneys in all except the third, which will have four moneys. These are sufficient for a good introduction to the grounds and to give the participants time to size up the surroundings and get partially acquainted with one another. On the second day, at 10 o'clock a. m., will be commenced the main event of the tournament, "The Grand American Handicap," 25 live birds per man, $25 entrance, $1,000 guaranteed by the association, and all surplus added, the three highest scores to take the purse. Entries for this event must be made on or before March 30 and accompanied by $10 forfeit, the rest of the entrance money being paid on the grounds any time before the last shot is fired in the second round. The Interstate Association rules (Hurlingham rules revised) will govern this and all other events at this meeting. No gun larger than a 12-gauge weighing 8 pounds or under will be allowed, and dropping for place intentionally will not be countenanced by the association. The handicap in the main event will be from 25 to 33 yards, and Messrs. Jacob Pentz and John S. Hoey, the handicapping committee, will exert themselves to so adjust the handicaps of the contestants as to place all on as near an equal shooting level as is possible, thus giving all a fair chance at the big purse that is to be hung up. In 1893 first money in the Grand American Handicap event amounted to $477.50, and in 1894 it was $667.50. This year it is thought it will exceed that of last year by a hundred dollars or more. On the second day, while the big event is being shot, two other smaller events will be shot on an extra set of traps, which will be so located as not to interfere with the main event. On the third day four events are scheduled, three of the four class shooting, all at live birds; and if time permits extra events will be made up. Birds will be trapped at 25 cents each and the association have the assurance that it will have an abundance of the very best birds obtainable at that season of the year. Admittance to Willard Park will be by card, which can be obtained free of charge by applying to any member of the Interstate Association or to Manager E. E. Shaner.

I HEAR that in Kansas, about sixty miles west of Atchison, there lives a colored man whom the white people speak of as the champion wing shot of his race in this country, and that at Omaha, Neb., there is another colored gentleman whom his people think a world beater among those of his color. I have also heard that Iowa is inclined to make similar claim for one of her citizens, while I know that Missouri possesses one or more gentlemen of color who dismiss the claims made by sister states as to their having the champion colored wing shot of the United States. Now, to settle the question as to what state in the Union has the champion of the colored race, I suggest that at some tournament to be held in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa or Missouri, there be a live bird match—say 25 birds to each man—arranged to determine the matter, that the entrance be $10 per man, and that the winner of said race be accorded the title of champion colored wing shot of the United States. Probably some of the sporting goods dealers in the country would donate a trophy for the occasion, so that the winner would not only get the entrance money in the event, but also an emblem worth having. The conditions and rules governing the contest could be arranged by the club holding the tournament whereat the match was shot, or could be agreed upon by those entering the contest. If such an event is arranged I will enter the race for one, whether there be more than one other man, or if there be a dozen and I should like to hear from others of my race through the AMERICAN FIELD regarding this scheme.

Pleasant Hill, Mo. T. H. CONRON.

MR. VON LENGERKE, of Chicago, has received a letter from Mr. W. T. Irwin, of Peoria, saying that he expected to be in Chicago about March 15, and should he (Mr. Von Lengerke) wish a race at 50 live birds for $50 a side, he (Irwin) might accommodate him. Mr. Irwin also said that he would like to shoot a couple of target races—100 targets per man—and mentioned Dr. Frothingham and T. L. Parker as the gentlemen he would like to shoot the races with. We hear that Mr. Parker is favorable to making a race with Mr. Irwin at 50 live birds, but declines the target race as he is not a target shooter. Perhaps Dr. Frothingham will accommodate the gentleman when he reaches the city. As regards the live bird match with Mr. Von Lengerke, such an event is not likely to take place, as it is contrary to Mr. Van Lengerke's ideas of right for a man in a business where he expects the patronage of sport men to shoot races for money. He is ever ready to shoot a gentlemanly race for the price of the birds or a good dinner, but he does not like races for a stake, although he has occasionally been forced to accept a banter of this kind. Should Mr. Irwin visit Chicago, as his letter to Mr. Von Lengerke indicates, he will doubtless have no difficulty in getting all the races he may want either at live birds or inanimate targets.

THE officers of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association have issued the following circular and had a copy of it mailed to each club or individual belonging to the association: "The work necessary to carry out the program for the twenty-first annual convention and tournament of this association promises to be of unusual proportions, and will require the prompt and liberal support of its members. You are requested to immediately forward the amount of your dues for 1895, also the amount of the assesment which was levied against your club by unanimous vote at the last meeting of our association. This assessment is constitutional and binding on all clubs, members at that time, the object of which was stated to you in a former notice. Some of the clubs have paid and you are expected to do the same. We need money to carry on the work of this body and your prompt compliance will be appreciated. Dues, 1895, $5; assessment, $10.

"H. B. MEYERS, Secy."

THE Marlin Fire Arms Co. of New Haven, Conn., manufacture a gun grease which they have named the Rust Repeller, that is said to be equal to anything of its kind now on the market. For fine tools, shotguns and rifles it is said to be perfection itself as it will not grow rancid but retains its form and virtue in any climate. It is put up in collapsible tubes making it convenient to carry and easy to apply. A thin coating on the finest of tools will prevent rust at all times, provided the parts where applied are wiped dry before using. For gun barrels, a cloth moistened with the grease and run through the barrel once or twice after cleaning is all that is necessary to insure freedom from rust.

A NUMBER of influential Baltimoreans who are interested in trap shooting are planning to make Baltimore one of the leading trap-shooting cities in the United States. It has been decided to hold a four days' tournament every year. The first is to be held this Spring, if possible, but, if not then, in the early Fall. It is proposed to have live pigeons and clay target shooting done simultaneously. The first prize is to be a guaranteed sum of $1,000 in cash. Should there be any surplus from entries for this prize it will be added to the stake. It will be a handicap event open to the world, each shooter to shoot at 50 live birds.

MR. CHAS. TOWNSEND, a gentleman who is well known to the trap shooters of New York and New Jersey, and who has been in failing health for a long time, died on February 21. Mr. Townsend was for years a reporter of sporting news for the daily and weekly papers in his section, and as such had an extended acquaintance. But his failing health would not permit him to continue his journalistic work, and less than a year ago he laid by the pen and devoted his time to regaining his health; but his disease was too securely seated to be shaken either by rest or medicines, and he died on the day above mentioned.

THE South Side Gun Club of Milwaukee, it is said, contemplates arranging a series of tournaments this season between the gun clubs of Milwaukee, Racine, Waukesha, Janesville, Whitewater, Madison, Oconomowoc and other points in the state. These tournaments are all to be held on the South Side Club's grounds at Milwaukee, five gold medals valued at $50 each being the principal trophies to be competed for. It is thought that something of this nature will stimulate trap shooting and establish a bond of fellowship between the clubs of the state.

For convenience the heretofore lengthy name of the Interstate Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association has been changed to simply the Interstate Association. This is a vast improvement and will be thoroughly appreciated by those who have occasion to frequently speak of the association. These be times when time is valuable, and, as the style adopted expresses all that is necessary, the time saved in the course of a twelvemonth to the secretary and manager of the association, and to the newspaper people of the country, will amount to quite a little

WE intend holding a tournament here on or about May 15 on the same plan as the Knoxville shoot is to be held, only that our shoot will be open to the shooters of this state only, and instead of being $10 to enter it will be $5, which amount must be sent in by all who wish to participate in the shoot by May 5. This money sent in will be added to the purses. This will be a sort of a preliminary shoot before the state shoot, which will follow. Further particulars concerning this shoot will be furnished later.

Lincoln, Neb. ROGERS & SHARPE.

MR. FRANK LAWRENCE of Chicago, inventor of Lawrence's grass suits for duck shooting, is probably one of the most indefatigable workers in the country, and his labor is bringing its reward, for he is overwhelmed with orders for goods of his manufacture. His patronage is by no means local for in addition to his home trade orders are received from hundreds of far-away points. His advertisement in another part of this paper will give all the information needed.

I HOPE we may have some good trap shooting tournaments in this state during the present season. Knoxville, Memphis and Cleveland are too far away and the expenses too heavy for me, so I will have to be contented with tournaments nearer home. However, I hope to see full reports of all of them in the AMERICAN FIELD.

Kingsley, Ia. E. D. TROTTER.

THE Altoona (Pa.) Gun Club has changed the dates of its tournament from June 25 and 26, to July 11 and 12, so as not to conflict with other tournaments that are now announced. In arranging dates for tournaments clubs should be careful about selecting dates that will conflict with tournaments of near-by clubs.

THE AMERICAN FIELD score book is so nearly perfection itself that it is receiving great praise from the trap shooters of the country. Clubs in need of a score book need only to see this book to appreciate its many advantages. Orders filled the day they are received. Price postpaid $1.

IT certainly must be highly gratifying to Capt. Money and other members of the E. C. Powder Co. to know that three of the four winners in the Grand Prix du Casino event at Monte Carlo used E. C. powder, the winner of the fourth prize using Schultze powder.

THE Southern Club of Hot Springs, Ark., announces a live bird tournament for March 13 and 14. The main event of the tournament will be an open sweepstake. 50 live birds per man, entrance $25, amateurs to stand at 30 yards rise, experts at 33 yards.

IT is reported that three live bird matches been arranged between Capt. J. L. Brewer and Frank Class. The matches are each to be at 100 birds per man for $100 a side each match, the races to be shot on John Erb's grounds on March 13, 14 and 15.

THE West Newburg (N. Y.) Gun Club, this week, announces tournaments for May 9, 10 and 11 and October 9, 10 and 11, the last day of each tournament to be devoted to live bird shooting.

THE San Antonio Gun Club, the largest organization of its kind in Texas, will open the season's work on March 3 with a big prize shoot.

A GUN club was organized at Menominee, Mich., on February 19, with S. B. Sanderson, president, and H. Meridith, secretary.

MR. J. C. READ, of Omaha, Neb., and Mr. J. Dew, of Arapahoe, Neb., will shoot a match at live birds at Omaha on March 9.

A CORRESPONDENT writes that the Freeport (Pa.) Gun Club is to be reorganized in the Spring.

SHOOTING AT MONTE CARLO

The weather at the beginning of the first week in February, at Monte Carlo, was not as favorable for pigeon shooting as it could have been. On Wednesday, however, it was more promising and many thought the bad weather had disappeared for the week, at least, but on Friday morning, the day on which the Prix d'Ouverture event was to be shot, the alternating storms of rain and snow made it doubtful if the event could be brought off. Toward noon, however, the weather was more promising, and if the number of entries was six below that of last year in this event (eighty-two against eighty-eight) it cannot be said that any of the best shots were found wanting when their names were called. The birds, however, were not lively, many of them refusing to face the storm when the trap was sprung, and the result was that such a number of the contestants continued to kill straight it necessitated a draw, the prize being divided among the eleven men who had scored nine straight.

The scores made in this and other events of the week were as given below:

Prix d'Ouverture of £120 and an objet d'art, added to a sweepstakes of £4 each, the second received £30 and 25 per cent. of the entries, the third £20 and 20 per cent.; the fourth £10 and 15 per cent.: distance 26 meters; 82 entries.

THE GRAND PRIX

The twenty-fourth contest for the Grand Prix du Casino, which has always been so liberally endowed by the administiation of Monte Carlo, commenced on February 4, and, although the number of shooters (ninety-five as against ninety-three last year) was the largest on record, the quality of the pigeons was so good that, with a strong wind to help them, they were hard to kill; consequently the competitors were rapidly narrowed down, and Signor Benvenuti was ultimately proclaimed the winner. The large number of entries in this event necessitated it being carried over to the next day, and the outlook on the morning of February 5 was not at all promising. Dark clouds hung over the snow-capped mountains, and a very cold wind with a deal of "east" in it pierced people to the bone, so that, despite this being the final stage of the contest, the inclosure presented a very different appearance to what one is accustomed to see, and nobody regretted the rapidity with which the business was brought to a conclusion. By way of expediting matters, M. Blondin announced that, though only fourteen of the ninety-five were put out, through having missed three birds, the twenty-five others who had killed only two would not be called up until it was seen if there was any chance of their coming in to shoot for the ties, and this saved a good deal of time without prejudicing anyone's chance. The immediate effect of it was that in the first round shot yesterday, fourteen more who had missed were eliminated, so that fifty-three of the ninety-five thus disappeared. Scores:

Grand Prix du Casino of £800 and objet d'art, added to a sweepstakes of £8; the second received £160 and 25 per cent. of the entries; the third £80 and 25 per cent. of the entries; the fourth £10 and 15 per cent. of the entries. The winner in 1894 to stand back 2 meters; previous winners 1 meter; four pigeons at 23 meters; eight at 27 meters; three misses to put out; 95 entries.

SHOOTING AT WATSON'S

BURNSIDE, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Quite a little live bird shooting has been done here since my last report. The Audubon Gun Club had its regular club contest on February 20, the attendance being nearly double what it usually is. These contests are at 15 live birds per man, with a dead bird allowance to the weaker shooters so as to place all on as near an equality as possible. The scores made were:

On February 22, Washington's birthday, occurred the second match between Messrs. Von Lengerke and Dr. Frothingham, the former one, shot a week before, and reported in these columns, resulting in a tie. The race was at 50 birds per man for $50 a side, the loser of the match to pay for the birds previously shot. The day was favorable to good scores, yet neither man seemed to do the work he is capable of doing. Indeed Dr. Frothingham shot so poorly that he was defeated at the forty-fifth bird and withdrew. Quite a little money changed hands on the result as both men had warm friends present who were willing to stake a reasonable amount on the outcome. The scores:

ELLIOTT—FULFORD

As announced in these columns some weeks since that they would, Mr. J. A. R. Elliott, the crack Western shot who has been in New York and vicinity ever since the gathering of world beaters at Chicago, when the American championship medal was shot for, and Mr. E. D. Fulford, of Utica, N. Y., a gentleman who handles the scattergun with nearly as good effect and with about as much success as any of the crack shots of the country, met ... 19, 20 and 21, at Marion, N. J., in three distinct matc... being at 100 birds per man, for $100 a side, each m... of another hundred each man on winning two o...

The men were not strangers in any sense ... gether at many a tournament and besides had ... of matches in which Fulford proved the wi... matches neither was at all in the dark as to ... was to compete with or as to his opponent ... shot. As a matter of course Mr. Fulfo... Elliott before, thought that when he had ... while Mr. Elliott, who has been shooti... for nearly a year, probably thought he was in such good form that if he lost these races his opponent would have to make some wonderful scores. The result shows that Mr. Elliott did not overestimate himself for he won all three of the matches, his scores being 91, 97 and 96, while Mr. Fulford scored 88, 87 and 89.

The birds in the first match were only fair, but there was a strong wind across the traps which made the best ones of the lot difficult to stop within bounds. In the second race, the birds, as a lot, were were pretty good though there were some upon which the flush ropes had to be used to cause them to take wing. In this race Mr. Elliott shot remarkably well and was a strong favorite in the betting, yet Mr. Fulford's friends showed no lack of confidence in their man, and considerable money was staked by them. In the third and last race the birds were a fair lot and the day, after a fall of snow in the morning, bright and pleasant. Mr. Elliott's great work of the day before had a tendency to check the betting. There were any number who were willing to place money on him, but few who cared to chance any large amount on Mr. Fulford. The birds in the third race were of about the same quality as those used on the preceding days, but the bright glare of the sun on the newly fallen snow made the "getting on" accurately more difficult. The scores made by each man in the three races were as follows:

MANHATTA.

DAVENPORT—ROBERTS

The Flushing Shooting Club celebrated February 22 in a manner quite befitting gun club men. A match at live birds had been arranged between Mr. L. T. Davenport, of the Larchmont Club, and Mr. George Roberts, of the Flushing Club, and it was decided that it should be shot on the Flushing grounds on Washington's Birthday.

The original conditions of the match were to have been as follows: Davenport to allow Roberts 20 birds, also to give him 3 yards handicap, the respective rises being 27 and 30 yards. The stakes were $100 a side, and the loser to pay for all the birds.

As the men were about to face the traps Roberts turned about to Davenport and said: "I have concluded not to ask any odds."

"So we'll shoot on even terms?" asked Davenport, as if he were in doubts about the sincerity of the remark.

Mr. Roberts replied that that was what he meant, and the match was therefore shot on even terms.

Mr. Roberts, who is eccentric in more ways than one, having shot the race in regular street attire, not even taking off his overcoat, was chaffed about his showing by a clubmate, F. J. J. Desraismes, which so nettled him that he offered to shoot the latter a match, allowing Desraismes the same handicap both as to birds and rise that Davenport allowed him in the original conditions of their match. The offer was accepted, and the match will take place. The scores in the Davenport—Roberts match were as follows:

A match at 15 live birds, between Mr. Willis and Mr. Harway, was then shot, which resulted in a tie, but in the shoot off Mr. Willis won, scoring 10 to his opponent 9.

Following this came the regular club shoot, 10 live birds per man, the prizes being $60, $40 and $20 respectively. In this Mr. Desraismes won first prize; Mr. Donnelly second, and Mr. Hance third. The scores:

COOK—IRWIN

D...

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The fourteenth annual to... the Forester Gun Club is now a thing of the past, and ... in history as a success, though in point of shooters ...

money won it does not compare with that of other years. Mr. Budd said: "I have killed ten straight at a shoot and won $87, which is more money than has been divided up in one event by all those present at this meeting." It is time to call a halt and ask, why is this thus? I shall not pretend to answer the query. Let those wish to do so. I think that the very poor scores made will show [illegible] is that of making target shooting too hard by throwing [illegible] clear out of bounds, "over the fence and out." I am [illegible] day will sometime penetrate the horizon [illegible] of tournaments will come to see that [illegible] limit. Mr. Irwin, of Peoria, was present, [illegible] Ruel Cook, of this place, he arranged the traps to the [illegible] as he thought, properly, and the match was on.

It did not take more than ten shots to show that neither man was in the best of form, besides they were handicapped by a strong wind and the very rapid and erratic flight of the targets. Irwin shot very poorly on the first forty targets, and then rallied and lost but four birds out of the next forty. He got rattled over a decision on a bird he did not see nor shoot at and finished to the bad, scoring in all only 76, while Mr. Cook got 18 out of his last 20.

What pleased the spectators and shooters interested was the way the targets went into dust when hit, and that there were no "dusted" birds. Cook did the cleanest work throughout. Irwin was out of form and was using a load new to him.

Mr. Cook used a Lefever gun and a very heavy load of E. C. powder in a primed Blue Rival shell, and 1¼ ounces No. 7 shot. Irwin shot a Parker gun, his load being 3¼ drams of Dupont Smokeless powder in the Rapid shell and 1⅛ ounces of No. 8 chilled shot. Races at 100 targets from five unknown traps are a new thing here, but it is hoped they may become more general. A race of this kind, use of both barrels, about 25 yards rise, would be very interesting, and needs only to be introduced to become popular.

SPRING HILL GUN CLUB

PITTSBURG, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The members of the Spring Hill Gun Club celebrated Washington's Birthday with a live bird shoot. The day was perfect for shooting and the birds the best lot we ever had. It was our first day with the Clark trap and all the shooters are delighted with it. It is a ground trap with a flusher that adds twenty miles an hour to the speed of a bird.

The shooting, as will be seen by the scores, was good, the work of Mr. J. N. Anderson being especially good. The retrieving was done in fine style by John Brant's setter, Art. The scores follow, the men shooting at from 25 to 100 birds:

THE AMERICAN FIELD HANDICAP TROPHY

BURLINGTON, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It begins to look as if the shooters of Lee County had some sort of a lien upon the American Field Handicap Trophy or else had an agreement among themselves that they would not let it pass into other hands, for now for the fourth time in succession has it passed from one Lee County man to another, and at the last contest it was won for the second time by Mr. Brockway. The contests for this trophy are at 50 single targets to the scratch men, the other contestants being allowed a bird handicap.

The day was all that could be expected at this season of the year for trap shooting and everything was favorable for good work.

After the trophy contest several other events were shot, the scores in which together with those made in the trophy shoot I forward herewith. The shooting took place on the ice at the foot of Washington Street.

EVENT No. 1.—Trophy contest.

KNAPP—WORK

Mr. Geo. Work, a gentleman who is just now doing considerable match shooting, shot a race at 100 birds each man, on the grounds of the Larchmont Yacht Club, on February 22, with Dr. Knapp.

The day was bright and there was a strong northwest wind, which helped to make the good lot of birds that were furnished much above the average seen at the trap nowadays.

Both men shot well, Work doing the best execution with the first barrel, while Dr. Knapp did great work with his second. There was a good [illegible] men and the match was greatly enjoyed. The scores made were not as big as have been made [illegible] considering everything they were [illegible] live bird race it is necessary for one [illegible] things that have to be considered [illegible] idea of what the race was by simply [illegible] here they are, and those who did not see the race will have to be content with what they can glean from our meager report.

PUEBLO, COLO.—Members of the Pueblo Gun Club shot for the Ramsey medal on February 21, each man shooting at 25 single targets. A strong wind blew directly across the traps affecting the flight of the birds and making the shooting very hard. After an exciting shoot off with Mr. Killiu, Mr. E. P. Mathewson won the medal. Scores:

John West.....0100010010 1111110010 11101—14

E. P. Mathewson.....1111111111 0101111101 01011—20

It was decided to shoot the tie off on five birds per man. In the first round of five both men scored straight, but in the second five Killin scored 2 and Mathewson 3, giving the medal to the latter.

Answers to Correspondents

We are willing always to answer any question that we can answer, and prescribe for dogs or other animals in these columns, but we can not answer questions or prescribe by mail. In all instances where it is necessary that a sick animal should be prescribed for by mail, we refer the owner to Professor R. J. Withers, No. 627 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Cal., to whom one dollar must be inclosed to pay for his services.

KENNEL

W. J. R., Mercer, Pa.—Ans.—The black, tan and white puppy is not evidence of any mongrel blood; it is merely an instance of "throwing back" to some ancestor of similar markings. You might as well destroy it.

R. M., Cambridge, O.—Ans.—(1) Bob Gates is by Count Rapier (Druid—Magnolia) out of Belle of Hatchie (Scout—Lady S.). (2) Nannie Gladstoue is by Gladstone (Dan—Petrel) out of Snc (Druid—Ruby).

J. A. H, St. Paul, Minn.—Ans.—(1) Neither is registered. (2) Dott Gladstone is by Dandy Laverack (Laverack Chief—Countess Blythe) out of Betty Gladstone (Don Gladstone—Bessie T).

H. B., Champaign, Ill.—Ans.—Your question is very ambignous; if a record of pedigrees is what you desire there is nothing to equal the stnd book published by the American Kennel Club.

S, St. Louis, Mich.—Ans.—As he has not been registered we can only refer you to the breeding furnished by his entry in the International Derby, which is "Hal Pointer—Kent's Star."

A. B., New Bedford, Mass.—Ans.—Rickets, and we fear there is no help for her; give her a dessertspoonful of the precipitated phosphate of lime twice daily in her food.

J. V. W., Alliance, O.—Ans—(1) Tom Owen (19313) is by Bernard D (17955) out of Josie D (16601). (2) Ruth (22438) is by Dick Swivcler (22914) out of Yuba (16304).

S. N. L., Wilmington, Del.—Ans.—Indigestion; try to overcome it by dieting; give but one hearty meal daily, then at night; also plenty of daily exercise.

C. R. H., Centralia, Wash.—Ans.—It is not uncommon for cocker spaniels to throw red puppies. By some people puppies of that color are highly prized.

M. W., Lenox, Mass.—Ans.—An abscess; poultice it with linseed meal for several days, then make a large opening so that the pus can escape freely.

E. A. B., Asheville, N. C.—Ans.—(1) Norna (E. 7218). (2) Frost (1996). (3) Victress (525); she is by Dash II (E. 1341) out of Moll III. (4) Pocahontas (476).

F. T. M., Trenton, Ont.—Ans.—No, neither book gives full information on the subject. Cropping bull terriers' ears has been declared against in England.

A. F., Spokane, Wash.—Ans.—Field trials were not held in Ohio in 1891. In 1892 the Ohio Field Trial Club held trials at Canton during November.

HOWARD, Milo, O.—Ans.—Try a change of diet, giving some meat and vegetables such as cabbage and turnips, with well cooked cornmeal.

T. B. S., Boston, Mass.—Ans.—(1) Very probably mongrels, though not necessarily. (2) She will be just as valuable for future use.

F. L. K, Bedford, Mass.—Ans.—Canker of the ear. Cleanse the ear with tepid water daily and then apply tincture of iodine.

T. K., Dallas, Tex.—Ans.—You can use whichever expression you choose; but the latter is preferable, the former being clumsy

H. C. B., Augusta, Ga.—Aus.—Juno (E. 6947), dam of Climax, is by Mike (Bang—Miller's Sella) out of Juno (Hamlet—Venus).

E. W. I., Chautauqua, N. Y.—Ans.—Winnebago Paun (17907) is by Dick Swiveler (8110) out of Nellie Glencho (8478).

J. O., Sionx City, Ia.—Ans.—(1) They are the same. (2) Hamlet was by Bob (Joker—Fan) out of Juno, by Frank.

C. R. H., Huron, S. D.—Ans.—Heart disease or nasal polypns. You had better consult a local veterinarian.

ZIG ZAG, Columbus, O.—(1) Not registered. (2) We do not know of any book devoted solely to the breed.

C. A. G., Holdrege, Neb.—Ans.—Isabella is by Rake (Dan—Ruby) out of Clara Dale (Dash III—Cornelia).

E. B. E., Binghamton, N. Y.—It would be better to consult a lawyer in your own state.

J. H. W., Cincinnati.—Ans.—Bessie II (13793 in the English stud book) is right.

E. C, Chicago.—Ans.—(1) Sterilized cow's milk. (2) No, she cannot.

A. P. K., Hackensack, N. J.—Ans.—(1) No. (2) Nonsense.

G. C. S, Pittsburg, Pa.—Ans.—Not registered.

TRAP

G. L. B., St. Joseph, Mo.—Two contestants were shooting at 10 live birds each under American Shooting Association revised rules. A had shot at 10 birds and scored 7. B had shot at 9 and lost 2. Going to the score to shoot his tenth bird, B had trouble in getting his gun to close so as to lock, but finally supposed it was all right. He gave the word "pull," the bird took wing, he fired the first barrel, missing the bird, and the report of the second barrel followed that of the first barrel instantly. B claimed that he did not pull the second trigger, but that the second barrel jarred off and that he should have another bird, while A claimed that the bird should be scored lost. Which is right? Ans.—There is no rule in the American Shooting Association rules covering the point in question; but Rule 23, which reads as follows, may reasonably apply in cases of this kind: "If a contestant is balked or interfered with, or there is other reason why it should be done, the referee may allow another bird." The words "or there is other reason why it should be done," it appears to us, leaves the matter entirely with the referee to say whether the man is entitled to another bird or not.

GAME AND SHOOTING

H. S. L., Harrisburg, Pa.—Please give me some advice about some quails I have bought for stocking purposes. As the weather is not yet favorable to put them out I am having some trouble with keeping them. They are going blind and have a kind of wheezing sound in their throats. They live about two days after becoming blind and then die of starvation. What ails them and what shall I do to save them? Ans.—Put them in a warm, dry room, where they can get the sun. Keep the room clean, and feed them on wheat, cane seed and millet, supplying them with fresh water and gravel. The blindness is caused probably by keeping them on the ground in cold quarters, where they cannot get sufficient exercise and where their droppings become mixed with the dust.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

A FEW active and intelligent dogs will be taken by the undersigned for practical training at the coming season; training grounds are the grouse covers of the Missouri slope, the finest region for grouse hunting in the world; all facilities and natural advantages exist for the thorough education of bird dogs. TRACKING TURKEYS

BY TAX

A month or two since, in an issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, I had the pleasure of reading an article by Gaucho entitled "Turkey Shooting." Sometimes one comes across a description of a trip or hunt that produces the impression that the writer must have taken the trip or hunt he describes, in his dreams, or in his imagination; and while such articles are none the less entertaining on that account, yet they leave something to be desired. But there is no doubt on earth but what friend Gaucho took the hunt he so feelingly (?) described, for in his entertaining description of it he displayed perfect knowledge of the little details of such a hunt, which would be almost impossible for one to do who had not "been there." In that article, in giving advice anent turkey hunting and shooting, Gaucho says:

"A good gun is important; sure fire well-loaded ammunition, very essential; comfortable clothes, well and easy fitting shoes, quite desirable; but, above all, buy, borrow, beg, or steal a good, sound, well-put-together pair of legs; otherwise the gun and et ceteras won't do a bit of good."

Now, if my good friend Gaucho will take the trouble to hunt up an article on turkey hunting, written by me, and published in the AMERICAN FIELD a year or so ago, he will find there set forth, not in his same words, but, in effect, the very same advice given by him, and more; for in addition to the requisites stated by him the turkey hunter of our short hills and ridges must be a woodsman; he must be a quick, sure shot, and proof against a case of rattles; for he is liable to hunt all day long for one, and only one, chance at a great big, black bird flopping up out of the laurel or short pines with a great deal of noise, and a great deal quicker and faster than he has any idea of. He must know the country over which he is hunting, and must know the habits and peculiarities of the birds. Yet having, being and knowing all these things, he is still but poorly equipped in the contest against the keen-eyed, keen-eared, wiry, wary, fleet-footed gobbler.

Now, I do not accuse friend Gaucho of plagiarism, for in his article he only adds his testimony to what I, and many turkey hunters before me, have many times said. It merely goes to show how, under like circumstances, all great (?) minds arrive at similar conclusions.

However, in passing, I will say anent the good pair of legs spoken of by Gaucho, that if I was after stealing a pair of turkey-hunting legs, I would have to be pretty hard up before I would steal the pair I have seen carrying my friend Gaucho around. But this is not what I started out to write; so if my friend Gaucho will forgive my little fun I will not only tell him about a hunt after turkeys I had the other day, but will also say that if he will come down here in January of this or any other year, I will give him a chance to prove the turkey-hunting qualities of his legs, and also insure him a turkey even if I have to kill it for him; and I hope he will consider this a standing invitation.

After waiting and waiting all through the months of November and December for a good tracking snow, on the day after Christmas last it commenced coming in good earnest, and after getting some two or three inches deep—the proper depth for tracking turkeys—it would not stop, but kept on until we had some seven or eight inches of snow, and then it got bitter cold. The deep snow and bitter cold kept most of our turkey hunters at home; and those that did venture out, the writer being one, returned home completely worn out and unsuccessful. On a subsequent Sunday morning, when I got up, I found that a gentle rain and a south wind were making the snow disappear at a great rate, so I hunted up my friend Ferd and made arrangements for a turkey hunt on Monday, the next day.

We got started in reasonably good time, and found that the south wind was still blowing and the snow all gone from the south and east sides of the hills; but we knew there would be plenty for tracking purposes on the north and west sides of the ridges and in the hollows. About 10 o'clock we had put our horse up at a farmhouse near Hunton Ridge, the country we proposed to hunt; and, taking an old road through the woods, in less than twenty minutes we came upon the tracks of two turkeys that had been walking along the top of a pine ridge and having heard us had turned back into a pine thicket a couple of hundred yards away. We knew enough about turkeys to know that they had merely run into the thicket to hide and let us pass, and so, instead of following on the track, we separated to take each side of the thicket, hoping to catch one or both of them as they ran or flew out. In going along my side of the thicket, however, I soon came to the conclusion that I was getting too far away from the turkeys, so I entered the thicket and soon came upon the tracks of the turkeys where they had started to run, which indicated to me that I had pressed in too close to them and they had seen me and could not be far away. I dropped on my knees in the snow to look under the pines, which were much higher than my head, and immediately I heard the flop, flop, of a turkey getting up some forty yards away. I couldn't see it, but I at once heard the crack of Ferd's hammerless Parker as he sent an ounce and a quarter of No. 4 shot propelled by 3½ drams of American Wood powder after Mr. Turkey, and then I caught a glimpse, through the bushes, of a nice turkey about a hundred yards away, sailing down a hollow between two ridges, with both legs hanging down. I then knew that Ferd had hit it, and hit it hard, and that the chances were that if we found that turkey at all we would find it dead as a door nail. We saw nothing of the other turkey, but upon investigating its track found that it too had flown, though we had neither seen nor heard it.

Taking the direction of the flight of the wounded turkey, we set out on the hunt for it, and it proved a hunt I assure you. Along one ridge and over another, back up the other side and down another, then across to another ridge and up one side and down the other, until we thought we had tramped every foot of ground within a mile of where the turkey was shot, all the time looking closely into every little patch of laurel, every treetop and brush-heap, or any other place where a turkey might hide, and not a sign of either turkey or track did we find. We went back nearly to where the turkey was fired at and got down to our work again, for as we had crossed no track, we were satisfied the turkey had dropped dead, or badly wounded, and was just where, or nearly where, he had hit the ground. At last our perseverance was rewarded, for Ferd had the luck to come across his turkey, stone dead, within a yard of where its body first hit the snow. It had died in the air, and when its body hit the ground it bounced a yard without even a kick. It was a nice young gobbler that would weigh eleven or twelve pounds.

We set out then to try and strike the track of the other turkey. Up one steep ridge, and down another; alongside of one, and across another, until it seemed to us that that other turkey must have been a ghost, or had vanished into thin air, for no track could we find; and just here was the place for those legs to come in which Gaucho wrote about. Finally we met a party of four other hunters, and preferring to hunt where we did not have quite so much company, we set out for pastures new, first hiding the turkey Ferd had killed in a brush-heap near the road.

Taking a line of ridges next the creek, we followed it for two miles or more—that is, one would go ahead to the point and the other would drive the ridge—but not a thing, not even a fresh track was found, though we came across plenty of old tracks. Thinking we had gone far enough in that direction, we swung around to the left, bearing back toward our starting point and wagon. All this time there was a soft, damp, warm wind from the south, and whenever we struck a hollow we also struck an odor from an able-bodied skunk, that you could almost cut with a knife. We first struck this odor as we left the road, and for two miles or more it had been getting stronger and stronger, until finally, a little after we had turned east to bear back toward our wagon, it suddenly seemed to me almost overpowering; so much so that I was sure I was very near the fountain head, and I began to look carefully around for the gentleman that was causing all the unpleasantness. Finally I saw a long, lanky, mountain hunter, with a muzzle-loading gun, marching along the side of a ridge about a hundred yards away, who had swung over his back a fine, large, black and white animal of the cat species, and the gentle south wind was wafting from it a full-grown, able-bodied odor directly toward me. Quickly sheering out of range I ran into the fellow's partner, who had no cat, and we stopped a few minutes to compare notes. They had come in from the south, from a road five miles away, and had seen no signs of turkeys, and we, coming in from the north, two or more miles, having had the same experience, I concluded that the turkeys had sought some other grounds.

Going our respective ways I soon got separated from Ferd by an immense ridge, when I heard him calling me. I knew that he had jumped a turkey, or found a fresh track, and I made my way to him as quickly as I could. When I got to him I found that he had come across a turkey track and followed it until lost on the south side of a hill from which the snow had disappeared; and I also found that his calls had brought to him all four of the hunters we had tried to avoid earlier in the day. There was nothing else to do but for the whole crowd to scatter and hunt that turkey track, and we went at it, the whole six of us. I soon found the track, and while following it I made the most remarkable, in that it was the longest, shot I ever made in my life. However, my old hammer Parker, a true and tried friend of many years both in the field and at the trap, always did have a knack of tumbling something over now and then at surprisingly long distances. I was shooting 3¼ drams of Du Pont Smokeless and 1¼ ounces of No. 4 shot in a Blue Rival shell, a load liable to kill as far as will any load that can be put into a 12-bore gun, though I must confess it will make a 7½-pound gun jump at your shoulder a little angrily, and therefore I would advise anyone not to shoot such a load in a cheap grade gun. But to the shot. I was walking along on the side of a ridge, through a sparse growth of jack oaks not as high as my head. Below me was a deep hollow, and facing me, across the hollow, was a steep hillside also sparsely covered with small jack oaks, and from which the snow had all melted away. From this hillside several pheasants flushed, and pitching my gun to my shoulder and aiming about eight or ten feet ahead of the rear bird, I let drive and tumbled it over. A lucky shot had winged it, and it commenced walking slowly up the hill. Fearing it would get away and hide I fired two more shells at it without producing any impression whatever, so far as I could see. I shot no more, simply because, although the bird was not ten feet farther from me than it was when I winged it in the air, it looked to me to be entirely too far away to be killed by any 12-bore shotgun on earth. The bird walked only a few feet up the hill and hid under a log. I stood still to mark the spot, while Ferd, who did not see the shot, but had come to me, went over to retrieve the bird. When he got the bird he looked across to where I was, and with some astonishment wanted to know if I had tumbled the bird from where I then stood. I told him I did, and he declared it was a good hundred yards. I don't think it could have been that far, but will not strain my reputation for veracity by saying how far I thought [illegible] will say, however, that it was the longest [illegible] made.

The pheasant secured, we proceeded on the [illegible] track, soon finding where the bird took wing. [illegible] were too many men following that one turkey track me, and knowing of a ridge near by, over which the turkey was apt to go if started and not killed by any of [illegible] I pulled out to take a stand on that ridge, [illegible] here to follow the turkey, and telling Ferd [illegible] b[illegible] In a short time Ferd shook the other [illegible] ing my way, and we kept the stand a while, hoping the turkey might come along. While waiting there Ferd called my attention to a patch of laurel on a lower short ridge in front of us, and along the line we expected the turkey to take should he come our our way. He asked me if that was not the ridge the pheasants which I had flushed had flown to, and I told him I thought it was. He proposed that we go over there and try for a pheasant, mentioning the fact that we might stumble upon the turkey. On the way he flushed a pheasant, but was offered no shot. I was a little ahead and struck the small laurel thicket a little in advance of my companion. I had made but two or three steps into it when flop, flop, flop, out went a turkey about twenty yards away. I checke d it with my right, but remembered, when too late, that I was shooting No. 7 shot which I had put in for a pheasant, not expecting of running across a turkey. However, it collapsed in the air, and I then sent a load of number fours into it from my left barrel. Right there I made a mistake no turkey hunter ought ever to make, for without watching where my bird fell I turned to exult a little with Ferd over my luck, instead of reloading and going as quickly as I could to where my bird fell. But it had collapsed so completely in the air that I thought all I had to do was to go and pick it up. When I got to where it fell, my "feathers" fell also as I saw the turkey's tracks leading up the next ridge is a way that plainly showed that whatever condition his wings might be in, he was all right as to legs; and from the way he went he seemed to have a "good sound pair of well-put-together legs" too. We took that track on the run, for there are times on a turkey hunt when you must run, times when you must walk, and times when you must stand still. We passed several places showing that a broken wing had brought my turkey to grief, tumbling him over and over in the snow, but he lit on his feet running, every time. The track at last brought us to a small bunch of short pines in an open. Ferd ran around this and told me he was in there for he could see no track coming out. I pushed into the pines and came plump onto the bird, crouched by a stump. I tried to put my foot on it, but it was too quick for me and dodged and ran nearly as fast as a rabbit. I let it straighten out in an open, twelve or fifteen yards away, and downed it with a load in the head and neck.

We were satisfied; we had two turkeys and a pheasant and it was getting time to start for home; so shouldering my turkey and gathering up Ferd's on the way, we set out for our wagon and got home about dark well pleased with our day's hunt.

THE PROPOSED ILLINOIS GAME LAW

As we announced last week, President W. L. Shepard of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association and Game Warden Charles H. Blow presented the revised bill to the Illinois legislative committee on game and fish on Wednesday and argued the matter on Thursday. Mr. Shepard made an effective speech and he believes that he convinced the committee that the revised bill was the proper one to pass, but, in accordance with instructions, told the committee that the Illinois State Association would defer to the judgment of the committee in the matter of Section 4, so as to be just to all interests.

Game Warden Blow stated he thought the bill to be as good as it was possible to draft one and regretted that the revision had not been done before the legislature met, which would have prevented the hard feelings which had arisen. He stated he had faith in the intelligence of the committee, and if they changed the bill at all he hoped it would be to better it, but his belief was that game which was allowed to be killed should be allowed to be sold.

Chairman Halleck offered an amendment, which the committee thought well of, providing for a bounty of five cents per crow, fifty cents on each skunk and mink, one dollar per fox and twenty-five cents per hawk, as all these were great game destroyers.

President Shepard, who has worked hard to compromise conflicting interests and is working hand in hand with the AMERICAN FIELD in trying to protect the game of the country, believes the revised bill will pass.

The excitment over game law legislation has not ceased, and sportsmen throughout the country have been aroused as never before. We are not sorry for this, as we feel the atmosphere of sportsmanship will be purified by it and much good should result. Subjoined we publish a few more letters on the subject.

CHICAGO.

[illegible] FIELD:—I cannot let the discussion [illegible] game law be closed without add[illegible] [illegible]al condemnation which the pro[illegible] the hands of the sportsmen of [illegible], however, arises solely on account of that one apparently innocent little clause, "coming from the state of Illinois," found in Section 4 of the bill. Aside from these words the bill is very acceptable. There might be many changes made in the wording and grammatical construction of the bill, with advantage, but the substance of it, with the exception of the clause mentioned, is very good.

I am most heartily in favor of paying the game warden a good fair salary for his work and doing away with the fee system. I do not think the salary proposed in the bill is at all excessive. The wail about imposing an additional burden on the taxpayers is nonsensical and ridiculous. First, because the bill itself provides for the payment of the salary out of the game fund; second, because even if it didn't so provide, the "additional burden" would not be felt by the people of the state any more than the weight of a fly on a horse's broad back.

The objections raised that the proposed law permits the trapping and ensnaring of birds, and that it permits any person, without consent, to hunt upon the land of another, are absolutely untrue and without foundation, and I am surprised that such eminent jurists and men of integrity as Judges Kohlsaat, Sears and Carter, and the other eminent attorneys who signed the protest published in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 16, could have been induced to affix their names to such a palpably fraudulent and deceptive document. The protest says that the proposed law does not prohibit the sale of Illinois game. This is partially false and partially true, for the proposed law does prohibit the sale of Illinois game during the close season. The protest says that the proposed law will "probably" result in the exportation of game, although Section 14 expressly prohibits such exportation. It is in order for these eminent jurists to rise and explain.

I have also carefully read and considered the able editorial in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 16, and, if game must be sold during the close season, then, by all means, adopt some such plan as it suggests. But, for one, I desire to protest as emphatically as types will allow, against the sale of game at any time when it is unlawful to kill the same. Is it not enough that during three months of the year, or during four months, as under the proposed law, our markets can be flooded with game of all kinds, without making the law such that game can be sold all the year round? The game dealers are suddenly very vociferous in their loud voiced desire to protect the game. Whence comes this sudden change of heart. Let us sell game from other states and we will protect the game of Illinois, say they. Only to-day, Washington's Birthday, on South Water Street, I saw box after box of Wilson snipes and plovers. Why are these game birds exposed for sale after the close season has begun? Simply because their sale is not expressly prohibited by law. Does this look as though South Water Street men were very anxious to protect the game? How much reliance can be placed upon the promises of the dealers who are only prevented from violating the law by the activity of game wardens? How much relience can be placed upon the promises of these men who would sell game every month in the year if it were not for the strong hand of the law? See what a premium we are asked to place upon the market hunting and game law violating proclivities of irresponsible parties in other states. A man goes up into Dakota in August and, by trapping and netting, secures a thousand birds and manages to get them into Illinois and into the Chicago market, and then the South Water Street merchant has a right to sell them! Is this justice or equity? How long will it be before the states of Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and all other states bordering on our own, will pass laws licensing shooters from Illinois? And could we complain if they did so? Not at all; for are we not about to pass a law which will materially assist in depleting the game reserves of our sister states? The selfish doctrine that we have nothing to do with the game of other states except to go there and shoot it, is a boomerang which will undoubtedly return and vex the inexperienced thrower. It is not in accord with the broad-gauge, gentlemanly principles of the true sportsman.

In the able editorial above referred to, it is said, "necessity, the mother of invention, has conceived the cold storage warehouse, and the game, instead of rotting and being dumped, is put away in the cold storage room, there to remain indefinitely without a taint of decay, in consequence of which consigness will receive game consignments up to the last hour of the open season for the sale of game." The last eleven words are undoubtedly true, and that is why I object to them. They should not be true. Game dealers should have no right to do this. What is the difference whether the game is killed all the year round, or whether enough is killed during the open season to last all the year round? The result, with the exception of the interference with the game during the breeding season, is the same. The difference is not so great as it might seem to be, for no one is going to kill game while it is nesting or brooding, for the simple reason that it is not fit to eat at that time. To put it in figures. Suppose it takes 100,000 quails to supply the market of Illinois for one year. What difference does it make whether that number of birds are killed in the whole year, or whether they are killed during the open season and put in cold storage and used during the year? None at all. If there was no such thing as cold storage the dealers would be careful about loading themselves up with a commodity which would soon become unsalable. Let the sale of game be rigidly prohibited and the prohibition rigidly enforced, and game dealers will soon come to understand that they must buy carefully at the close of the season, so as not to have any on hand "to be dumped" or otherwise disposed of at a loss. Their pocketbooks will protect the game then. I have known the Hotel Coronado, at San Diego, Cal., to have as high as two thousand dozens of quails in their cold storage rooms at the close of the open season, together with innumerable ducks and geese. This is only one of the great hotels. Give them all the same privilege, and add to them the privilege of game dealers to store game and draw upon it as they need it during the close season, and our game will soon be as a story that is told. Again quoting from the editorial referred to: "If there is no market during the close season there will be no incentive for killing game for shipment." There is the milk in the cocoanut. There is the whole solution of the game question. If four months is long enough for sportsmen to shoot game, it is long enough for gourmets and millionaries to eat it. Wipe out the words "coming from the state of Illinois" and Game Warden Blow's bill is all right.

BEN HUR.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Being a non-resident of the state of Illinois I suppose any suggestions from me regarding Game Warden Blow's proposed game law would be considered out of place. However, I want to say that Mr. Blow's bill is a good one for the protection of game, and with the chief warden and eight deputies, backed by the funds accruing from its provisions, it would certainly be a wonderful improvement over the present law.

One point, and the only one, I think, that particularly concerns non-residents, is, that he discriminates between the club member and he who does not belong to an incorporated club in the matter of exportation (see Section 14). Section 7 permits anyone to take out a license to shoot, then why discriminate between them when it comes to carrying a few birds home? Is the club man entitled to anything more than any other sportsman, and is he to be allowed the exclusive privilege of bringing his birds across the bridge while his brother sportsman, and perhaps shooting companion, is compelled to empty his pockets, and perhaps pay a fine for attempting to bring home a few birds? I do not know why this favor is granted, unless it be that the club man is doing more to stir up animosity between country and city sportsmen than any and all others. The club man pays the trifling sum of from $5 to $25 a year, the most of which is expended in "necessary improvements," little, if any, of it going to the state or toward game propagation, goes out, trespasses upon everybody near him in getting to his grounds, and when he arrives there and finds a farmer boy in the act of shooting a duck, he has him arrested and fined to the extent of the law, while he goes on at his leisure, shooting on Sunday or any other time, "just shooting a few birds to work the puppies on," and eat in or out of season as he may fancy. And for all this he is to be allowed to carry his birds home under the clause: "Provided, that bona fide members of incorporated clubs owning or leasing preserves in Illinois shall be permitted to convey out of the state, on their own persons, for their personal use, game shot on their club grounds." No, sir; that is not right, and I do not believe Mr. Blow will, upon second thought, allow the bill to read thus, but substitute or amend it so as to read something like this: Provided, that holders of shooting licenses be permitted to convey out of the state, upon their own persons, game shot by them individually, for their personal use. If passed with this amendment the new law will receive a hearty welcome and a liberal support from all the better class of St. Louis sportsmen, let the license fee be what it may.

W. H. COTTON.

BURLINGTON, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I see that a bill has been introduced in the Illinois legislature, backed by the game dealers of Chicago, making the sale of game legal in Chicago during the entire year, provided that such game is not killed in the state of Illinois.

In relation to this section of the proposed bill I wish to express a thought or two. I speak for myself only when I state that, in my opinion, it would be unwise to pass such a law, for it would practically be offering inducements to the market-hunters to do their worst, and there would be no restriction to the number of birds killed or captured in one day. The privilege to shoot and kill without restraint too often results in useless slaughter and wanton waste of game. The number of birds that may be killed should be restricted, and such a law should be strictly adhered to. Another section of the proposed new law prohibits non-residents of the state of Illinois from hunting in that state without first obtaining a license. I have no doubt that if the validity of this section was taken to the higher courts it would be held to violate that part of the amendment to the constitution of the United States which declares that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall deprive a citizen of privileges or immunities of the United States. It should be our purpose to advocate the enactment of proper laws. Our game laws are defective and difficult to enforce because they have not been uniform in regard to the open and close seasons. The present proposed law will enable dealers and market-hunters to violate the law with impunity.

SCOTT.

DETROIT, MICH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I am in receipt of information that the legislature of Illinois has a bill before it to make legal the sale of game during the entire season in the city of Chicago, provided the game is not killed in the limits of the state. This is rank injustice, uncharitable, and a bid to all market-hunters and fishers to violate the laws of this state at any season, and it will be a severe blow to all protective leagues like ours, and we do most earnestly protest against the passage of any such bill, although our protesting may not do any good as we are not citizens of your state. This bill will do us, perhaps, one good turn, as we have a bill before our present legislature making the law more stringent, and I shall have the objectionable features of this bill used as a strong argument in favor of the passage of our bill, and I think it will help very much.

GEO. A. JOHNSON, Secretary.

ROCKFORD, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—We are all interested in the coming law on game, also on fish. I had written to Hon. C. H. Wholsey, member from here, and he called on me. He had talked with Hon. David Hunter, also from here, who is on the committee. He stated there is quite an excitement there, but does not think a bill will pass, allowing game to be sold only when it is allowable to kill it.

I showed him all the correspondence from other states printed in the AMERICAN FIELD, and he suggested that a great deal of good would result from the correspondence. I also called his attention to there being no law against using ferrets. He said he would bring it before the committee.

J. T. B.

McGregor, Ia.

Editor American Field:—I see the bill has been introduced in the Illinois legislature making it legal to sell game all the year round, so long as such game has not been killed in the state of Illinois.

Now, if this should become the law in Illinois, it would make it extremely difficult for other states to protect their game where it can be smuggled out and sold in an adjoining state at any season of the year. I wish the editor of the American Field would use the influence of his valuable journal to prevent the passage of this bill, as it would be the worst thing that could happen to sportsmen who are in favor of protecting game, if it should become a law.

Sam Northcott.

L. K. BUNTAIN

Chief Game Warden L. K. Buntain, of Dayton, O., whose portrait we this week present to the readers of the American Field, was born in Miami County, Ind., his boyhood being spent on the farm; but not satisfied with the life of a farmer, at the age of 18 he began teaching school, which occupation he followed until 1882, when he quit teaching and engaged in business.

In 1888 he was appointed Chief Game Warden of Ohio, which office he filled for two years, when, owing to a change in the administration of the state, he resigned; but in 1892 he was re-appointed and has served continuously ever since, making the state a most zealous and efficient officer.

In 1891, while acting as county warden, he attempted to arrest some parties who were violating the fish law by fishing after nightfall, and here it was that he demonstrated his courage and his fitness for the position of warden. The men he attempted to arrest not only pelted him with rocks, but drew their guns and fired at him a half dozen times, fortunately, though, without serious result. Mr. Buntain returned the compliment, firing four shots, three of which took effect. The other two men, seeing that he was determined to arrest them if it cost him their lives, surrendered, and all were loaded into a big wagon and taken to town, together with the big seine they were using.

Mr. Buntain is not only a good game warden, and an out and out sportsman, but also a good shot with both shotgun and rifle, enjoying greatly a day afield behind the faithful setter or pointer, a contest at the traps, or a tilt with a comrade at the rifle range. His percentage at the traps with the shotgun is about 90, while with the rifle he has made some excellent scores both at long and short range, and he says he feels perfectly at home in any company where the rifle is the weapon used. On the Creedmoor target, off hand, he has scored eight bullseyes out of ten shots, and in the contests in 1882 between the Dayton Rifle Club and the Cincinnati Rifle Club, he being a member of the former, he made the highest score of any man in either team on both occasions. His best score on the Massachusetts target, at 200 yards off hand, is 113 out of a possible 120, and on the same target at 25 yards, his top score was 590 out of a possible 600 points, making forty centers out of fifty shots. Last Summer, shooting with a muzzle rest at 200 yards, firing six consecutive shots, he placed all six balls so close together that a twenty-five cent piece would cover them all, while a nickel would cover all except one. The best score Mr. Buntain ever made with a rifle, off-hand, was made at Gallipolis, O. Firing twenty consecutive shots with a Stevens .22 caliber rifle, using globe and peep sights, he made twenty consecutive centers, the last five shots being so nearly in the same place that they could all be covered with the top of an ordinary lead pencil.

Mr. Buntain is a member of the Buckeye Gun Club, of Dayton, O., of the Sharpshooters' organization of the same city, and also a member of the Montgomery County Fish and Game Protective Association. He has been a constant reader of the American Field for sixteen years, and a contributor to its columns for nearly that length of time. That he is appreciated by the people of Ohio as a game warden is demonstrated by his long continuance in office and by the further fact that he has taught the people within his domain to respect the fish and game laws of the state.

THE FLIGHT OF MIGRATORY BIRDS TRENDS TO THE WEST

Sheridan, Ia.

Editor American Field:—In the notes in the American Field of February 2, the comment by C. H. K—, of Des Moines, Ia., that "the main flight of water fowl seems to be moving further west each year," suggests a few facts that I have particularly noticed in the last decade.

Some twenty-five years ago, when I was a lad, my people moved to Western Illinois, due west of Chicago, in Carroll County. To my great delight game abounded, especially wild ducks and geese, and other birds of the migratory class, and the many grand hunts I was privileged to enjoy for a number of years succeeding our locating in Carroll County are still the joy of a good memory. It took but a few years to note a gradual lessening of this mighty host in their semi-annual passage north and south, until in the space of ten short years the goose and duck were almost a thing of the past on those much-loved Mississippi Bottoms. Where had all these birds gone to? was the question that naturally suggested itself to my mind. It could not be that they were exterminated, even with the vast improvements in modern firearms, and so I concluded that, like the Anglo-Saxon race, their movement must be westward. In 1883 I moved from Savanna, Ill., to Holdrege, Neb., which place is situated 206 miles west of Omaha, on the main line of the B. & M. R. R. to Denver, and sixteen miles south of the Platte River, in Phelps County. To my delight I found I was in the line of flight again. For the first three years, Spring and Fall, mighty hordes of geese came to the Platte River, and in the morning and evening could be seen going into the corn and grain fields to feed. To try to make any computations of numbers would be utterly useless, and I am afraid if I should attempt to do so many of the readers of the American Field would doubt my veracity. After that time there was a noticeable decrease, especially in the Fall flight, and now it has ceased almost altogether, and the Spring flight is not the one-hundredth part of what it used to be. Several times I have, in my business, made trips to the western part of the state, and I find that the main flight of these birds is now west of Gothenburg, or between that place and Ogallala; and, as near as I can figure, the flight is shifting west at the rate of about fifteen miles per year.

At Wallace, on the B. & M., where geese feed plentifully, the Canada goose is now almost alone, that grand fellow being the pioneer. Only during the last year or two has the snow goose been shot in that locality. When the shooting was at its best it was an easy matter to locate their feeding grounds and get from ten to twenty geese at a morning or evening shoot.

L. K BUNTAIN,
Chief Game Warden of Ohio

The foregoing facts would seem to prove that game of that kind is gradually moving in advance of civilization to the westward, as we who have been left in the wake of this fine sport must fully realize. There are perhaps others who can fully corroborate my statements along this line, and it would be a pleasure, to me at least, to hear from them.

THE PROPOSED MISSOURI GAME LAW

The special House committee of fifteen appointed by the Missouri legislature to revise and amend the game law of that state has agreed upon the following as a substitute for all pending bills. The substitute is to be given precedence and a strong effort will be made to secure its passage at an early date:

Section 1. It is hereby declared unlawful to kill any deer in the state of Missouri under one year of age. It is further declared unlawful to kill any deer of any age between the first day of January and the first day of October in each year; and for the purpose of preventing the extinction of the species it is hereby declared unlawful to kill any doe within five years after the passage of this act. It is further declared unlawful to kill any wild song bird or insectivorous bird at any season of the year, or to disturb, rob or destroy the nests of such birds, or take therefrom any egg or eggs. It is further declared unlawful to kill any wild turkey, pinnated grouse (commonly called prairie chicken), or ruffed grouse (commonly called pheasant or partridge), or any quail (sometimes called Virginia partridge), between January 1 and November 1 of each year, or any woodcock, turtle dove, meadowlark or plover between January 1 and August 1 in each year. And it is further declared unlawful at any time or season to catch, take or injure, by means of nets, traps, pens or pits, or other device, any kind of game as herein described within this state; and every person who shall kill any wild duck between the first day of April and the first day of October, or who shall ensnare, trap or kill by means of any explosive any wild goose or duck, or who shall shoot or kill the same in the night time by means of gunp[illegible] explosives of any kind, shall be guilty of [illegible] Provided, that the provisions of this sec[illegible] ply to any person who shall ensnar[illegible] geese or ducks on his own premises for [illegible] any person offending against any of t[illegible] section shall be deemed guilty of a mis[illegible] ab-ject to a fine of not less than $10, nor more than $50.

Sec. 2. The constables of the several townships in the counties of this state are hereby declared to be ex-officio game wardens, and are charged with the duty of prosecuting all violators of the preceding section, and shall receive for their services the same fees as are now allowed prosecuting witnesses in such cases, in addition to their regular fees.

NOTES

The First Annual Sportsmen's Exposition, which is to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York, May 13 to 18, is attracting the attention of sportsmen throughout the world. The exhibition is given under the auspices of the Sportsmen's Association, incorporated by the state of New York, of which Mr. Charles Tatham is president. The board of trustees comprises Messrs. Charles Tatham, J. Von Lengerke, J. A. H. Dressel, Charles Daly, Jacob H. Studer, P. G. Sanford, Frederic S. Webster, John S. Wise and Archibald Rogers. The scope of the field is broad and the managers have made strenuous efforts to include among the exhibits everything connected with sports of all kinds. There can be little doubt that the result will justify their efforts, and that a thorough inspection of the various departments of the exhibits will prove an education in the comprehensiveness of the term sports. No similar exposition has ever been held in this country, and the fact that the long list of the names of those who have engaged spaces for exhibits includes the largest manufacturers of and dealers in sporting implements and goods akin thereto is evidence of the widespread interest the scheme has excited. As to the multiplicity of the exhibits, in short, they will include a magnificent display of everything appertaining to sports, mounted and living specimens of North American game animals, cycloramic groups of camp life and hunting scenes, log cabins and hunter's camps showing the life of the sportsman, paintings, books, etc. None who may be connected with the trade can afford to be left out in this comprehensive gathering; and those desiring further information should address Frederic S. Webster, Secretary, 106 E. Twenty-third Street, or Frank W. Sanger, Manager, Madison Square Garden, New York City.

On February 7, there appeared in one of our daily papers advertisements of two restaurants offering to serve partridges (quails) to their customers. This is a violation of our game laws, which are broken every day because there is no association to enforce them. The writer showed the advertisements to two friends, and we agreed then and there to at once form a state game protective association. We got others interested and a meeting of all citizens interested in protecting game and enforcing the laws now on our statute books was called for Tuesday, March 5, at the Carrollton Hotel, Baltimore. The call went out signed by some of Maryland's best citizens. From the interest manifested in our state since the subject has been ventilated by our daily papers, I believe we will have a large and enthusiastic meeting. In one county (Montgomery), the farmers have met and appointed a committee to represent them at the meeting. The cases referred to above are not the only ones where our game laws are broken. No longer ago than February 21 an "Arab" came into my office and offered me a dozen partridges. I did not see the birds, but know I could have had them in about two minutes if had told him I would buy them. One of our largest clubs, I am informed, has on a its menu "short bills." In view of these fact our sportsmen think it about time something was done to protect game in our state. On March 5 we hope to inaugurate a new president, not of the United States but of the Maryland State Game Protective Association.

Baltimore, Md. L. M. Levering.

Report reaches us from New Jersey that the Baker bill, consol'dating the game laws of that state, fixes the following as the open seasons: Deer, buck, doe or fawn, October 15–25, penalty of $100; hares, rabbits, quails, pheasants, gray, black or fox squirrels or woodcocks, October 31 to December 15, penalty of $20; gray snipes, reedbirds, railbirds, or marsh hens, August 31 to December 15; upland plovers and doves, August 1 to September 30; insectivorous birds not to be killed at any time under a penalty of $20; the same penalty for robbing birds' nests. It is made unlawful to hunt geese, ducks, brants or other web-footed wild fowl by placing the boat or sink box in which the hunter lies in wait more than a hundred feet from marsh or meadow not covered by water at high tide, and except between one hour before sunrise and one hour after sunset. No boat can be used propelled by any means except oars or paddles. The [illegible] son is between August 31 and April 10. It is [illegible] lawful to take any fish except by rod and line, [illegible] eels may be caught by wicker eel baskets, and [illegible] and carp may be speared, and minnows caught for [illegible] Black bass and Oswego bass may be caught between M[illegible]

30 and December 1; brook trout between April 1 and July 15. Black bass measuring less than nine inches in length [illegible] measuring less than six inches not to be taken. [illegible] lawful to use set lines for pickerel, black [illegible] trout, or to take brook trout through [illegible]

Mr. B. F. Seitner, of Dayton, Commissioner of Fish and Game of Ohio, made the American Field a pleasant visit last Tuesday, and in commenting on the game laws of the different states remarked that every state ought to have a fish and game commission, the members to be appointed by the governor, consisting of an odd number, and of different political beliefs. Each state should be divided into districts, and one commissioner for each district. The commission should have the entire charge of fish and game matters,should appoint a paid chief fish and game warden, and a deputy warden for each county. In this way the whole state would be patrolled and the fish and game protected. The commission should have full power to propagate fish and game and set aside preserves, and all fines for violations of the laws should be turned into a fish and game fund. Mr. Seitner stated, also, that many states were making a big mistake by incorporating in the game laws a trespass section, for the reason that game wardens should not act as police for private property. The trespass law should be a separate state law, and if a farmer finds anyone violating it he has the same right to arrest the trespasser as any constable, and if he does not catch him in the act he can procure a warrant for his arrest after the fact. Mr. Seitner does not believe any warden would arrest a man seen on someone's land, as he is not supposed to know who has that right; his duty is to arrest illegal shooters.

The Bangor and Aroostook Railroad, of Maine, which was opened to the public for traffic in 1894, passes through the wildest of the eastern region of Maine; a section known previously only to explorers and hunters. It is a conceded fact that no state in the Union holds out such attractions to lovers of the rod and gun as Maine does, and among all sections of Maine, Aroostook County, the eastern end of which the Bangor and Aroostook Railroad traverses, now holds the palm as a hunting and fishing resort. The remoteness of her beautiful lakes, their seclusion and wilderness solitude, give them a peculiar charm. In evidence of the claim made that it is a paradise of game, the records of the large game shipped over the Bangor and Aroostook Railroad during the three months of the open season of 1894 show that 1,061 deer, 50 caribou and 45 moose were the results of visits of sportsmen to the section of country reached by this system. The greatest number shipped from any one point was 400 deer, 7 caribou and 6 moose from Norcross. In addition there was shipped over the Moosehead Division of this railroad 125 deer, 12 moose and 3 caribou.

There was recently a lively controversy in the California legislature over the new game law proposed by the Assembly Committee on Fish and Game. This proposed new law provided for the tearing down of all fences inclosing club preserves, which would throw the preserves open to all, and, as the committee argued, "give the man who could not wear diamonds the same chance at the game of the state as those had who were members of clubs." The club men and their friends fought this section of the bill vigorously, but there is such a strong feeling in many sections of the state against the preserve system that it is doubtful if the passage of the bill can be prevented, The clubs argue that the bill is unconstitutional, but there is a widespread belief that the salt-water marsh lands belong to the state, which can make laws concerning them, and that where these lands are now held by private parties the state can recover them by the proper legal course.

I see in my last American Field that someone advocates the use of two or three cardboards in a charge of shot to make an open pattern with a full choke gun. The theory is good enough, but when you put it into practice it does not work satisfactorily. In the first place the cardboard wads make but very little difference in the spread of shot, whether you place the wads horizontally in shot or leave them out. With a full choke gun that I have, I can blow a bird almost to pieces at from fifteen to eighteen yards, either with wads or no wads in shot charge. I have tried all the so-called shot spreaders, but they do not fill the bill. Pieces of cardboard placed lengthwise in a charge of shot will make it spread, but will leave the center of pattern barren. In fifteen years' shooting I have learned that the only really good game gun is one with the right barrel cylinder bore and left barrel modified or full choke.

Randolph, N. Y. O. J. Penrose.

The Duck Shooters' League is the name of a new organization perfected recently at Detroit, Mich., the object of [illegible] the bill now before the Michi[illegible] preventing duck shooting in the [illegible] is on record as favoring Spring [illegible] C. Sterling, John Parker and [illegible] the league, were appointed a committee to visit Lansing and work to prevent the passage of the bill mentioned above. The officers of the league are as follows: President, Dr. J. J. Vallade, Newport; vice-president, W. C. Sterling, Monroe; secretary-treasurer, John Parker. The league claims that the bill which it is so strenuously opposed to was gotten up in the interest of wealthy clubs that own large areas of marsh lands where duck shooting is splendid in the Fall of the year.

Members of the Capital City Gun Club of Washington, D. C., contemplate making an effort to get Congress to enact a law providing for a game warden for the District of Columbia, requiring all dealers in game in the district to be licensed, giving the power to inspect premises and cold storage places where game may be illegally stored, to have the open season on quails begin on November 15 or December 1, and to prevent the sale or use of quails after January 15. It is believed that more game is used in the city of Washington out of season, through the instrumentality of the cold storage houses, than is used there during the open season, and it is the desire of those interested in the preservation of game and the observance of the game laws of the country that a stop be put to this encouragement of the market-hunter and the game law violator.

Turkeys are scarcer round here this year than usual, owing to the immense number of them killed and shipped for the last few years. I tried to stop that, and with some success, by having a law passed absolutely prohibiting the shipping of game out of the county. Pheasants are about as usual, not plenty, but still some. The same law, mentioned above, prohibited the killing of quails for the year 1894 and until November 1, 1895, which law has been observed to some extent, with the result of many nice full bunches being left over, which may give us some nice shooting next Fall, if they get through the Winter all right. The past two weeks have been hard on them, and unless soft weather and a thaw come soon, a great many will go under. We are hoping for the best.

Winchester, Va. Tax.

On February 19 I visited our state capitol and listened to the arguments pro and con in the Senate on our new bill for game protection, the principal feature of which is a state game warden with a salary of $1,200 per year and expenses not to exceed $1,000 per year. The objection to this bill, principally by populist members, was that costs for prosecutions and imprisonments would accrue to the state, and for that reason they would not support it. They said that if it could be made self-supporting they would vote for it. A committee report was voted on and resulted in a tie and the bill was allowed to be referred back to the committee again where a fifty cent gun tax was inserted to make it practically self-supporting, and it is the opinion of the writer that it will now pass.

Beresford, S. D. J. N. Wass.

At a recent largely attended meeting of the farmers of Sussex County, N. J., to discuss the game laws of that state, the measure in the proposed new game law providing for the appointment of game wardens, giving them power to make arrests, was vigorously condemned. Among the changes suggested in the law were that rabbits be excluded from protection and that a fine of $25 be imposed upon persons hunting or fishing on the property of another without consent. A committee was appointed to place a report of the meeting in the hands of the senator and assemblyman from Sussex, and request them to urge the passage of the measures proposed.

In the Oregon Legislature an amendment to the present game law has been introduced and favorably reported on by the committee to which it was referred. The amendment provides for the repeal of sections one, two and three of the present law, which prohibits the sale or purchase for shipment outside of the county where killed of any quails, pinnated grouse or prairie chickens and provides penalties therefor.

Mr. S.F. Fullerton, of Duluth, has been appointed as executive officer of the Minnesota State Fish and Game Commission, to succeed Mr. W. P. Andrus. Mr. Fullerton's appointment, it is said, is largely due to the efforts of the St. Louis County Fish and Game Protective Association and also to Mr. Fullerton's efficient work during the last six months in enforcing the game law in his portion of the state.

I take great interest in the American Field. I appreciate the fact it has done more for the protection of our fields and streams than any other enterprise. It is truly refreshing to read a work of this magnitude that treats both sides of this popular question without prejudice. Continue in your good work, and may success crown your efforts.

Prairie du Chien, Wis. J. P. Barnum.

A report from East Orange, N. J., says that Messrs. Lewis G. Mitchell and Harmon W. Cropsey have purchased 1,500 acres of land in the mountains of North Carolina which they propose to stock with game for private shooting. There are now some deer on the land but they intend to increase the supply and also to add a variety of game to the preserve.

It is said that the game laws of Minnesota are being flagrantly violated in the vicinity of Lake of the Woods, where deer and moose abound. A Duluth gentleman who recently returned from that vicinity says that hundreds of these animals have been killed in open violation of the law, one man killing as many as seventeen on one trip.

THE AMERICAN FOXHOUND

Louisville, Ky.

Editor American Field:—I have read the recent strictures upon the standard adopted by the Nationa Fox-Hunters' Association, and championed by Dr. Heffenger, and criticized by Mr. Wade, Mr. Fellows and Mr. Muss-Arnolt. The latter gentlemen contend that the old-fashioned hound, of which Mr. Kinney's Ned is a type, should be placed upon the pedestal sacred to the typical American hound, and that the hound of to-day should be bred to conform to the characteristics of the old gray-fox dog of our grandfathers. As Mr. Fellows makes a point of personal privilege in his objection to Dr. Heffenger expressing an opinion, let the personnel of this self-constituted triumvirate of authorities be considered. Mr. Fellows claims that he "hunted foxes and knew what a foxhound was before Dr. Heffenger was born." I can believe it, and believe too that the type of hound he advocates to-day is the same as he hunted with in the antediluvian past. Mr. Wade, who I believe sold Ned to Mr. Kinney, has long been recognized as the foremost advocate of this type; he was associated with myself and others upon the committee which formulated the much abused standard, and he fought a fair fight for his ideals, not by personal vituperation, nor by boasting of his own pedigree and his title by accident of birth to dictate terms to every other American foxhound breeder, but by standing up manfully and logically for his own opinions and showing himself to be a man who is not hide-bound or bigoted but open to conviction. I quote from a letter of recent date in which he says: "It is fully eighteen and perhaps twenty years since I saw hounds run, and maybe I've been sitting still dreaming over the past while the hound world has gone on far ahead of me and left me stranded on the mud banks of old times." I submit these words to the thoughtful consideration of Mr. Fellows in his moments of retrospection.

Mr. Muss-Arnolt challenges his own fitness by admitting that he "never ran any hounds nor owned a pack, having neither the means nor the location, and his hobby having for the last seven years been the pointer." I enter a plea in bar to Mr. Muss-Arnolt sitting in judgment upon the work of lifelong fox-hunters and breeders, and dictating to them upon what lines their foxhounds shall be bred to attain excellence in field quality.

Let me now consider the personnel of the committee which drafted the much abused standard. It was composed not of admirers of any one type but of men of ripe fox-hunting experience from various sections. They were Messrs. W. Wade, Roger Williams, Dr. Heffenger, W. S. Walker, Hayden C. Trigg, Willis Goodman and your humble servant. Thoroughly comprehending the onerous and responsible nature of the task, actuated by no selfish motives, having no wares to bring to market, prompted solely by their interest in the future of the American foxhound, after seeking all the light obtainable by correspondence with the most prominent fox-hunters in the country, and desirous of formulating a standard, not for one little hill section of Steuben County, but for the whole country, the majority of the committee, having the opinion of those who were not able to be present, met at my hunting lodge near this city in March, 1894. They were practical fox-hunters and foxhound breeders who had hunted in every section of the United States, and after a lifetime devoted to the sport they certainly were better judges of the requirements of a foxhound than the self-constituted authority who never ran or owned a hound. They brought their hounds with them and devoted one entire week to the consideration of the standard with intervals of practical demonstration of their ideas in the field. Mr. Roger Williams was the only member present who had ever had any connection with dog shows, and he is conceded to be one of the best authorities and most successful exhibitors of foxhounds in the country. The others were interested in the standard entirely with reference to securing qualities that a lifetime of experience had taught them insured supremacy in the pursuit of the wily red fox. Willis Goodman's name has been given to a strain that has been tested in many states.

Squire W. S. Walker and his brothers E. H. and A. K. Walker have established a strain that is, without hyperbole, known from Maine to Mexico; wherever the Walker hounds are found to-day they are of the distinct Kentucky type, uniform in build and in the indomitable qualities which have carried them to the front whether running the gray wolves of Michigan pineries, the red foxes of the blue grass state, or the coyotes of the Texas plains.

Mr. Fellows says: "In every county south of New York they have what they call a 'strain,' and it is a great strain on one's constitution to read what they say about the various strains, Walker, Goodman, July, etc., strains that can all beat the world on paper." Neither Mr. Fellows nor any other man ever saw one line in print or ever heard one word fall from the lips of Squire Walker or his brothers boasting of their own foxhounds or belittling another man's. But wherever fox-hunters have met within the last decade to try the merits of their hounds—at the Brunswick trials in New England snows, at the N. F. H. A. meet in the blue grass state, at the interstate trials, and at the big Texas meets—wherever there was work to do and honor to be won, there the Walker hounds have been to try conclusions with all comers. They have been hunted with the most famous packs of every state and section, but the Walkers have never run their hounds up and down the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD; they have never "blown their own horns" through its pages, or sought to raise the reputation of their hounds by besmirching those of another man; they are the Bayards of the American hunting field—"sans peur, sans reproche."

Hayden C. Trigg, a gentleman of the old school, chivalrous and high-minded, showed the metal of which he was made at Olympia, where, his shoulder having been dislocated by a fall one evening, he was in the saddle the next morning but one acting as judge and oblivious to the pain he suffered while riding to hounds. He hunted with Colonel Birdsong in Georgia more years ago than he cares to recall, and in that past to which Mr. Fellows lays exclusive claim he had already cast aside the old type as powerless to cope with the red fox and had laid the foundation for a strain of fast foxhounds, perpetuating that pre-potent blood which is known throughout the South as Birdsong and July, and which was as superior to the old-gray-fox foxhound as the railroad of to-day is ahead of the old-fashioned stage coach.

Just so far is Mr. Fellows behind the times, and just so far will his old-fashioned hounds remain behind the red fox. So long ago did Kentucky fox-hunters accomplish what Mr. Fellows says he never expects to accomplish—the breeding of a foxhound that could fairly outfoot and run down a red fox—that he will force us to believe that like an esteemed fellow citizen of his—that first love of American fiction, the lazy, liquor-loving Rip Van Winkle—he has slept these twenty years or more.

If Mr. Muss-Arnolt desires the preservation of the old-fashioned foxhound because the type fills his artistic eye and because it is homogeneous to the soil let it be done; not, however, by proclaiming it to be the typical American foxhound to which every breeder must make his hounds conform, but by preserving it in museums of antiquity among extinct mastodons and other indigenous relics of the past to which the type has already been relegated by the practical fox-hunters of to-day. He might as well ask us to abandon the modern self-binder and resort to the cradle and scythe of our ancestors.

In his eulogism of Ned Mr. Fellows says that hounds at shows can be known as American hounds by their similarity in type to Ned, and suggests looking at a picture of Ned. I have seen Ned in the flesh and, what is more to the purpose, in the field. I know him and knew him well at first sight. In him I recognized an old acquaintance. He might have been one of my grandfather's old gray-fox dogs come to life, with which we hunted when I wore kilts and rode to hounds behind the old man's saddle. I looked in the list of entries and therein found inscribed, "Ned, breeding unknown." This is the history of most of his type. We have them here still in the backwoods, long lop-eared, long-mouthed and slow, and the extent of their pedigree is "out of Jim Jones' bitch by one of his dogs." If Ned is a great foxhound and the peer of Logan (who is a red-fox foxhound of the modern stamp and no back number) he failed to show it at Olympia. I had a hound in the same section of the state which hunted Ned to a standstill and which was enumerated first among the hounds of that section to be continued in the finals—the only award made by the judges at those trials—and yet I know that hound is far and away from filling the requirements of the American foxhound standard, and I hope that I will never reach that point where I cannot recognize merit in one of my own foxhounds without becoming blind to its defects. In that is the death of progress and development.

This is an era of progress. The old gray-fox foxhound has outlived its usefulness, and the new standard was made for a more modern, an improved, a better type of foxhound, the superior of the old in every requirement of the chase.

FRANCIS J. HAGAN.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—When I wrote an article for your paper in defense of the American foxhound and the national standard it was with the conviction that right should be maintained, even at the risk of bitter personal assault, so I was prepared for the recent attacks in the AMERICAN FIELD.

The odor of burnt powder has a fascination for me, and honorable warfare is an exhilarating pastime when waged in a just cause, but the national standard needs no further defense from anyone. All fair-minded, progressive hunters who have carefully studied it will see that it provides for as nearly a perfect hound for American work as could be conceived. It not only provides a hound with a beautiful head and lithe and powerful body but insures a definite type, and if it is closely followed our hounds throughout the length and breadth of this fair land will finally look alike and work alike; a thing heretofore unknown.

I seem to have been misunderstood in my statement regarding the infusion of outside blood. I was speaking of the so-called native hound of English extraction, and meant the infusion of foxhound blood other than that of English source. There are several definite types of French foxhounds, quite different in character and type from the old south of England (so-called native) and the modern English hound. Out-crosses of other than foxhound blood should not be tolerated. The foxhound, being a composite animal of comparatively recent date, still exhibits some physical marks of the breeds from which he came, but these marks under careful breeding are being gradually eliminated. The bloodhound side of his ancestry shows strongest prepotency, and wrinkled face, long ears and loose throat still disfigure many otherwise fine hounds. These features give the bloodhound his stupid expression and clumsy aspect, and should be strongly discountenanced in the foxhound. That a resemblance is often noticed between the foxhound and the pointer is not to be wondered at when it is remembered that the English pointer was bred from the foxhound and the old Spanish pointer.

In all communities there are some people who cannot emerge from the past, who cry out against any improvement, and who endeavor to stop the wheels of progress by abuse and personal invective. But in spite of these obstructionists the modern enlightenment goes on, and Rip Van Winkle will return to Sleepy Hollow and harmlessly doze away his few remaining years in innocuous desuetude.

I have been accused of knownothingism, of which nothing is further from my principles. I admit that personal nationality has no right part in this discussion, and regret that it ever should have been brought forward.

There is one point brought forward by the opposition which deserves careful consideration, and that is the impartial testing of the best strains of modern English hounds bred in this country. I confess to having been prejudiced against the hounds I have seen imported during the last ten years on account of their great size and lumber, but recently I have had reason to think the matter over again. Mr. W. S. Walker, of Kentucky—than whom there is no better foxhound man in America—assured me while here in January that his imported Strive, from the Eglinton pack, was superior in every point of work to his hounds, that he easily held the trail on them, and that his only fault was a poor voice. To anyone who knows Mr. Walker's hounds, this achievement will seem a wonder. Mr. E. H. Walker has a bitch, Relish, from the same kennels; she is only 20½ inches, yet can foot up to any of the leaders and is a fine all-round foxhound. Mr. Noel E. Money, of Oakland, N. J., has two fine hounds in Songster, from the Belvoir pack, and Mermaid, from the Quorn, and both of these hounds are models of physical excellence and beauty and exhibit an exceedingly high order of all-round field work. While vigorously maintaining that the hound of the national standard will prove the best for all the various sections and conditions of our country, I hope the best of these modern English hounds will be honestly tested by practical hunters all over the United States and Canada, for there may be many localities where they [illegible] the most desirable.

In conclusion I will quote the words [illegible] of Oakmont, Pa., who has been [illegible] most uncompromising opponents of [illegible] can hound, but in concluding a recent article says: "But I cannot avoid the suspicion that I am a bit of an 'old fogy.' It is fully eighteen, and perhaps twenty, years since I saw hounds run, and maybe I've been sitting still, dreaming over the past, while the hound world has gone on far ahead of me and left me stranded on the mud-banks of old times."

Fish and Fishing

LETTERS TO JACK—NO. 4

HANDY CAMP, Lake Superior, June 6, 1894.

DEAR OLD JACK:—I would give considerable to have you here to see this camp on the Mesquatawanga River, for, if you would not say it is a "handy camp," I'm away off in my judgment.

When we reached here last Monday we found that the fire had swept away everything. On both sides of the river only a dreary, blackened waste met our view. We thought we would have to pitch our tent amid blackened logs, burnt trees and ashes. But a little clump of green firs, right where the river empties into the lake, attracted my attention. We went there and found a little spot, about eight feet by twelve, that the fire had not touched. We cleared it and set up our tent in an ideal place. Close around the tent stand the fir trees, completely shading it; on one side not ten feet away is the great lake; one step from the front is the river bank; three steps down and we are by the water; on a shelf of rock we have our fire and do our cooking and eating. It is the only camp I ever was in where I could sit and take the coffee pot from the fire, dip cold water from the river, reach wood from the bank, prepare, cook and eat a meal and then wash the dishes, all without rising from my seat unless I chose to do so.

'Tis an ideal camp and I do not know but it should be named "Camp of Encouragement to Laziness." But 'tis so handy to everything, even trout, that we feel obliged to call it Handy Camp. Just think, Jack, of standing not two yards from the tent door, on the ledge which is kitchen and dining-room, and landing a two-pound trout. That is what Stephens did yesterday, and we have caught all we want of smaller ones; although they are not rising freely, owing, I suppose, to the ashes in the water. We have not had the success we anticipated on this account.

Monday afternoon we went up the trail that goes to a lake six miles back. We went only about two miles, then came back, down the river, fishing all the way, but no large trout did we get. Yesterday morning there was quite a heavy swell on, but we concluded to go exploring a little, down the lake, to where we remembered seeing some islands three years ago when here. We rowed along the shore begirt with seamed rocks, trying our lures at many a likely place but caught no fish. We went out around one island against the outer wall of which the great waves came dashing, and our little boat seemed like a feather on those mighty swells.

As we moved around into quieter waters a canoe came along in which were two Indians and a squaw. The canoe was one of the finest I have ever seen—beautifully ornamented with a high carved bow and stern. We exchanged salutations and they went on their way, the canoe riding the big waves like a duck.

We returned to camp and after dinner went a couple of miles up the Grand Marais trail to the camp of a couple of prospectors who are sinking test pits for silver. We had a pleasant visit with them, returned to camp and stood by our tent and fished or sat and read—

> Till the shadows pointing eastward
> Lengthened over field and forest;
> Till the sun dropped from the heaven,
> Floating on the water westward,
> As a red leaf in the Autumn
> Falls and floats upon the water.

Then we built a fire and cooked supper, and such a supper, Jack; I wish you could have eaten it with us.

As it grew dark I took the boat and crossed the river. Looking back I saw a picture of wondrous charm. In the foreground was the dark, dark river, lighted here and there by flashes of firelight; at the water's edge was the fire, and in its glare stood Stephens, looking so picturesque and statuesque that I longed for a kodak to take him; beside him the tent showed dusky white against the [illegible] background of fir trees, while a little to the [illegible] white-capped waves came in with a sullen roar. I'll never forget that scene.

As soon as I get this written we are to break camp and start for Chicago Bay. It seems a pity, for we'll not get things so handy again. Good-bye. Your outing chum.

STEAMER BARKER, LAKE SUPERIOR, June 8, 1894.

DEAR JACK:—We're homeward bound. We have just finished packing everything. Stephens lies at the back side of the berth, while I am sitting on the [illegible], trying to get my scattered [illegible] last two days together and write you. Are we [illegible] have any trout? Well, yes; there are eighty-two nice brook trout down on the lower deck, packed in ice, of which you shall have your full share. We caught them all this forenoon. I never had such trout fishing in all my life.

We left Handy Camp yesterday morning and had gone but a short distance up toward Chicago Bay when the wind began to blow and the waves to roll, in a way that made us a little anxious about the safety of our overloaded canvas boat. We battled along for a couple of miles and then were obliged to run in shore, on the farther side of Washington Bay. We could go no farther until the wind went down, so we put up a lunch, left everything there on the beach and took the trail for the creek. It was a good walk but we enjoyed it, although a bitter disappointment awaited us at the creek. Not a trout would rise. We went on and on, up through the cañon, and still up, amid surroundings wildly beautiful. At length Stephens said:

"Let's quit fishing and climb up on that hill yonder and 'view the landscape o'er.'"

Leaving our rods by the creek we started, and after a sharp climb reached the summit, where

Rocking on the cliff was left
The dark pine, blasted, bare and cleft.

We stood there a long time, taking in the wondrous scene. We descended on the opposite side, intending to reach the creek some distance above where we left the rods. We reached the creek by descending an almost perpendicular wall of rock. Going down-stream we soon found ourselves under a great, overhanging wall of rock at least seventy-five feet high, and confronted by a fall about thirty feet in sheer descent. At our side was the stream, swift-flowing, and beyond it the side wall of the cañon rose so nearly perpendicular that we could see small chance of getting out that way. We were amid surroundings like the man of whom Whittier writes—

Close to the verge of the rock is he,
While beneath him the Saco its work is doing,
Hurrying down to its grave—the sea—
And slow through the rock its pathway hewing;
Far down through the mist of the falling river,
Which rises up like incense ever,
The splintered points of the crags are seen
With water howling and vexed between,
While the scooping swirl of the pool beneath
Seems an open throat with its granite teeth.

How were we to get out? We did not like the thought of retracing our steps all the hot and weary way by which we came. At last Stephens said:

"You see that little ledge over on the other side? I think by taking a running jump we can clear the stream, get our feet on that, catch the rocks up above there, and wriggle up somehow."

I looked at the other side rather doubtfully. A miss, either of hand or foot, meant going over the falls. That great, black pool down there did not look inviting, and there were several savage-looking rocks sticking out of the slowly swirling water that I feared would not deal any too gently with me if I went down head first. We decided to try the running jump. Stephens took his chance first. He cleared the stream and landed on the ledge all right, hung there for a moment, and then slowly wormed himself upward. I took my run and jump landing all right, but as I hung there for a moment, before starting to climb up, I felt a little queer as I looked down sidewise into the abyss below.

We made it all right, however, and descending to the stream some distance below the pool and falls, came back and ate our lunch under the great o'erhanging rock at the side of the falls, in the cool gloom, with the roar and dash of the waters about us. We went on, down-stream, picking up one quarter-pound trout on the way.

We went to the fisherman's house and arranged for him to go around in his dory, get us and our dunnage and take us to Chicago Bay. Then we took the trail back to where we left our boat and outfit.

We cooked and ate a good dinner, then went out on the rocks to try for trout. I had just made a cast when Stephens said:

"There comes the man with the boat!"

So we hurried back and in a few minutes more were in the dory, towing the canvas boat, on our way to Chicago Bay. It was dusk when we reached the landing, so we did not put up our tent, but made our bed on the floor of a vacant house and slept soundly until morning.

About seven o'clock we started up the stream, and what a time we did have for about three hours. From every pool we took trout which were the most brilliantly colored ones I ever [illegible]ught. It seemed to make no difference [illegible]ure or bait—light fly, dark fly, [illegible]on [illegible]h and all were taken with equal [illegible] my large creel was nearly full [illegible]ier the weight of the fishes, I "Let's stop and go back."

Stephens agreed and we returned. Then the question was, what shall we do with the fishes? We counted eighty-two, many of them grand fellows in size and color. While we were debating, the steamer whistled.

"I move we go home," said Stephens; "we've made the biggest catch we ever have, and if we get on this boat we can get all of these fishes home in good shape to give to our friends."

It was a chance if we could make the steamer but we tried it. I wish you could have seen us, Jack, for the next few minutes. Tent, mess chest, bedding, fishes, tackle, everything was thrown into the canvas boat, and we jumped into the fisherman's boat, towing our boat, and he pulled for the steamer which lay to about a quarter of a mile out. Our outfit was hoisted on deck, the boat swung off and the steamer started up the lake. We waved a good-bye to the little steamer and Chicago Bay, then went to packing up. Everything had to be packed, from tackle box and rods to tent and boat. The captain stood and looked at us for a few minutes, then said:

"You fellows must have fished too long, to be caught like this."

At last everything was packed and stowed away, the fishes were put on ice and here we are. I think Stephens is asleep, and I am at the end of my letter.

The fishes caught this trip have been far and away ahead of those of any trip that we ever have taken. If you had only been along, old fellow, you'd have had one of the treats of a lifetime. I shall not be contented, Jack, until you and I get away on just such a trip. I want you to know the joy and satisfaction of fishing in a trout stream like some of those we have tried this trip, for, Jack, although

We know the world is rich with streams
Renowned in song and story,
Whose music murmurs through our dreams
Of human love and glory;
We know that Arno's banks are fair,
And Rhine has castled shadows,
And poet-tuned the Doon and Ayr
Go singing down their meadows.

I also know that dearer to my heart are the streams on the North Shore, where the trout abound; and I know that you, my dearest friend, can fully enter into and sympathize with me in this feeling. May the day soon come when you and I shall together lure the trout from his hiding-place in brawling stream, swirling pool or rocky crevice of old Superior. As ever, your friend,

MYRON COOLEY.

NOTES

IN the Massachusetts legislature a bill is pending, introduced by Representative Young of Springfield, which if passed will open the markets of that state to the sale of artificially reared trout on February 1 of each year, or two months before the legal opening of the fishing season, which is April 1. This proposition is very properly frowned upon by the true sportsmen and all who are interested in the propagation and protection of fishes and game. The reasons for which this vicious legislation should be killed at its inception are many, and we append a few of them. When trout are spawning they are not fit to be eaten and after they have finished spawning a few weeks' time should be given them to recuperate. Although speckled trout spawn in the Fall, yet trout have been taken from brooks in Northern New York, at nearly the same latitude as Massachusetts, during the latter part of April, which still contained spawn. Again the passage of such a law would encourage fish poachers; lawless fellows would net trout through the ice, gig them or catch them in other ways, and the fishes would be sold as domesticated trout, and another method for the extermination of trout would be launched. Such a law would be obnoxious as class legislation. The landowner, who counts upon selling the early caught trout from the brook that runs through a corner of his farm, is discriminated against. His more well-to-do neighbor, who owns a set of trout ponds, under that law could sell his trout at high figures for two months during which the former would not dare to wet a hook for fear of the game warden.

L. L. MOSCHLER, deputy fish warden of Lyons, Ill., informs us that the fish runway on the Desplaines River at Lyons, which was washed away by the freshets last Spring, has not been rebuilt, although during the past Winter and last Fall it could have been done easily, owing to the low stage of the water. The mill owner, Mr. D. Persain, at whose dam the runway was located, refuses to rebuild it on the grounds that he spent his money to put in the first one, and now if the state wants the fishway restored it can do so at its own expense. The Illinois Fish Commission was notified by Deputy Moschler last Fall, and we regret the commission did not act then. Now the water is too high and Deputy Moschler says fishes by the hundreds are prevented from ascending the river in consequence of the dam, and the people will be the losers because the fishes cannot get up to spawn. Another serious trouble to solve is to prevent the towns of Riverside and Lagrange from emptying all their sewage into the Desplaines River, which they are now doing above the dam. Deputy Warden Moschler informs us that when the water is low, every Summer and Fall, the river becomes foully stagnant, and not only are fishes killed in large numbers, but he thinks the residents will continue to be sick from malaria and fevers, and on this account the people should insist on an entire change of drainage, which would not only save them, but the fishes as well. We ask Col. G. W. Langford to look into this matter as a state officer.

THE Lynn (Mass.) Fish and Game Protective Association recently gave its fourth annual ball in that city, at the Odd Fellows' Hall. The decorations for the occasion, consisting of trophies of the rod, gun, chase, and appurtenances thereto, were the most elaborate ever seen in Lynn. A representation upon the stage of a hunters' camp in the Winter was the great feature, with the log cabin surrounded by snow laden evergreens; the skins and mounted heads of deer, moose, caribous and other animals with the guns, rifles and fishing rods furnished a setting to the picture, and asserted the success of the hunters. In the center of the hall, below a star composed of the stars and stripes, hung a silvery fish eight feet in length, and adjacent was the alert figure of a stuffed eagle. The entire list of decorations would occupy much space. Suffice it to say they were much admired by those present and the taste of the ball committee was highly commended.

WE have received Part 6 of Mr. Wm. C. Harris' valuable work, "The Fishes of North America." Often have we commented upon the excellence of Mr. Harris' masterpiece of angling literature and its value for reference. Truly the library of any man who has interest in angling or pisciculturai matters is incomplete without this book. Part 6 treats of the catfishes, and is embellished with lifelike counterparts of the channel catfish, the oommon catfish or bullhead and the channel catfish of the Potomac and Schuylkill rivers. The full-page fish portraits, in natural colors, accompanying this number of "The Fishes of North America," are one of a one-pound kingfish, whiting or barb caught and painted at North Long Branch, N. J., and one of a one-pound Eastern pond or banded pickerel which was caught and painted at Greenwood Lake, N. Y.

LAST week a gentleman who is spending a while at the Tampa Bay Hotel, Florida, and a friend, caught on the Hillsboro River, in one hour, a string of twenty trout (black bass?) which weighed from three-quarters of a pound to three pounds each. Another party of four sportsmen, in forty minutes' fishing in the same river the other day, landed fourteen channel bass which weighed from two pounds to eight pounds each and eight trout which averaged one and three-quarters pounds each. Oh me! Oh my! How that makes a fellow's angling instinct rise.

WE are in receipt of a pleasing letter from our well-known correspondent, Old Fogy, of Charlestown, N. H., in which he states: "With eleven state hatching houses, New Hampshire is fully abreast of her sister states, in fish production and protection. Our game laws are good, and generally respected, but we hope to postpone the open season on trout from April 15 to May 1 and that on ruffed grouse, squirrls and woodcocks, from September 1 to 15, and perhaps cut off the trout season at the other end also. It is too long now."

PENNSYLVANIA has a very obnoxious fish law that prohibits the catching of fish in any manner. The fine is ten dollars for each fish found in the possession of the fisherman, and anyone that can furnish proof against a party will get one-half of the fines. This gives a chance to a lot of shysters to go up and down the rivers to gather in the "poor lone fisherman." This law is in force from January to June, which cuts off all the good Spring fishing.

Freeport, Pa. H. W. ROWLEY.

THE legislature of Washington recently passed a bill—House Bill No. 6, introduced by Mr. Bush—in which $20,000 were appropriated for the establishment and maintenance of a state fish hatchery or hatcheries on the Columbia River or its tributaries, to be under the control of a board of fish commissioners ex-officio, consisting of the governor, state treasurer and fish commissioner, with power to employ assistants and purchase supplies. The board will not receive compensation for services, but will be allowed actual traveling expenses.

OUR latest advices from California are to the effect that steelhead fishing is about over and the anglers are waiting now for the trout season, which unless some change should be made in the law will open on April 1. It is said that, ad interim, the members of the San Francisco Fly-Casting Club are awakening from the Winter's torpor, that club practice will begin ere long and a fly-casting tournament this Spring is mooted.

On Monday, February 18, Messrs. F. B. Hale, R. M. Rood, G. S. Smith, F. L. Dutton and Leslie Dutton, of South Manchester, went to Marlboro Lake and returned the evening of that day with 181 fine pickerel, says the Globe, of Hartford, Conn.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 7

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Blowsnake; Blowing Viper; Spreading Adder; Hognose Snake—Heterodon platyrhinus (Lat.).—This is another of those snakes which make a great showing in the way of bluff, and about which collect ridiculous stories. In localities where found, one may hear amazing tales of the virulence of the blowsnake, both as regards bite and from its fetid breath. Almost everyone believes that this snake is poisonous, and I have been told by men whom I consider reliable (in all other things), that they had encountered blowing vipers and had been made dangerously ill from the fumes of the foul breath exhaled by the creature. The upper ribs are so arranged that the sides may be inflated back of the head for quite a space, something, perhaps, after the manner of certain oriental species, as the cobra. The creature, when enraged, at will can spread the sides of the neck, thereby giving it a flattened and quite formidable appearance, which naturally enough would excite suspicion in one unacquainted with its habits. There are two or more longer teeth, well back in the upper jaw, which are capable of giving quite a wound; they are rarely used in attack but are, probably, of service in engulfing the prey which this species, like all other snakes of my acquaintance, swallows whole. These larger teeth, which some have called erect fangs, are not connected with poison glands, and the injury done by the blowsnake with its teeth is nothing beyond a simple wound. Many scientists have experimented with this so-called viper, and all are now agreed that it is innocuous. Still, from its formidable appearance, it is credited with being a dangerous reptile and many stories cling to it, and will continue to hold despite all that can be asserted to the contrary. Some of these yarns are so curious and imaginative that they are worthy of repetition as evidence of the credulity of writers. One writer of long ago says:

"When approached it becomes flat, appears of different colors, and opens its mouth hissing. Great caution is necessary not to enter the atmosphere which surrounds it. It decomposes the air, which imprudently inhaled induces languor. The person wastes away, the lungs are affected, and in the course of four months he dies of consumption." Even of late these stories are still told but as a rule are only believed by the credulous non-observing ones, who credit the tales of quill throwing porcupines and horse hairs turning into worms. Not long ago an honest man, whose word or signature was good, told me that he was made sick and vomited on encountering one of "them blowsnakes."

"The air smelt orfully all about while that 'ar snaik was a-puffin', and I was took sick right off," said he, "and I didn't get well for three days." It is probable that this relator had heard this story from his father or grandfather, and by years of telling had actually grown to believe the truthfulness of the tale. But I can assure my readers that the bluesnake is harmless as to breath as well as fang. The hognose viper will attempt to scare its enemies by spreading and enlarging the region for a few inches just back of its head. Its appearance is indeed formidable, and it is not at all surprising that the ignorant should be alarmed at the sight of the creature. If the snake is pestered it will often turn upon its back and feign death, and in this condition lie stiff and immovable for some time, even for periods, of a halfhour.

In my locality this snake is more frequently found in high and dry sandy tracts. In truth, I have never taken a specimen in other sections, but some writers claim to have found it about ditches in the Spring. The majority of specimens taken in Michigan are of a length of eighteen inches, and it is a rare capture to secure one thirty inches in length. Still, it is said to reach three feet. The blowsnake is a thickset, sluggish creature which may be readily recognized by its peculiarly shaped snout, which is so marked as to give it the name of hognose. For many years there were two varieties recorded, but it was found that there were all grades of coloration and marking, and the varietal markings were insufficient.

As I shall have frequent occasion in this series to refer to the breeding habits of our snakes, it is perhaps as well to refer to two terms which are often used in speaking of the habits of snakes. Some snakes are oviparous, that is, they bear eggs. But many serpents of this continent, as with well-known representatives in other parts of the world, are ovoviviparous, meaning that the young are formed and developed in the eggs within the parent's body, and are hatched at maturity just before extrusion or immediately after the eggs are laid. The breeding habits of reptiles are but little known and we are absolutely ignorant in regard to many species, while the many unreliable stories in circulation have a tendency to make us doubt the authenticity of those which have a semblance of truth. Some observations have been made regarding the breeding habits of this species, and some notes will be given as they are taken from the work on the Reptiles of Indiana, by O. P. Hay. The observations indicate the allowance which must be given to snake tales:

"Troost dissected a specimen and found in her twenty-five oval eggs, each three-fourths inch long and without a calcareous covering. In a large female of the common form Veedersburg I found in one oviduct four eggs, and in the other eleven. The hindermost egg was an inch and a quarter long, and three-quarters across. The eggs were covered with a tough membrane. I found no embryos in any of the eggs. The snake has been regarded as ovoviviparous, but such is probably not usually if ever the case. We have evidences that the eggs are usually laid and buried in the earth before they are ready to hatch." Prof. F. W. Cragin says that he had twenty-two eggs of this snake which had been plowed up in a sandy field along Long Island Sound. Another writer states that he saw one of these snakes killed, and out of the wound there issued over 100 young, each about six or eight inches long. This writer believes that these snakes were ovoviviparous, and that these young had really been in the stomach of the female. Another author states that a "spotted spreading adder" contained eighty-seven young, each nearly six inches long. These statements about such large numbers of eggs are undoubtedly erroneous. A nest of twenty-seven eggs was brought to the National Museum August 31. The female was near the nest and attempted to defend it. In each of the eggs was an embryo, well developed and about eight inches long. The eggs did not hatch until September 7 and 8. The egg coverings were ripped open by the egg-tooth of the young snake. The young would flatten themselves when teased, and some would feign death. Dr. G. B. Goode states that the female of this species has been reported as affording its young a hiding-place in her stomach.

NOTES

At Petersburg, W. Va., Mr. James Coleman has a poultry farm and raises game fowls as a diversion, the Irish Grays being his specialty. Recently a hawk has been preying upon Mr. Coleman's chickens and that gentleman was unable to get a shot at the thief. The idea of pitting an Irish Gray gamecock against the hawk pleased Mr. Coleman, and on February 23 he proceeded to arm his biggest Irish cock—that had won many battles—with steel gaffs four inches in length and turned him loose in the yard. When the hawk swooped down for his customary feast the Irish Gray was the only chicken in sight and he attempted to gain cover in the henroost; but, finding all avenues of escape cut off, he turned and stood upon the defensive. At the first swoop the agile game bird dodged the hawk's talons and a short, neat but very decisive fight ensued. The hawk was out of his native element upon the earth, his wings striking the ground whenever he tried to fly, whereas the Irish Gray was upon his own dunghill and soon demonstrated his superiority. At the first fly one of the gaffs was planted deeply in the hawk's side, and then the cock gave him another stab which put the chicken thief wholly upon the defensive. Soon the Irish Gray planted both gaffs into the hawk's neck, and then sent both heels deep into his enemy's body, one gaff piercing the heart and ending the battle. The rooster was unhurt, having lost only a few feathers and showing a few scratches upon his head.

The latest development in the much discussed seal question in the United States Congress is an amended legislative bill which, if passed, will authorize the president of the United States to open negotiations with England, Russia, Japan or any of these powers, for the purpose of establishing a modus vivendi for the protection of the seals. In case such negotiations cannot be effectively consummated the bill provides that the United States shall kill off all remaining fur seals and thus settle the vexatious question with some profit to this country, instead of allowing the seal poachers to exterminate the seals for their own gain.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 7

(Illustrated)

BY A. K. DELANEY

Bering's Second Expedition

The impetus given to Russian discovery by Peter the Great survived him, and while scientific potentates at St. Petersburg were engaged in casting doubt and discredit upon the results of Bering's first expedition, Empress Anna, who succeeded to the throne just about the time of Bering's return, in 1730, from his first expedition, issued orders on April 17, 1732, for a second expedition upon a plan submitted by Bering. This plan included within its purview these purposes, viz.: the surveying and charting of the Arctic Coast of Siberia; the exploration of the Kurile Islands and Japan; and a voyage of discovery to the east in search of the American continent. Ivan Kiriloff was the president of the Russian Senate, and was a devout admirer of Peter as well as a friend of Bering, and the orders of the Empress met with prompt attention in the Senate. But as the plan passed from bureau to bureau, through the Academy of Sciences and the Admiralty, it grew to enormous proportions, and when in December the final ukase of sixteen paragraphs was issued the expedition it provided had become the most gigantic undertaking of its kind in modern times. The field of operation, as finally agreed upon, extended from the Dwina River to East Cape, along the Arctic Coast; from Okhotsk to Japan, along the eastern coast, and from Kamchatka across the Pacific to America.

Aside from all this and preliminary to the Arctic exploration, expeditions were to be sent down the great rivers of Siberia, magazines and posts established at convenient points, the mouths of the rivers explored and charted, and lighthouses erected. Iron works were to be constructed at Yakutsk, cattle raising introduced on the Pacific Coast, and a post for relays of men, horses and provisions established at Yudoma, near the divide of the Stanovoi Mountains. At Okhotsk a large colony was to be founded, with both elementary and nautical schools of instruction, and a dockyard established. The objects of the expedition were not confined to nautical and geographical exploration and discovery; astronomy, all the branches of natural history and the subjects of the colonization and the history of the countries visited were included among the objects of research.

To promote these purposes a corps of scientific professors was attached to the expedition and most extravagantly equipped. Appurtenant to this corps were landscape painters, surgeons, interpreters, instrument makers, surveyors, scientific assistants and fourteen body guards. In its transportation train were thirty-six horses, nine wagon-loads of instruments—including telescopes fifteen feet long—a library of several hundreds of volumes and enormous supplies of writing materials, artists' colors, draughting instruments and the like.

Bering, raised to Captain-Commander, the second rank of the Russian navy, was made chief of all these enterprises, and upon him devolved the task of executing these plans—of taking the enormous and cumbersome supply train, including the outfit of the professors, from St. Petersburg to Kamchatka—and, in short, of pushing this gigantic expedition to success or failure. A distinquished German writer and scholar has declared that no other geographical enterprise, not even the charting of China by the Jesuits, Mackenzie's travels, or Franklin's expeditions, can compare in greatness and sacrifice with the gigantic undertakings that were loaded upon Bering and carried out by him. The expedition as finally organized numbered, including the scientific corps, about six hundred and twenty men, rank and file, and in the early part of the year 1733 began to move out of St. Petersburg by detachments.

Spangberg made the first start on the first of February, going directly to Okhotsk to push forward the ship building on the Pacific, and reached the coast in the early part of 1735, again repeating the terrible march in the dead of Winter over the Stanovoi Mountains. Bering left the capital on March 18, for Tobolsk, where the vessels and outfit for the first Arctic expedition were completed and started down the Irtish in May, 1734. By October of that year the chief had reached Yakutsk and there the arrangements for the other two Arctic expeditions were completed and these started down the Lena in June, 1735. The expedition starting from Tobolsk was to survey and chart the Arctic Coast from the mouth of the Dwina to the Obi, and one of the two sent from Yakutsk was to take the strip from the Obi to the Lena, while the third was to sail east from the Lena and, if found possible, double East Cape and sail to Kamchatka.

By the first of July, 1735, the detachments for the Arctic explorations were under way and Bering turned his energies to the Pacific expeditions. A blast furnace and foundry were built at Yakutsk, from which [illegible] iron supplies were subsequently drawn. Multitudes of river craft were constructed, and on the old route [illegible] the Lena and up its eastern tributaries to the Stanovoi divide and down the Urack River barracks, magazines and supply depots were erected at three different points. When it is considered that, aside from starting the de tachments down the Lena for the Arctic, all the enormous supplies—provisions, anchors, cables, rigging and armament—for eight vessels had to be transported, a large part of them across the entire continent and all of the way the seven hundred miles from Yakutsk to [illegible] surprised that the commander was [illegible] the former place for nearly three years. [illegible] he established his headquarters at the site of the present town of Okhotsk, which was founded by Bering and Spangberg. The old stockade fort was abandoned and the new town located four miles down the coast, on the delta of two streams that empty into Okhotsk Sea. There a church, officers' quarters, barracks, magazines and a dockyard were constructed. A large portion of this had been done by Spangberg, whose men had worked in the clay banks, made tiles and built the first houses around which subsequently grew up the Pacific metropolis of Sibina. Spangberg also constructed two ships, the Archangel Michael and the Hope, which lay in the harbor fully completed when Bering arrived, and the old vessels Fortuna and Gabriel had been repaired and fitted for sea.

Supply trains, however, moved slowly, and it was not until 1738 that provisions sufficient for Spangberg's expedition to Japan arrived at Okhotsk. The two succeeding Summers that officer—who never failed Bering during their sixteen years of adventure together—made voyages along the coast to Japan, explored and partly charted the Kurile Islands, Yezo and the eastern coast of Niphon, whereupon the airy fabric of Gamaland vanished.

The outfitting of Spangberg's vessels exhausted supplies at Okhotsk, and it was not until the Summer of 1740 that Bering was ready to sail on the American expedition. In June of that year two ships, good-sized two-masters, the St. Peter and the St. Paul, were launched; but delays intervening the vessels did not leave Okhotsk until September 8 of that year, their first destination being Avacha Bay, where they passed the following Winter. This estuary is on the east side of Kamchatka, well down toward the southern end of the peninsula, and as it had been found to possess well-sheltered harbors it was selected by Bering as his base of operations from Kamchatka.

The great crisis of Bering's life was now rapidly approaching, and when least expected the spirit of Joseph Nicholas De L'Isle—who seems to have been Bering's evil genius—appeared to rob the expedition of the full fruits of success and, indirectly, to shorten the life of the indomitable chief who for sixteen years had stood at the front of Russian discovery.

De L'Isle was at that time at the head of the astronomical department of the Academy of Sciences, and shortly before Bering's return to St. Petersburg, from his first expedition, had imported his somewhat questionable elder brother, who after leading a sort of vagrant life in the Canadas had returned to France, adopted his mother's name—La Croyere—and at his brother's instance turned up in St. Petersburg. La Croyere was attached to the scientific corps of the expedition as professor of astronomy, and through the De L'Isle's influence the Senate had ordered Bering and Chirikoff to consult La Croyere as to the route to America. In obedience to these instructions on May 4, 1741, prior to sailing from Avacha, Bering called a council of officers, at which La Croyere produced his brother's map and instructions, both of which adhered to the fabled Gamaland lying east of the Kurile Islands and Japan. Both Bering and Chirikoff were anxious to sail to the northeast, but in spite of the fact that Spangberg's two voyages had swept away every vestige of evidence upon which Gamaland was erected, La Croyere insisted upon his brother's instructions, and so it was agreed that the ships should sail to the southeast and return to Avacha Bay in September, a conclusion which took them far out upon the Pacific Main, and away from the Aleutian chain of islands which would have led them to the American coast with the certainty of the law of gravitation.

On June 4, 1741, the two vessels weighed anchor, Bering in command of the St. Peter and Chirikoff of the St. Paul. The latter had on board La Croyere, while the scientific corps was represented on the St. Peter by Stellar. The vessels sailed to the southeast until the afternoon of June 12, making six hundred miles and reaching the latitude of 46° 9′ North and longitude 14° 30′ East from Avacha, and hence by the map of the scientists should have found Gamaland, but no land appeared.

Bering therefore gave the order to put about and sailed north-northeast, reaching latitude 49° 30′ on June 20, where Chirikoff in a storm and fog left Bering—unquestionably intentionally—and sailed east-northeast in the direction of the American coast. Bering lost the next forty-eight hours in the vain attempt to rejoin the St. Paul, and then to remove every shadow of doubt as to the mythical character of Gamaland sailed as far south as 45° 16′, after which he shifted his course to the northeast and for four weeks continued to sail in that direction, changing to north-northeast on July 13. On the sixteenth, in 58° 14′ North and 49½° East of Avacha, the colossal figure of Mount St. Elias arose before them to the north, and on July 20 the St. Peter was anchored on the west side of Kyak Island. After years of unremitting toil the commander at last had reached America by way of the Pacific.

Sailing southwest from Kyak, on July 26, Bering reached the Kodiak Archipelago, from which the ship's course was directed toward the northwest with a view to ascertain the trend of the mainland, and on August 3 the high peaks of the Aliaska Peninsula were sighted, and on the next day the group of small islands known as the Semedius was passed. On August 10 the course for Kamchatka was taken, but, on August 27, it being found that water ou board was running low, the course was changed to the north, and three days later the Shumagin group of islands was reached. Leaving there on September 6, the course for Kamchatka was resumed, and on the twenty-fourth of that month, to the astonishment of all on board, the island of Atka, midway of the Aleutian chain, was sighted. From September 25 to October 11 the St. Peter was in the midst of almost incessant westerly gales of [illegible] which the vessel was driven far [illegible] w down as the 48th parallel. [illegible] g back to the northwest, the [illegible] sighted, and several islands [illegible] were passed.

[illegible] mber the wind veered to the east, and on November 4, land was sighted to the westward which proved to be what are known as the Copper or Komandor Islands, on the larger of which Bering was to breathe his last. He had reached the age of sixty years, the last sixteen of which had been years of almost ceaseless toil and often untold privation and hardship. The seeds of disease no doubt were sown amid the malarial swamps about Okhotsk, and illness had seized him while the St. Peter was making the vain search for Gamaland. His last appearance on deck was on the morning of August 21, when the vessel left Kyak Island; he had been confined to his bed for many weeks, and the ravages of the scurvy—which had broken out among the crew—were making inroads upon the once iron frame of the commander.

The situation of affairs on shipboard had become deplorable in the extreme. Nearly one-half the ship's people were prostrated with the scurvy, and those not affected by the disease were worn to exhaustion from long labor and exposure. The season of gales of terrific fury, accompanied with blinding snow and sleet, was upon them and their provisions and water were nearly gone. The ship for many weeks had been in the command of the subordinate officers, who were constantly quarreling among themselves, hence discipline was at an end, and as attempts at taking latitude and longitude had almost entirely ceased the position of the ship was partly conjecture.

Under these conditions the prevailing sentiment on board was to make the land now in sight. Bering summoned all his remaining strength to oppose this. A council was held in his cabin, at which he urged that a few hours, at most a day or two, of further sailing, would bring them to the Asiatic Coast. He insisted that by any reckoning possible to make the ship could not be over forty miles from Avacha, and that after enduring so much suffering and hardship everything must be risked to reach the home port.

It subsequently transpired that the ship at that moment was within thirty miles of the Kamchatkan Peninsula, and that one day more of perseverance would have saved the vessel from shipwreck, the expedition from a frightful ending and, in all probability, would have prolonged the life of the commander. But it was not to be. The master hand was helpless and discipline was gone. Led by Waxel and Khirtoff, the second and third officers of the expedition, and against the protest of a veteran seaman of seventy years who was the mate of the ship, the crew determined to make the land and the fates of the St. Peter and her commander were sealed.

The vessel passed to shipwreck almost without a struggle. Under a light northeast breeze she drifted down toward the island, and in the bright, still, moonlit night of November 6, 1741, dropped her anchor for the last time off the center of the northeast coast of Bering Island, scarcely six hundred yards from shore. On November 25 the cable parted under a heavy gale and she stranded on the sandy beach. Enough of her hull and rigging was rescued during the succeeding Winter to build the small craft by which Stellar and the remnants of the expedition reached Avacha the next Summer, and the remaining portion was soon buried under the shifting sands. All of her people had landed previously and taken up their abode in dugouts excavated in the sand heaps along the shore.

The details of the succeeding Winter are heartsickening. Exposure, disease and finally death gradually thinned the ranks of the shipwrecked band, and by the middle of January but thirty-three remained of the seventy-seven who left Avacha the preceding June. Among the last to succumb was the old mate, Andreas Hesselberg, who for more than half a century had plowed the oceans of the globe and whose advice, if followed, would have saved the expedition. During these days of terrible disaster Stellar showed the metal of a magnificent manhood. He was alternately doctor, nurse, cook and roustabout. Young, vigorous, courageous, cheerful and level-headed, he became the center of life in the sand huts along the beach.

The one compensating feature connected with the dreadful ending of the expedition is that the disaster proved to be the foundation of Stellar's future fame, by affording him the opportunity to gather the material for those wonderful descriptions he subsequently made of the animal life with which the island at that time literally swarmed. Arctic foxes ran about in countless droves. Thousands of sea lions, fur seals, sea otters and sea cows herded together along the shores of the island. Never before disturbed by man, they were so tame that they simply gazed with a sort of stupid wonder at their new and strange companions.

On December 8, 1741, Bering breathed his last. He was almost literally buried alive. The walls of his sand hut kept crumbling in, from time to time, covering his feet and limbs. At first this was removed, but Bering, imagining that the sand covering gave some additional warmth to his rapidly wasting frame, requested that it might be left, and when death overtook him in the chill hours of a long Arctic night, in December, he was half submerged beneath the falling sand. They laid him to rest beside the old mate. And thus, almost within sight of their home port, the first ship, master and mate to cross the North Pacific and visit the shores of Alaska were buried together in the sand dunes of Bering Island.

NOTES

LAST Spring two American travelers in Mexico were killed by the Seri Indians in the state of Sonora. Four adventurous spirits, headed by a newspaper man named Robinson, had undertaken an exploring expedition into that part of Mexico, and the leader and one companion were killed. The incident caused much correspondence between the United States government and that of Mexico. An expedition from the Bureau of Ethnology, at Washington, recently returned from a trip of exploration to that country, during which an examination was made of the Seri tribe. Prof. W. J. McGee, who led the party, gives a graphic account of the character of the Seri Indians. They are cannibals and eat every white man they can kill. They are cowardly and treacherous, never fight except from ambush, and kill every human being invading their country whenever they have the power. They have a fine physique, the men being nearly six feet in height, with very muscular legs, and it is said they can run from 150 to 200 miles a day without rest; that they catch deer and jackrabbits by outrunning them. They are very dirty savages, have no idea of agriculture, live mostly upon fish and the flesh of wild animals, are fond of carrion and their principal vegetable food is mesquite beans. They live in the rudest of stone huts and both sexes wear a single garment, like a petticoat, made of pelican skins. The Seri Indians inhabit the Island of Tiburon, in the Gulf of California, and claim 5,000 square miles of land in Sonora. The tribe numbers only about 250 persons. The expedition visited them under the protection of Señor Encinas, who established a stock ranch in the territory claimed by the Seris, and after ten years of warfare succeeded in convincing the savages that his vaqueros would exterminate the tribe unless they ceased molesting his men or live stock.

EVERY effort put forth to bring art works within the reach of all the people deserves encouragement, for it is a reasonable proposition that he who studies the beautiful in nature has no time to study vices. For this reason the White City Art Company of Chicago is to be commended for placing within the means of the masses reproductions of paintings of modern masters, by the beautiful halftone process on plate paper. The publication is issued quarterly and is entitled "Art Idols of the Paris Salon." There will be one hundred plates in all, 15x20 inches in size, the price of each part being one dollar.

THE DETROIT SHOW

The third annual show of the City of the Straits Kennel Club, from February 26 to March 1 inclusive, will go on record as their most successful one. As the previous shows held by this club were not a financial success an effort was made to bring this one to at least meet expenses by cutting down the number of classes and in some classes reducing the prize money. This resulted in a loss of some entries, as was expected, and a few mistakes were made which experience will correct in the future. The weather while not positively bad was for the most part against the show, the only bright weather being that of the first day. By noon on the second day it was raining, which continued at intervals until well toward evening; the weather afterward was cloudy and lowering, with attemps at snow on the last day. The attendance was always light in the morning, increasing in the afternoon and generally filling the large building in the evening. The charge of twenty-five cents admission is considered by some of the management a mistake, and it seems so to the visitor, as the character of the people who attended, especially in the evenings, seemed to be such as would just as readily pay fifty cents. The entries were not up to those of last year, the catalog showing 389, but the quality was certainly as good, if not better in many classes.

The arrangement of the benching and the judging rings was far better than that of last year and was appreciated by all. The ventilation and light, especially the latter for judging, is the most serious drawback in the building. The entire show was judged by Messrs. John Davidson and James Mortimer. Mr. Davidson finished his work on the first day, having been called home by a telegram announcing the death of his wife, who has been a sufferer for some time from two strokes of paralysis. Mr. Mortimer finished his work at noon on the second day.

The officers of the club and the show committee were in constant attendance, and the wants of visitors and exhibitors were promptly attended to in a manner to please them. Spratts Patent had an efficient corps in Messrs. Oldham, Ehrman and Murphy, and their work was never attended to better, which left no room for complaint. On Thursday morning a marked catalog was ready which was wonderfully free of mistakes. The catalog lacked one thing of importance to make it more complete, an index of exhibitors' names; no catalog should be without this.

Financially, the show is the best that the club has ever held, the receipts meeting the expenses, and it will result in renewed efforts at their next, when some important changes will be made.

POINTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) They were not strong and outside of the exhibits of two kennels made rather a poor showing. As a general rule the condition of the exhibits was good. In the challenge class for heavyweight dogs Sandford Druid was absent. Moulton Banner won. In Ben Lewis' hands he shows up a different dog to what he was when sent around alone and always out of condition; he yet shows his throatiness and is a trifle light in quarters and lower thigh. Count

Graphic was close on his trail, but Banner is better in joining of neck and shoulders, pasterns, bone and stern, and perhaps had a little the best of it in coat. In the corresponding bitch class Josie Bracket, alone, never looked better and seemed ready for all comers. The lightweight challenge class for dogs had no entry. The bitch class had Miss Rumor, well shown. In the open class for heavyweight dogs there was not a good one in the lot. The winner, Hempstead Prince, is very ordinary in head, fair in shoulders, and good in pasterns, being of ordinary form beside. Bingo, second, was best in head, eye and ear, but not so good in neck and shoulders, standing wide in front; he was better than the winner in body, quarters and stern, hard in flesh and good in coat. Ridgeview Regent, third, is only fair in head, a trifle upright in shoulders and thick, with fair legs and feet, good stern, shown in fair condition. The heavyweight bitch class had four entries; one, Devon Fan, absent. Fanny Graphic proved the winner; she has a rather good head and eye, ear a trifle small; shoulders a trifle upright and thick with a too round barrel, round turned in hips and a trifle coarse in stern; she is light in bone for a bitch of her size; legs and feet would be good if stronger. Dido II, second, is fair in head, good in eye, rather upright shoulders, fair in hips, stern, legs and feet. Phantom, third, is fair in head, thick in shoulders, and of too cobby build; she stands wide in front, was shown in too much flesh, but good in coat. The open class for lightweight dogs showed improvement in quality. Comet, the winner, is well known. Hal Pointer, second, would be better in a rather good head if his muzzle was a little long; he is good in eye, a trifle thick in shoulders, has good hips and stern, is fair only in pastern, besides this fairly good in legs and feet. Chancellor, placed third, was a better dog for second place, beating Hal in head, shoulders, bone, pasterns and condition, besides showing most symmetry and quality. Jock deserved his reserve card, being a fair dog all through. Yet Swift, V.H.C., is ordinary in head, good in stern and fair in shoulders, body and legs and feet. In lightweight bitches Count Graphic's Baby won; she is only fair in head and shoulders, tending to thickness, too round turned in hips and tucks up in flank, lacking depth in back ribs; she is long in stern, has good quarters, stifles, legs and feet and was shown in good coat and condition. Belle of Lancaster, in good condition, is a better bitch; she shows some throatiness and her coat was not in form, but aside from this she was the superior bitch.. Marguerite Kent, third, is fairly headed, is a trifle thick in shoulders, and is inclined to drop behind them, being a little long cast; she is good in loin, quarters, stifles, legs and feet, and beautifully ticked in coat; she was shown in good condition, as all the dogs of this kennel were. Louise Banner, reserve, is off in head; in fact has little to recommend her. The class had nine entries, three absent. The local class had five entries. Bingo, first, has been described. Flying Jib, second, is barely fair in head, a little thick in shoulders, good in body, loins, quarters and stifles, a trifle coarse in stern, feet and legs good enough, but a trifle leggy; was shown in good condition.

ENGLISH SETTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) There was a rather mixed lot, of heavy type and otherwise. In the challenge class Dude was absent and Cactus was placed first. Glendon leads him much in head and shoulders, Cactus is better behind, with little choice between them. Glendon, in good shape, would be the preferable dog. Albert's Nellie was absent in the challenge class for bitches, leaving Vic Leweliyn to win; she was in good form. In the open class, which had thirteen entries, three absent, Albert's Ranger won. He is a well made dog of the heavier type, and of this type had no equal. Dash Antonio, second, was not so good in head but his build besides was far the best for field work; his shoulders are right enough now if they do not grow thicker, to which they tend slightly. Dash is strong in forearm, has excellent body, hips, quarters and stifles, with a strong lower thigh, and besides has good bone and legs and feet well placed under him; his action is excellent. Monk of Furness Sting is better in head, neck and shoulders than Dash Antonio but not so good in bone, legs and feet, and besides is not quite flat in coat; he has excellent quarters and stifles and a good body. Washtenaw Grouse, although a favorite with the judge last year, does not seem to please his eye this; yet he is just as good a dog, if not better. He is good in head, eye and ear, has splendid shoulders, might be a little better sprung in ribs, yet he has fine depth and good enough in chest; he is good in loin, quarters and stifles, legs and feet, with plenty of bone, and no dog stands truer on his legs and his action is good, but his coat has not received the attention it deserves for show purposes. Grouse seems the best dog in the class. Cincinnatus' Pride and Count Beaufort were the dogs to receive the V.H.C cards. They are dogs of totally different type, and if one is right the other is not. Pride is the better of the two, a fair dog throughout and free from lumber. Count Beaufort is all lumber and bad in coat and cannot prove a winner in even fair company. Toledo Queen had an easy win of it in the bitch class; she is a cleanly made bitch throughout with a slight tendency to be too round in barrel. Furness Maid, second, is rather good in head, neck and shoulders, is good in hips, quarters, and stifles, with fair legs and feet. Babette, third, is off in head, fair in shoulders, well sprung in ribs, nicely coated, and has good legs, feet and movement. Rosebud, V.H.C., is only fair in head, but aside from this a well formed, large bitch. Clairview Belle, the winner in the local class, is fair in head, which is well marked in black and rich tan; she is of fine form besides, beautifully ticked in body and shown in good coat and condition. She was an easy winner. Dash Antonio was second and Monk of Furness Sting third. Belle, reserve, is leggy and light cast, was shown short in coat and in light condition, in proper form she would not be a bad looking bitch. Rosebud and Ontario were V.H.C.

IRISH SETTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) In numbers the Irish setters were not as great as the English, yet they were more uniform in type and quality. Five of the twenty-three entries were absent, all of them being the entries of the Kildare Kennels. In the challenge class for dogs Kildare won, with his kennel mate Kildare Glenmore reserve. Both were handled by Joe Lewis and were in good form. Queen Vic, of the same kennel, in fine form, won in the bitch class, with Bessie Finmore reserve, beating out Norna; Ruby Glenmore was absent. Bessie Finmore is not as good in head and neck as Queen Vic, nor does she show as much quality. Bessie was an easy second. Bob Jr was an easy winner in the open class for dogs; he is a good one throughout and first class except in head, which is not a bad one; he is a trifle short in ear also; he was shown in superb condition. Fingaln, second, is good enough in head, a trifle thick under eye, has a well hung ear, good eye, a trifle straight and thick in shoulders, has good forearms, legs, feet, chest and body. Toronto Blarney, third, was not well shown, being light and soft in flesh; he is off in head, short in ear and light in loin and hinder parts, but of fair color and coat. Killane got the reserve card for want of something better; he is a big, rather coarse dog, and the judge was exceedingly liberal to grade him so high. In the open class for bitches Lady May Swiveller, the New York winner, was returned the winner here; she is a little broad in skull and a little snipey in muzzle, is good in eye, thick in shoulders and too round in barrel, and the fault is aggravated by being shown in too high flesh; she is too round turned in hips for good Irish type, but her legs and feet are good Nona won second; she is not good in skull and a little off in muzzle, has a good ear well hung, lovely eyes, is good in shoulders and chest, hips, quarters and stifles, has a little crook in stern, good legs and feet, excellent in coat and condition, and the best bitch taken all through. Norien C, third, outside of head is a well formed bitch; she was shown in fair condition and in beautiful coat. The reserve bitch was Toronto Biddy, not shown in the best condition; she is a fair bitch in form, color and coat. Forest Sunset, V.H.C., is an ordinary bitch, not good in loin and off color. The local class had three entries and Norien C was the winner. Fletie, a bitch with a fair head, good eye, ear, shoulders, chest, quarters, stifles, coat and condition, was second; she was possibly the best one. Roxie, third, is off in head, short in body, good behind, but leggy, showing but little symmetry.

GORDON SETTERS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) The several classes had sixteen entries, two absent, and were composed nearly entirely of the Dwight, Highland and Waverly kennels' dogs. The challenge class for dogs had two entries, Heather Lad and Leo B, the former short in coat, the latter having an extra lot of it. The judge without examination of dogs gave Lad the award. Both dogs are well known. Highland Yola, a little high in flesh, won in a similar manner over Princess Louise in the bitch class. Yola was best in head, neck and tan. In the open class for dogs Dwight Don, the winner, is heavy in head, only fair in shoulders, not standing well on forelegs, has a good body and tan markings and was best of a poor class. Guy, second, is not an attractive dog in any way, except perhaps in movement; he is off in head and tan and not good in hip formation. Following the type of first prize winner, Highland Kent should have been an easy second; this dog was first at New York. The best class shown was the open class for bitches, with six of the seven entries present. Dwight Pearl, the winner, is fairly headed, with good eye and ear and a fair bitch throughout, but of only fair symmetry. Maid of Waverly, outside of head, is a better bitch. Santa Marie, third, is well known; has a good body, but off in head. Mount Royal Wanda, reserve, is short in neck, thick in shoulders and was in too high flesh. Dwight Effie, V.H.C., was the best bitch in the class, being of good form throughout, in excellent condition, and in movement superior to all; she must have been overlooked in some way. In the New York show report Dwight Pearl has the credit of winning first in open, novice and puppy classes, but she was not in the puppy class, being too old, and correction is asked for.

BEAGLES.—(Mr. John Davidson.) Seventeen beagles comprised the list shown in the several classes without any absentees. As a rule they were in good form. The challenge class for dogs had Doctor, Adam, Joe and Paderewski; all outclassed the last one. Doctor was challenged for height, but passed examination; he was correctly awarded first and was well shown, though his coat could have been better. Adam, reserve, beat Doctor in coat only. June M, well known, was alone in the bitch class; she has a beautiful head, as well as other good features, and attracts attention; about the only adverse criticism to her is that she is a trifle long cast for the present popular type. In the open class for dogs Ringleader was an easy first, with his kennel mate, Raffler, not so good in shoulders, second. Both show much quality and bone, and are well known and sought after by the breeders of this country. Dan J, reserve, is wide in front, thick in shoulders and is not flat in coat. The bitch class was the largest one and furnished good competition. Kitty Clover, first, is sweet in head, has good shoulders and chest, stands well on good legs, and has good action. Fancy M. second, is good in head, is a little out at elbows, has fair carriage and legs and feet. Belle of Westchester, reserve, is good in head, fair in shoulders and chest, too round turned in hips, fair feet and legs, which are rather light in bone, and fairly coated. Music (Dan O'Shea always has a beagle by this name) was V.H.C.; she is not up to the mark her owner usually shows, being only fair in head, light in bone, and not good in coat and movement. Jenny Lind, V.H.C., also is good in head, a little out at elbows, fair in bone, and of ordinary coat, but the better of the two.

J. M. TAYLOR.

MASTIFFS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) Dr. L. Younghusband's Prince Cola scored a very easy win from the brindled Hector, whose body and hindquarters are faulty. In open bitches the same owner's grand bitch Minnie Beaufort had no difficulty in beating Rippiette, second, fair in head and character but somewhat light in bone. The winner is a very massive bitch with an extraordinarily good head, muzzle, body and bone and an extra good mover. I placed her over her kennel companion for the special prize for best mastiff, as she scores in size, wrinkle and very much in color. The only puppy exhibited was a very plain one and first prize was withheld.

ST. BERNARDS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) There was a very good exhibit of St. Bernards, both rough and smooth. In the challenge rough dog class Sir Bedivere was alone, and carrying more flesh than at New York was correspondingly improved in appearance. Rustic Beauty was the only entry in challenge bitches, and although I have seen her in better flesh [illegible] very well. In open dogs Le Prince [illegible] There is no getting away from hi[illegible] head, deep muzzle and intense q[illegible] looked thin and jaded, stood badly [illegible] hung one ear lifelessly as though su[illegible] canker; doubtless the tremendous amount of traveling he has done lately has been too much for him. American Cæsar on the other hand was in magnificent condition, and his great size, massive straight bone, good head and rich color fairly entitled him to his win. Scion Lomond, third, is a very tall dog by Lord Melrose, but following closer in head, eye and general character his grandsire, Ben Lomond; he is a white dog with orange markings, has a good body and coat and moves very well, but is much too light in bone for his extreme height. Lord Dante, reserve, was all out of sorts, but his nice expression and type merited recognition. Imperial, V.H.C., was the winner at Toronto; he has made no improvement since. Earl Douglas, V.H.C., has a nice coat and rich color but he is hardly massive enough in head. In open rough bitches La Princess had a very easy win. She suffers nothing in size in comparison with the largest dogs, and her deep muzzle, excellent bone, lengthy, well-ribbed body, good loin and hindquarters and soundness make her a very difficult one to beat, although face markings would add greatly to her expression. Artilla, second, is well known—a big upstanding bitch who will always be in the money. Lady Taylor, reserve, loses in size in comparison with those above her and is slightly weak in muzzle, but her nice expression, good sound body, and taking color and markings are very commendable. Puppies were not a very remarkable lot, most of them being undersized for their age. The winner, Suzon, is a lengthy, good bodied bitch puppy with good bone and legs and feet and a nice mover, but her head is weak; she was about the youngest of the group and should make a useful one when fully matured. Grand Mistress, second, is a smooth, not at all prepossessing in markings but nice in character of head and standing on good legs and feet. Moleskin, reserve, is another smooth, not pleasing in eye and expression. Prince Victor Emmanuel, H.C., another smooth and the largest in the class, has a poor head and too much coat. The best of the very highly commended division was Miss Neil II, who, had she more size, would be a very fair one; as it is she is too short and too well furnished to grow much more in height or length.

Alton II beat Lawrence Garza in the challenge class for smooth dogs; both are good ones but the winner scores in size and expression. In open smooth dogs St. Augustine won, scoring in head, size, coat and bone, but he does not improve in hindquarters. Lord Milton, second, is another of the Alton—Judith litter and, like all the family, is a good one, losing a little in bone and head to the winner. Nicode is a grand bodied dog with extra good bone, correct coat and very massive head; markings would improve him and his ears are overlarge. Nero Frank, V.H.C., is another good headed dog, but rather sour in expression, has too much coat and is very gay in carriage of stern. Clovis, H.C., is very pretty but too small, and Prince Victor Emmanuel has already been described. That grand old mother of prize winners, Judith, won very easily in challenge smooth bitches from Empress of Windsor, nice in head and expression but rather undersized, and Gemmi, good in body but very poor in head. Scion Lomond headed a big class of locals, the same owner's Empress of Windsor coming second and Count Sargius, a nicely marked dog with a weakish foreface, third. There was a big list of specials, Sir Bedivere winning that for best St. Bernard, and he and Rustic Beauty were pronounced the best pair, dog and bitch. La Princess won for the best St. Bernard bitch, also the special for the best St. Bernard (Sir Bedivere barred). Argyle Kennels won for best kennel of roughs, and Alta Kennels for best kennel of smooths.

BLOODHOUNDS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) There were five entries in this class, but only two were present. These are very plain and undersized, and if shown in good company will in all probability never fill such exalted positions as they occupied here.

BORZOIS.—(Mr. James Mortimer.) Princess Irma won in the challenge class from Argoss, who was in very poor coat. In open dogs the new one, Ataman IV, was a very easy winner, scoring immensely in size, length of head and profile, and his bone and legs and feet are about the best ever seen on one of his breed. Czar beats Trojan in length of head and general outline; the latter is best in coat but lacks the roached loin so characteristic of the Russian wolfhound. Olga IV beats Riga in bone, depth of chest, legs, feet and color.

GREAT DANES.—(Mr. Jas Mortimer.) Entry small. Beau Brummel won in open dogs; very nice brindled in color, too heavy in head, good neck, body and stern but faulty behind and slightly out at elbows. Prince Charlie has a round skull and short face, is sounder all round on his pins than the winner, but is very coarse. Wolverton Haddie, the winning bitch, is a model in neck, body, legs and feet, stern and hindquarters; her head is a trifle small for her size, but it is a good head. Madge, second, is a grand bodied good bitch, a trifle throaty and with too much lip.

DEERHOUNDS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) When these were judged Lochiel was absent and did not arrive until after Mr. Davidson had left. The original placing was Bruar II first and Paul Potter second. As there was a valuable special prize to be competed for Mr. Howie Muir generously insisted that the class should be reopened and rejudged, with the result that Lochiel won and was awarded the special.

GREYHOUNDS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) The challenge class had four entries, of which Gem of the Season was placed in the van, Southern Beauty second, Bestwood Daisy reserve, and the black and white Wild Rose very highly commended. Southern Rhymes, the black and white dog that won at New York, was again successful here, and unless the West brings out something good enough to beat him he will soon be in the challenge class. Spring of the Valley, described last week, was [illegible] and Dallas got the reserve card. The bitch [illegible] strong lot, were placed same as at New York [illegible] Lilly first, Southern Gay Girl second, and Luc[illegible]

SPANIELS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) In challenge [illegible] spaniels Daisy Deane had no opponent. In open [illegible]

Dark D spair was absent, and Korn, a black dog plain in head and not lengthy nor close enough to the ground, [illegible] N. spar i, a black and tan puppy which is at [illegible] ly [illegible] at and weak in front. Westminster [illegible] re [illegible] is too leggy. Spracklin's Belle [illegible] n [illegible] bitches.

In [illegible] r dogs (any color) Pickpania won, with Bendigo reserve. Baby Ruth, transferred from the open class, was the only entry in challenge bitches. In open dogs Andrew Laidlaw's Commodore won, closely pressed by Willie Silk, whose bone and front are hardly as good as the winner's. Adam, reserve, was not in good form; and Old Boy is very short in neck, thick in shoulder, and bad in front. By this time the light, never very good, had grown so dim that an adjournment was made to one of the front rooms used as a storeroom, where the light was better but the quarters so cramped that it was next to impossible to move the dogs. In open cocker bitches (black) Cora II seemed to win fairly, scoring in head and especially in action and character. Second prize went to Miss Mae, a very nice puppy by Pickpania which should develop into more than a good one. Reserve went to Neilie S, and V.H.C. cards to St. Lawrence Novel and Violet, whose color was a bit rusty but she is very nice in head, eye and expression. Mr. Backus' Neilie was rather harshly used with an H.C. card, as she is a good bitch although showing badly. In any-other-color open dogs Lorraine, a black, white and tan, won with something to spare from Red Justice, whose wrinkled head is not nice and he is faulty in front. Brantford Snap was absent. In the corresponding class for bitches it was a close thing between Fanny and the liver and white Tonita; the latter's coat and lightness of bone caused her defeat. Fanny is a solid liver bitch with an extra good body and coat and is a good mover. Mrs. Bow Wow is plain in head and muzzle and almost terrier-like in expression and character. The local class had a good entry of seventeen, Willie Silk winning, with Miss Mae second and Nellie S third, Maud S II reserve, and Old Boy very highly commended. These have all appeared in the open classes. Most of the special prizes were confined to local dogs, of which Willie Silk won the majority. Andrew Laidlaw's team won the kennel special, and the Corktown Kennels that for the best four spaniels entered in the local class.

Dennis won easily in the class for Irish water spaniels, with Roger O'Donohue, in good coat but rather short and thick in head, second, and Kitty of Cork, whose coat has not come on, reserve.

COLLIES.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) The challenge classes did not fill. In open dogs it was a very close thing between Woodmansterne Trefoil and his very good son, Woodlawn Trefoil, the latter persistently dropping one ear. The older dog was in magnificent coat and showed to great advantage. Canadian Monarch, reserve, has very nice ears and good expression, but he is a bit undersized and not quite in full coat. Finsbury Hero, V.H.C., has small ears but his head is plain and expression foreign; he has good texture of coat and plenty of bone. Hempstead Chief, V.H.C., the biggest dog in the class, has not in good coat. Grampion Chief is very moderate and Sir Ensor Doone, a neat little dog, cannot get his ears up. Woodlawn Sunset won in bitches; pity she is not a size larger, as her head, ears and coat are all very correct. Flora May II may thank her very good head and neat ears for her position, as Ormskirk Susie was in beautiful coat and were her skull flatter she would take a lot of beating. Nora, V.H.C., has gone rather plain in head and was out of coat. Lady Doone is very pretty but cannot carry her ears correctly and had to take a back seat in consequence.

BULLDOGS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) The Woodlawn Park Kennel made a fine entry, of which Graven Image, Wall Hampton and Miss Mischief were for exhibition only. King Orry, quite recovered from his lameness, won easily from Nuggett, a grand headed little dog with extra good wrinkle and very neat ear. Hucknall Gypsy's well finished face and quality placed her over Juno, a grand bodied little bitch scarcely up-faced enough. King Orry won the special for the best bulldog, and that for the best kennel went to the Woodlawn Park Kennel.

BULL TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) The fight for the championship was between Cardona and Champion Attraction, and good as the old bitch has been in her day she had to succumb to her more vigorous rival. Prince Gully won in the open dog class, but I am not in love with his front, and had Bill Plimmer been put down in smart condition he would have turned the tables on him. Bassett, very highly commended, is very coarse. Greenhill Nunthorpe and Ben were absent. Edgewood Matchless, the marked bitch, won over Trilby, who wants time to make up in body and take on expression.

DACHSHUNDE.—(Mr. John Davidson.) Nothing very commendable was shown in these classes except two of the rough haired variety, which were unaccountably transferred to the miscellaneous class. The best of the smooths in size and type was the Venlo Farm's black and tan dog, but he was so badly knuckled over that the judge pronounced him unsound. Reinecke's Pick, first, and Dreadnaught, second, are of the pronounced German type and look like workmen. Plethyosaurus, reserve, is too big. Hexe von Venlo won in the bitch class, with one of Mr. Froembling's second and another from the same kennel reserve.

FOX TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) Warren Safeguard and Warren Captious were alone in their respective challenge classes. In open dogs Warren Tip Top was quite equal to the occasion, winning in head and feet from Warren Salesman, second. Black Rock, reserve, is almost too small and cobby, but I prefer his size to the leggy Raby Rival, Raby Truefit and Triumph. Hillside Royal was absent. The open bitch class contained Richmond Victory, Cowthorpe Gem and Richmond Pearl, placed in the order named. The winner is a trifle strong in head, but she is a beautiful bodied bitch with good bone and [illegible]s and feet, nice top, and an ex-[illegible] Cowthorpe Gem is a high [illegible] in coat and light in bone. [illegible] was well beaten in this class, [illegible] good bitch puppy that utterly [illegible] and was consequently unmen-[illegible] prizes were won by My Lady [illegible] skdale Punch and Yondotega, wires, in the order named. The club special for the best kennel was won by L. & W. Rutherfurd; also the silver cup (value $100) presented by Hiram Walker & Sons, which now becomes the winner's absolute property.

The wirehaired open dog class was a rather easy win for Endcliffe Brisk, whose coat might be harder. Mister Great Snap, second, and Brittle Beaut, reserve, are well known; as also is Compton Vindex, V.H.C., good in coat and bone but gone very thick in head. Roath Rennie was alone in the bitch class and was quite out of coat.

IRISH TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) The winners are all well known and have recently been described. Jack Briggs won in dogs, being cleaner and longer in neck than Merle Grady, who carries too much coat. Brigg's Best is the nice puppy that was second at New York. Canadian Ambassador, V.H.C., is very weak in front of eye but a terrier. Galtees, H.C., was outclassed in this company. Dunmurry won in bitches, with Deramore Biddy second. Dan O'Shea's Nora, reserve, is light in bone but nice in head and expression. Brigg's Breeze has a nice coat but is not very good in front, and she is too small.

DANDIE DINMONT TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas Mortimer.) Only one entry and that a very good one—Mr. Raper's bitch, Lothian Judy.

SKYE TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) Endcliffe Maggie, first, is full of terrier character and scored in head, eye and body. Elphinstone is a better size than Barnaby Rudge and is closer to the ground and denser in coat.

BLACK AND TAN TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) Gypsy Girl had no difficulty in beating Queen III, who now shows age. In open dogs a new one put in an appearance, winning decisively in head and body. Chicago Spider is better in color and markings than the winner, but only in these features does he score. Gipsy Queen, second at New York, won well enough here, with Perfecter Rose, a long-headed bitch a bit masculine all over, second. Chicago Maiden, V.H.C., was described last week, and Canada Queen is short in head and was heavy in whelp to all appearances.

YORKSHIRE TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) Bradford Rejected, the good coated dog that won at the big show, was an easy winner here, with Minnie York second. Prince Harry, V.H.C., is smutty in tan, and Tippy, V.H.C., is too light in color. Jeff was absent.

TOY TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) The best terrier was overweight and consequently disqualified. Trixy won, beating Ben in color of tan and size.

SCOTTISH TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) This class was divided by sex. In the dog division first prize was awarded to The Colored Preacher and all other awards were withheld. In bitches Glenshea won, being best in size, texture of coat, and shortness of back. Gypsy Yet, second, has a nice head and ears but is too long in back and not harsh enough in coat.

PUGS.—(Mr. Jas. Mortimer.) Not a numerous entry but the quality tiptop. Haughty Madge won in the challenge class from the aged Drummer, who, although retaining his good skull and wrinkle, is now shrunken in face, and his crooked leg is a drawback. The winner was not in her usual good form and showed listless and dull. Young Penrice won in open dogs and is now about the best pug we have. He has a grand, well-wrinkled skull, good muzzle, a nice compact body, good bone and legs and feet, and is the correct size. Al Von, second, has a good skull, beautiful eye and nice body; his toenails and vent are light. Finsbury Duke loses to the winners in skull and muzzle; he has the best color and is a corky little dog, not quite so good in body as the others. Medler, V.H.C., shows age, is very gray, and has slovenly carriage of ear. Hooper was alone in the bitch class. Howard Pug Kennels won the special for the best kennel, also that for best pug with Young Penrice.

ITALIAN GREYHOUNDS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) Joe Lewis won in the challenge class with Spring and Sprite, in the order named, but Prince was beaten in the open class by W. G. Benham's Adonis, who was not in his cage when I went to look for him.

MISCELLANEOUS.—(Mr. John Davidson.) Boxer III, the bobtail sheepdog, won in the heavy division, with Sir Edwin Landseer, a Newfoundland, second. In the lightweights Mr. Davidson divided first and second money into three equal parts between Endcliffe Wasp, a Bedlington terrier, Frank, a Welsh terrier, and the rough-haired dachshund Penni Reinecke.

JAS. MORTIMER.

THE PACIFIC COAST FIELD TRIAL CLUB'S TRIALS

(Special Report.)

The twelfth annual trials of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club were held at Salinas during the week commencing Monday, February 11. The grounds are some seven or eight miles west of the town of Salinas, and to reach them the Salinas River has to be crossed. The Salinas River is a good-sized stream about one hundred yards wide and usually not over three feet deep at the Blanco ford; but, like most of the California streams, after reaching the valleys it has a bed of quicksand formed from the grinding of the rocks and the wear of the mountains during the heavy storms of the Winter. This slickens is carried down with a rush until it reaches the valleys, where the current becomes milder and then settles, causing a bed of continuously shifting sand. During the quiet of Summer the water runs clear, and, this sand becoming settled, allows the crossing of these streams at almost any point. Four miles above the Blanco ford is a fine iron bridge, but by this route the distance to the trial grounds is increased fully three miles, if not more. The day before the beginning of the trials the Blanco ford was tried, and, while the water was fully four feet deep, the crossing and recrossing were done successfully.

MONDAY

On Monday morning it was decided go by the way of the fork, and some eighteen or twenty vehicles, ranging all the way from a single buggy to a four-in hand carrying nine persons, besides a goodly number on horseback, started for the trials. Fearing no danger, several of the teams rushed in, with Mr. C. Z. Hebert of Salinas in the lead with a good span of horses and a light buggy. This and the next team following him (also a light buggy) went through all right. The next to follow was a double carriage contalning the judges and H. T. Payne, editor of Field Sports, the latter driving. As soon as this team reached the deepest part of the stream, and where the current was the strongest, one of the horses went down, and before he could recover the other was down also. By a hard effort Mr. Payne kept the horses' heads above water until Mr. Palmer (on horseback) rode in; jumped off his horse, and succeeded in freeing them from the wagon, when they eventually after a hard struggle succeeded in reaching the shore. During this struggle the carriage had been carried down-stream about twenty-five yards, and was now in about five feet of water, with the occupants sitting on the lazy backs and singing:

Will the waters be chilly? Will the waters be chilly?
Will the waters be chilly when we come for to cross?

Two other teams also met with the same mishap, while one or two more reached the opposite shore in safety. The balance of the party very wisely refused to attempt it. It was but a short time until a boat came to the rescue of the imperiled sportsmen and took them ashore with nothing worse than wet feet.

Mr. Barden, a gentleman living close by, and one of the owners of the large track on which the trials are held, soon came with a heavy team, long ropes and several of his men. In the meantime all of the vehicles in the river had been capsized by the current and shifting sand. Mr. Barden and his men went into the cold water and, righting the vehicles, tied the ropes to them and pulled them out. Contrary to the general expectations they were found to be but little damaged.

During this interesting introduction to the trials of 1895 a light rain commenced to fall, and on less resolute men sad countenances might have been expected. But the word "fail" has long ago been erased from the lexicon of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club, and even with the spectacle of three carriages turned wrong side up in the middle of this treacherous stream, the wildest hilarity was the order. Mr. Payne, being a well-known expert driver and the first to go down, received special attention in the way of jokes and gibes for the manner in which he distinguished himself in finding the bottom of the quicksand. After all the carriages were gotten out and the dogs and handlers that had not already crossed had been brought over in boats the teams were again hitched up and the party started for the grounds.

A drive of a couple of miles, and the first brace was called. The judges were Wm. Dormer [illegible] Judge C. E. Post of Sacramento and W[illegible] Los Angeles.

DERBY

JIM BASSFORD—DORIS.—Chas. Studa[illegible] white pointer dog Jim Bassford (Bismarck—Maid), handled by owner, and C. Z. Hebert's liver and white pointer bitch Doris (Glenbeigh—Jill), handled by M. D. Walters, were cast off in high cover at 1:52 during a light rain. Both of the puppies were full of hunt and showed considerable speed, but kept very close to their handlers. After a run of nearly half an hour the course was changed to the eastward and down into a little swale, where stood a small cluster of live oak trees. Reaching the trees Jim, with the wind against him, ran into and flushed a small bevy; he stopped to wing, and Studarus cautioning him held him still until the birds had all flushed, whereas had he ordered him on after he had recognized the flush of the first two or three birds he might have secured a point on some of the others that flushed one by one afterward. At the same time that Jim flushed, Doris, some little distance to the leeward of the birds, wheeled and stopped; but whether it was caused by the noise of the birds getting up or that she had caught scent could not be ascertained from her actions. Moving through the timber to the south and then coming back on the side of the little slope, Doris made a stylish point on a single. Jim came up to back, but only stopped a few feet from the bitch at the command of his handler. Walters flushed and shot and both dogs were steady. After a run of ten or fifteen minutes more without finding the brace was called up. Doris showed a little the best in speed and range, though deficient in both. Down 50 minutes.

SILVERPLATE—NIMROD.—Samuel F. Hughes' lemon ticked English setter bitch Silverplate (Fred W—Countess Noble), handled by M. D. Walters, and J. G. Edwards' orange and white setter dog Nimrod (Sportsman—Stephanie), handled by R. M. Dodge, were put down on the same grounds at 2:45. Both dogs went away with fine speed and range and quartered well, Rod making a fine and intelligent cast across the wind and back in front of his handler. While this brace worked wide and covered splendidly a large amount of ground for twenty-three minutes, no birds were found. Rod was considerably the widest ranger, but Silverplate showed the greatest speed and the most style in going.

When this brace was taken up the party started for home, taking the wood around by the bridge. A drizzling rain had fallen all day, and toward evening it became much harder. It was nearly eight o'clock when the last of the crowd arrived at the hotel, wet and hungry, for the hand of fate had so arranged matters that the lunch had gone down the river to furnish a feast for the salmon in the bay of Monterey. Should any salmon anglers find bottles of beer in the stomachs of their catches during next Summer, they can return them to the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club for identification. After everyone was incased once more in dry clothes a grand rush was made for the dining room. As the hour was late, the field trial party had the room all to itself and made it ring with song, joke and laughter. The most popular of the many impromptu parodies on the late songs was:

Daisy, Daisy, bring me a large canoe.
I'm half crazy—it's looking rather blue—
Down goes the carriage,
But don't be disparage;
Yet we'd rather try to cross over dry
In a ferryboat built for two.

During Monday night and until afternoon Tuesday it rained in earnest and no attempt was made to go out on Tuesday. In the afternoon the rain ceased and the wind shifted to the west, and later to the northwest, and the sky began to clear. By 9 p. m. the sky was clear and notices were posted for an early start Wednesday morning.

WEDNESDAY

was bright and clear and a drive of two hours by the bridge road brought us to the grounds.

SUVER G—GLENBEIGH JR.—R. K. Gardner's lemon ticked English setter bitch Suver G (Shell Hudson—Estrella), handled by M. D. Walters, and B. J. Baum's black and white pointer dog Glenbeigh Jr (Glenbeigh—Lady Max), handled by R. M. Dodge, were cast off in sagebrush at the lower end of the grounds at 10:45. Both dogs ranged quite well and showed fair speed. Suver was first to make game, but, drawing up, went into the bevy and flushed it. The birds went to high brush and were not followed. Moving down the flat for some distance, Glen pointed. Suver, having been brought up to back, caught scent and pointed also for a moment, then went in and flushed. Dodge shot and both dogs were steady. Glenbeigh, casting to the right, pointed another single. Dodge shot and the dog was steady. Glen then made two more points, but no birds could be raised from either of them. Down 47 minutes. Suver was the best in range, but showed a great lack of training. In pace they were about equal, Glenbeigh much the best in point work.

ORION, a bye.—At 11:37 J. E. Terry's lemon and white English setter dog Orion (Sportsman—Stephanie), handled by R. M. Dodge, was put down to run his bye with Wm. Dormer's pointer dog Bruce. Orion showed good speed and plenty of range. After a run of half an hour Orion winded a bevy on the side of a small hill. After drawing very carefully for twenty-five or thirty yards he cast to the left, leaving the scent and working some distance away from it. Coming back he made another effort to locate, drawing nicely again, but again leaving it. Bruce, coming up, drew to a point and held it well, Orion making a stylish back. Dodge shot, and both were steady. After another run of fifteen minutes they were taken up; down one hour and eight minutes.

SILVERPLATE—NIMROD.—This brace was put down again after lunch and worked back toward the ground where the first brace had been cast off in the morning. Silverplate was the first to find, pointing a small bevy on the side of the hill. Nimrod was called up to back, but coming too close he caught scent and pointed a s[illegible] ters urged Silverplate up and into the birds. Both [illegible] to shot. They were taken up at 2:02, after being [illegible] 37 minutes. Rod showed the best range and is g[illegible] speed, though not so fast as Silverplate nor so stylish [illegible] moving. Plate quarters her ground nicely and r[illegible] very well, but is so afraid of her handler that the moment she strikes a point she is devoid of style.

SECOND SERIES

Doris—Glenbeigh Jr.—At 2:08 the first brace of the second series was cast off and worked up a little swale [illegible] side of a small knoll. Doris soon winded [illegible] and drew up nicely, the birds running in [illegible] Glenbeigh, coming up while the bitch [illegible] ing bevy, passed twice between [illegible] without noticing them. Doris, after roading for about [illegible] yards, dropped to a point. Walters shot and Doris was steady. Down 12 minutes. In this heat Doris ranged much better and showed far more speed than on Monday.

Silverplate—Nimrod.—They were again put down at 2:25 and ran an hour with about the same ill-luck in not finding birds that any work could be done on, as before. At last Rod pointed a lone bird. Plate was ordered up to back, but showed no evidence of knowing what backing meant. Dodge shot, and both were steady. Later on Plate also pointed a single. These were all that were found.

Jim Bassford—Glenbeigh Jr.—Were cast off and worked toward home, but without results.

The conditions during the day were very unfavorable; a strong and drying north wind prevailed all day, making the day's work very unsatisfactory. Bevies were marked down and not a bird could be found by the dogs, while the teams would flush them afterward.

THURSDAY

Doris—Nimrod.—At 10:05 Thursday morning Doris and Nimrod were cast off about one mile south of the Monterey Railroad and worked east. The day was bright and warm and all conditions proved favorable for good work. After a short run Doris ran into a bevy and dropped promptly to flush. Following the birds into good cover, Doris pointed a single. A moment later Rod also pointed a single, and Doris backed indifferently. Dodge shot, and Doris broke in. Rod again pointed, and Doris refused to back. Both dogs were now working out the ground well, Doris still improving in her speed and hunting diligently. Rod again pointed and Doris again refused to honor it. Next Doris pointed and Rod backed handsomely, but no bird could be raised. Doris again pointed and Rod backed, but no bird found. To the next point by Doris, which Rod backed, Walters flushed and shot; both dogs steady. Still working over the same ground Rod pointed and Doris backed well. Doris then made one and Rod two points. Then Doris pointed, but no bird was raised. Rod followed with a point. Then Doris and Rod each made a point from which no birds were raised. Then Doris pointed again, backed by Rod. Down 58 minutes. This was the best heat of the trials, both of the young dogs doing nice work. In her first heat Doris was quite slow and very contracted in her range, but in this one she got out very well and showed very fair speed. Rod also was much improved in his work and showed a very level head, outclassing the bitch in range, pointing, backing and stanchness in this heat, but from the much better work she had done in the previous heats she was entitled to the decision.

ALL-AGE STAKES

[illegible] announcement of the winners in [illegible] were ordered ready.

Sam Weller—Mercury.—T. J. Wattson's black, white and tan English setter dog Sam Weller (Roderigo—Dixie), handled by Clarence A. Haight, and A. P. Kerckhoff's lemon ticked English setter dog Mercury (Dick Bondhu—Sunlit), handled by M. D. Walters, were cast off in good cover on rolling hills at 11:10. Both dogs are fast and wide rangers and got away like a Chinese army fleeing from the Japs. For thirty-five minutes they kept the judges busy keeping in sight of them, but while covering a great deal of ground nothing was found and they were ordered up at 11:45.

Sirius—Honest John.—J. M. Kilgarif's orange and white English setter dog Sirius (Sportsman—Sweetheart), handled by Geo. T. Allender, and C. A. Haight's liver and white pointer dog Honest John (Dick H—Lady Max), handled by owner, were put down on the same grounds at 11:50. After about five minutes' run Sirius made a wide cast down a swale, struck scent, roaded across to the opposite side-hill, and pointed a small scattered bevy. John failed to back. Part of the birds flushed before the handlers came up and both dogs proved steady to wing. Ordered on, Sirius made a couple of jumps and dropped to point again. Working up the hill, John pointed a single; Sirius not near to back. Casting around the side for some distance no more birds were found. Down 47 minutes.

Betsy Mark—Glenbeigh.—W. G. Kerckhoff's black, white and tan English setter bitch Betsy Mark (Gath's Mark—Ightfield Sophie), handled by M. D. Walters, and Howard Vernon's liver and white pointer dog Glenbeigh (Grouse V—Rita), handled by Geo. T. Allender, were cast off in the same swale at 1:35, worked northeast over the rolling ground, and run until 2 o'clock without finding. The dogs were taken up and the party drove down to near the railroad, and at 2:20 they were put down again. Glenbeigh, casting up a little sagebrush flat, soon pointed a bevy. Following the birds, Glenbeigh pointed a single and was backed by Betsy. Allender shot and both dogs were steady. Glenbeigh then made another point, but moved in and flushed. Betsy now pointed, and Glenbeigh backed Working up to the head of the flat and casting through a narrow draw, Betsy pointed a bevy and held it well; Glenbeigh at the same time making game and was allowed to move on, Betsy still holding her point on the bevy. Glenbeigh, moving in between Betsy and the bevy, pointed the same birds, held his point a moment, then sprang in and flushed. Following the birds, Glenbeigh again found and pointed, Betsy backing, Allender shot, and Glenbeigh broke in. Taking up the scent of the running birds, both dogs roaded to a flush. Turning back toward where the birds were first found, Betsy pointed and Glenbeigh backed. Then Betsy secured another point. Down one hour and fifty-three minutes.

SECOND SERIES

Mercury—Sam Weller.—This brace was cast off at 3:43 and worked down to the northeast corner of the inclosure and around a small knoll and back. Coming around to the eastern side of the knoll, Mercury pointed a bevy which flushed rather wild through his unsteadiness. The birds went to high brush and were not followed. The dogs were then worked west until 4:10 without further results.

FRIDAY

Mercury—Glenbeigh.—At 10:30 Friday morning this brace was put down on the upper part of the grounds. After a short run Glenbeigh, working to the east, stopped, drew up, and pointed stanchly until his handler came up, then cast off. No bird could be raised. Working back in the opposite direction, Glen pointed and Mercury backed. Allender shot, and both dogs were steady. Glen made another point, from which no bird could be raised. Down 18 minutes.

Sirius—Betsy Mark.—This brace was cast off at 10:55 and worked toward the northeast corner. Betsy pointed, but no bird at the time was found; but working into heavy brush a few birds were flushed a little farther on. At 12:10 they were taken up.

Glenbeigh is a fast and wide ranger with good style in moving, but rather short-gaited; he is snappy in action and stylish on his points. He has a provoking habit of stopping to point, then discovering his error and moving off again.

Betsy Mark failed sadly to verify the promise she gave in last year's trials, when she won the Derby and made also a fine showing in the All-Age Stakes. She is fast and snappy in her work and very positive in her points, but she does not range out nearly so well as last year, when the whole character of her work was immeasurably better than this year. Possibly the accidental loss of an eye in some measure accounts for it.

Mercury, while a somewhat wider ranger than in his Derby form, does not show up so well nor do anywhere such good work.

Sirius—Old Si, as he is familiarly known—now over nine years old, is the same old business-like, level-headed, positive worker that he has always been. If he had the speed and dash necessary for a field trial dog it would take a corker to beat him, for he makes no mistakes.

During lunch hour the judges, Messrs. Wm. Dormer and C. E. Post—Mr. Kerckhoff being disqualified—announced the winners.

THE AMATEUR STAKES

The Amateur Stakes had eight entries, the bad weather preventing several dogs from being on hand to run. It was started immediately after lunch, with H. T. Payne, C. A. Haight and T. J. Wattson as judges. The starters were:

S. Bullene's red dog Dane with J. G. Edwards' black, white and tan English setter dog Dick Foot.

J. W. Tholcke's lemon ticked English setter bitch Salina Noble (Fred W—Countess Noble) with C. Z. Hebert's black pointer dog Joe (Old Black Joe II—Black Bess).

F. S. Palmer's red dog Salinas Dick with R Storms' red and white cross-bred Irish setter dog Red Dan.

W. Harlan's black, white and tan English setter dog Midas (Mercury—Johanna) with Fred Dexter's orange and white English setter dog Argus (Harold—Sunlit).

Birds were very scarce and but little work was done, and, for lack of breaking, it was not of a high order. The natural quality of Midas and Salina Noble was of a high order, and with proper training they should show up well in next year's All-Age Stakes. The judges had no difficulty in placing them: 1st, Midas; 2nd, Salina Noble; 3d, Red Dan.

The social features of the meeting were well arranged and timely and no less well enjoyed. The visitors were met at Castroville, a town about twenty miles from Salinas, by a committee consisting of C. Z. Hebert and J. W. Tholcke, and again at the Salinas depot by the Salinas Rod and Gun Club, with a brass band. A splendid barbecue awaited them, with the necessary wherewithal to wash down the delicious beef. A couple of hours were spent in fortifying the inner man against the trials, and, what afterward proved to be, the tribulations of the morrow. On Friday night the Salinas Rod and Gun Club tendered a reception and a ball, not only to the visiting sportsmen, but to the dogs as well, for the winners in all the stakes were taken into the hall and paraded before a large number of admiring citizens, who had gathered to pay their respects to the victors. The ball was a grand success; the youth and beauty of this most hospitable town vying with each other in their attentions to the visitors and making the night of revelry as enjoyable as possible.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club was held Wednesday evening, February 13, in the parlors of the Abbott House, President Edwards in the chair.

The minutes of the last previous meeting were read, and, on motion, approved.

The President declared the first order of business to be the election of new members, and T. J. Wattson, Howard Vernon, Samuel F. Hughes and J. P. Clabrough were elected.

The next order of business was the election of officers for the ensuing year, and H. T. Payne nominated J. G. Edwards, the present incumbent, for reëlection as president.

Mr. Edwards begged to decline, stating that he had now served the club to the best of his ability for ten years and he sincerely asked the club to excuse him from further service, and nominated Mr. W. G. Kerckhoff, of Los Angeles.

Judge Post reviewed the history of the club at some length, paying a high tribute to the long, faithful and valuable services of Mr. Edwards. He said that the office for several years had been forced upon Mr. Edwards contrary to his wishes, that his faithful service for ten years entitled him to be placed on the retired list, and that opposite his name on the roll of honor should be written, "well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Before taking his seat Judge Post seconded the nomination of Mr. Kerckhoff, saying that all who knew him recognized him as a man of affairs, a perfect gentleman and a true sportsman.

Mr. Kerckhoff begged to decline, stating that he had large business interests in various parts of the Coast that demanded so much of his attention that he felt that he would not be able to give the affairs of the club the consideration due them.

Mr. Post and others again urged Mr. Kerckhoff to accept in such strong terms that he at last yielded and was elected by acclamation.

The officers elected were: President, W. G. Kerckhoff, of Los Angeles; 1st vice-president, J. E. Terry, of Sacramento; 2nd vice-president, Howard Vernon of San Francisco; secretary-treasurer, J. M. Kilgarif, of San Francisco; executive committee, T. J. Wattson, C. A. Haight and H. T. Payne, of San Francisco, C. N. Post, of Sacramento, and C. Z. Hebert, of Salinas.

The Secretary called the attention of the club to the death of its late honored member, Mr. W. E. Houghton of Bakersfield.

Judge Post, speaking very feelingly of the sad death of this old and enthusiastic member, moved the appointment of a committee of three on resolutions, and Judge Post, H. T. Payne and J. G. Edwards were appointed.

On motion, the time and place for holding the next trials were referred to the executive comittee.

On motion of Judge Post, a vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Edwards for the able and faithful manner in which he had served the club for the past ten years.

The report of the secretary-treasurer was read, showing a safe balance on hand.

After drinking the health of the new president in "extra dry" the meeting adjourned.

SCOTTISH TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) These were a very good lot. In challenge dogs Kilroy turned the tables on Tiree, but I fully expected to see Rhudunan in the money. In challenge bitches Culbleau showed better than Wankie Diana, who would not get her ears up and had to pay the penalty. Bellingham Bailiff won in open dogs, with Wankie Tam second and Kilstree third. The former has very much improved since the terrier show at Brookline, and barring his defective hock is a sterling good terrier all over. Kilstree has just arrived here and needs time to recruit. Dunbarton, reserve, has a good head and ears but is a bit light in bone and not too good in front. Wankie Dandie, V.H.C., has a nice head and ear but is a bit too long in back. The Colored Preacher, H.C., has a good hard coat and good body but he is a bit thick in head and does not always get his ears up. In open bitches Zembra emerged from her retirement and won, scoring in coat and straightness of bone, but she is now quite strong enough in head. Vorda has a good head, ears a trifle large, grand bone and legs and feet, but is a bit long in body. Wankie Janet is a high quality bitch, with a beautiful neck and good head and ears, but hardly dense enough in coat. Ranee, reserve, has a very hard, dense coat. Wankie Cambria, H.C., is good in head and ear with capital legs and feet, a trifle long in body. The winners in the American-bred dog class all appeared in the open class and were placed in the same order, but in the bitch class there was a bit of a shake up. Wankie Janet won, with Wankie Diana second and Miss Ted third; the latter was overlooked in the open class, where she got nothing. Wankie Cambria and Newcastle Rona were highly commended. Dunbarton won in dog puppies from Compton Styx, and in bitches Highland Fling won from her litter sister Highland Flossie.

SKYE TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) In challenge dogs Elphinstone won, with Barnaby Rudge second and Sir Thomas reserve, and Queen of Skyes won from Endcliffe Maggie in challenge bitches, the judge evidently favoring the smaller dogs. Rhoderick Dhu was alone in open dogs, but he is a big one, and in open bitches Princess Mary, a nice puppy, won from Wheel of Fortune, who was out of coat.

YORKSHIRE TERRIERS —(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) These were the best lot seen at any of our shows for a number of years. The winner in the challenge class, Minnie York, has won most of her prizes in the West. She is a nice little terrier, a bit faded in color. The open dog winner, Bradford Rejector, has a wonderful coat, very even color, and a good terrier head. Harboro Swell II, second, is a grand little dog, beaten only in length of coat by the winner. Prince had a very close brush with Eric II for third money; the latter is shorter in coat but richer in color and got the reserve card. Little Smart, V.H.C., is nice in color but short in coat, and Pearl is a pretty little toy. Prince Harry and Chelsea King were absent. In open bitches first prize was awarded to Pride of New York, best in color. Duchess, second, will improve. Nell, third, loses in color although she has a long coat. Jessie, reserve, is a pretty little terrier with a good head but is rather short of body coat. Queenie is a nice little bitch with good tan color but short in head. Nancy is too light incolor and Lady is short of coat.

TOY TERRIERS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) Were by no means a good lot. The winner was best in head, coat and color.

PUGS.—These were a very small entry for a Westminster Kennel Club's show. The challenge classes were empty, and the open classes were lacking not only in numbers but also in quality. Pomona Fritz won in the dog class—a biggish dog, with fair skull and wrinkle and good body but coarse. Punch was a second best of a poor lot that do not merit any description. The bitches were about on a par with the dogs, and the prizes they won more than represented their value, although I dare say I shall be accused by their owners of high treason for saying so.

TOY SPANIELS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) Here we had quality and quantity enough to make up for the deficiency in the pug classes. With Romeo and King of the Charlies representing King Charles spaniels and Exeter Earl the Duke of Marlborough's favorites the challenge class was well filled. Romeo, by his shorter face and deeper stop, was declared the winner, but he lacks the flat coat and richer color of his kennel companion. Exeter Earl was not in full bloom and suffered in consequence. In the open class for King Charles dogs Duke of Chester was an easy winner, having a very big nose, short face, good skull, deep and nicely placed ears. Tutti Frutti, second, has a good face and skull but is now showing age. Romeo II, third, has a very short face but his nose is a bit pinched and he is a shade dark in color of tan. Modern Charlie, reserve, has a good face and nice color. Rouge et Noir, V.H.C., is good in color but a bit long in face. Philadelphia Charlie, H.C., is too long in face and pale in color of tan. Brooklyn Charlie was absent. In bitches Mrs. F. Senn's Pet won, being very short in face with good ears and a nice size. Sweet Marie, second, has a very flat and glossy coat of good color. St. Ives Myrtle is short in face but gone gray. Lady de Lena, reserve, is too big, and Beauty, V.H.C., is short of coat and dark in markings.

Blenheim spaniels were headed by Mrs. Bernstein's Murilla, a frequent winner, and though not quite flat enough in coat her well-domed skull and short face leave little to be desired. Golden Prince, second, has a better skull than Young Duke, third, whose color and markings made it a pretty even thing. Chiselhurst Hero, reserve, but for being entirely out of coat might have been in the money as his facial properties are not to be overlooked.

Ruby spaniels found Mrs. Senn again to the front with Marguerite, sound in color, short-faced and good in coat and condition. Yetsan Chief, second, has a good skull, well-defined stop and well-finished face, but he was out of coat and looked leggy and there is a faint trace of white blaze on his skull. Ruby, third, is very close up with the winners; and Mrs. Rothschild's entry wants time to mature.

Bell won in Prince Charles spaniels, but his markings do not add to the beauty of his expression; and Betsey Trotman is too long-faced.

Japanese spaniels were a nice lot, although some of them ran to the large side. The class was divided by sex and in the dog division Yatsu won, being better in face and much smaller than his competitors. Mikado, second, is a good skulled dog with a very short face and good coat. Kuma, third, was also in full coat but a trifle long in body. Prince Yodo, reserve, is short in coat. The winning bitch, Chin Chin, is small and nice in coat but scarcely up to the second prize winner, Yokie, in skull, face or markings; the latter was, unfortunately, dead out of coat. Ki Ku, third, is too large.

ITALIAN GREYHOUNDS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) Champion Spring won in the challenge class from Champion Sprite, who now looks very matronly. In open dogs Prince won from Souris, who has gone thick and cloddy. The better size of Jennie II beat Beauty, whose head and neck are superb, but she is a trifle large. Folly is a better size than Gyp, reserve, who is too large and coarse.

SCHIPPERKES.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) The imported Shtoots easily outclassed all his rivals, being better in head, mane, coat and bone and also in carriage of ear than any of them.

MISCELLANEOUS.—(Mr. Jas. Taylor.) Kimo, an Eskimo, was the winner, although he is light in bone and not so characteristic in color as some I have seen. Doc, second, is a Maltese terrier not quite correct in coat. Romeo, another Maltese, is inferior in coat. Mount Vernon Rake, an old English terrier, is coarse and thick in head.

JAS. MORTIMER.

UNITED STATES FIELD TRIAL CLUB'S AFFAIRS

HICKORY VALLEY, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In the AMERICAN FIELD of February 16 I see Major Taylor's partial report of the meeting of the board of governors of the United States F. T. Club at New Albany, Miss. It has become laughable among many of my friends who know how the Major always jumps at everything that he thinks will sound bad about me; and nothing of this kind ever occurs that it does not appear in print. And it is more laughable how he always leaves out anything good that I do or try to do. He takes particular pains to leave out of his report the facts that were offered Mr. Madison to try to get him to stay with the United States club.

The board of governors refused Mr. Madison's resignation at West Point, thinking, perhaps, he might reconsider and still stay with the club. At New Albany I learned, through Prof. Osthaus, that Mr. Madison's greatest objection to the United States club was that four handlers belonged to the club. As soon as I heard this I at once said that, for the good of the United States club, I would resign if Mr. Madison would stay with the club; and we refused his resignation, and had Prof. Osthaus send a telegram to Mr. Madison that was about as follows:

NEW ALBANY, MISS., February 6, 1895.

P. T. MADISON, Indianapolis, Ind.
Your resignation not accepted. If you will remain with club, Avent, Nesbitt and Buckle will resign. Stafford will not handle any more dogs in trials. Answer.

E. H. OSTHAUS.

Mr. Madison's reply was rather a puzzle to many, and was as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 6, 1895.

E. H. OSTHAUS, New Albany, Miss.
Will stick to agreement made with Taylor, Waters and Osthaus.

P. T. MADISON.

These two telegrams I saw, and I think they are given nearly word for word. Prof. Osthaus again telegraphed Mr. Madison on the subject and received a reply, but neither one of these telegrams was shown to us; but Prof. Osthaus reported that he still insisted on the club accepting his resignation, which was done. These facts were all discussed in presence of Major Taylor and other reporters, and several of the board stated that they wanted it publicly known, through the papers, that the handlers had offered all they could in order to have perfect harmony exist in the United States club, but still the Major does not let the good side of the despised members of the club appear. On Tuesday night, at about 7:30, the reporters appeared at Rogers' Hotel to attend the board meeting, but, as one of the members, Mr. L. McGrew, could not arrive before the 8:30 train, it was decided that the meeting would not be called to order until after he arrived; so Mr. C. E. Buckle was asked by myself and Mr. Stafford to go to the reporters and tell them that they would be sent for before the meeting was called to order. This he did. The Major, in his wild anxiety to find fault with the board of governors of the United States club and to help disband the club, rushed to telegraph the AMERICAN FIELD the following telegram at least one hour and a half before the meeting was called to order:

NEW ALBANY, MISS., February 5, 1895.

Admittance to the meeting of the board of governors of the United States Field Trial Club denied reporters; the first circumstance of this kind in the history of the association.

J. M. TAYLOR.

After Mr. McGrew had arrived on the train (about 8:30) Mr. Stafford was instructed to write a note to the reporters saying the meeting would be called to order as soon as they could arrive and that we would be glad to have them. The board of governors waited nearly an hour for them, and finally a very long a[illegible] that would cover two pages of note pa[illegible] to attend and signed by Major J. M. [illegible] Waters. If this note and the one s[illegible] them to the meeting, are ever publish[illegible] ers will laugh. The meeting was t[illegible] at about 9:30, without them. Why w[illegible] Major Taylor did not at once go to the telegraph office and stop the publication of his first telegram upon receiving a written invitation to attend the meeting? Why was it that he did not explain fully in the next issue that he had made a mistake? Why did he not report the handlers' very generous proposition to withdraw? Why was Mr. Madison's telegram worded like it was? Why is it that the Major always mentions everything that he thinks will injure me? Why is it that he never mentions anything good I do for the interest of field trials? Why should he try to work every scheme to disband the United States club and organize a new club in opposition? Who is it that is trying to stir up sectional feeling? Let every member of the United States club and every reader of the AMERICAN FIELD know all the facts and judge for themselves who is trying to stir up a sectional feeling that is sure to injure field trials for years. I still think that Mr. Madison will see that what we have done and propose to do is for the good of field trials, and will be a member of the United States club again; at least we all hope so. Oh, what would we give to see Dr. Rowe in good health and able to attend field trials again. Such little troubles would be easily settled instead of being stirred up by his reporter.

Major Taylor seems to think every member of the United States club will vote to disband the club; in this he is mistaken. With the long list of members only three have intimated such a thing so far, and only five other members can be counted as doubtful ones; and they, I hope, are true sportsmen, who, when they have heard both sides of the question fully discussed and know the facts, will stay with the club. Three-fourths of the members of the United States Field Trial Club have already been heard from, and they all fully agree that the club should go on; and further, they say that so long as they see that the club is run on a fair and square business-like principle they will stand by it. And the Major can rest assured that with Messrs. Norvin T. Harris, J. N. Seale and H. Hulman Jr. on the committee for selecting judges, they will not impose upon the public by putting up judges that will have axes to grind; they will have the best or none. Let him just wait and see if the public is not well pleased with their selections.

All we want is a fair and square deal, and that is all the United States club proposes to do; and honorable sportsmen will realize it. Many other sportsmen from the East, North and South will be proposed for membership at the next governors' meeting, and we hope to see Mr. Madison, and others that are expected, go out with us again; and beyond a doubt within thirty days there will be more members on the roll than there were at our last annual meeting.

CLUB MEETINGS

United States Field Trial Club

LOUISVILLE, KY.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The board of governors of the United States Field Trial Club met in the Columbian Building, this city, at 1 p. m., March 4, a majority of the board being present. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"That we desire to express our deep feeling of pleasure at the contents of a letter just received by one of the members of this board from Dr. N. Rowe, stating that he is much improved in health and that he thinks he is now on the road to a complete recovery from his protracted illness; also to express our appreciation of his deep interest in the future success of this club."

The secretary stated that he had the resignation from this club of Mr. H. Hulman Jr., dated February 14, 1895, and asked that action be taken on the same; whereupon Mr. Avent laid upon the table the following letter, which he had just received, asking that it might be read:

TERRE HAUTE, IND., March 1, 1895.

J. M. AVENT, ESQ.
Dear Sir:—While it is my intention to withdraw from the dog world, for the present at least, I, however, do not care to feel that my resignation from the United States Field Trial Club would in any way cause any person to think I was leaving it with any intention of hurting the future prosperity of the club. I will therefore withdraw my resignation for the present, and if I find that later on I cannot spare the time devoted to its interests I will then resign.

Yours very truly, H. HULMAN JR.

The resignation of Mr. C. G. Stoddard was then read by the secretary; also a letter from Mr. Stoddard received since his resignation was forwarded. Action on same was deferred till the next meeting of the board of governors.

The secretary stated that the only other resignations tendered to date were those of Messrs. Osthaus and Buckle, and it was moved by Mr. Avent, seconded by Mr. Rowland, that action on said resignations be deferred till the next meeting of the board of governors, as it is believed that said resignations were tendered under a misapprehension regarding the condition of the club at that time. Carried.

Mr. W. F. Grimstead, of Cairo, Ill., and Mr. Theo. Goodman, of Terre Haute, Ind., were elected to membership in the club.

The committee on grounds for the (A) trials of the club unanimously reported that it had selected Carlisle, Ind., as the place to hold the above trials, the date of commencing same to be November 4, 1895.

It was moved and seconded that the prairie chicken trials, that were to have been held in September in the Northwest, be abandoned; and that this club, with the sanction and consent of the Eastern Field Trial Club, hold a field trial on the grounds of the latter club in the vicinity of Newton, N. C., commencing W[illegible] November 28, 1895, the former committee on the [illegible] western grounds to be made the committee on [illegible] for this trial. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the stakes and purses [illegible] same as those of trials A and B. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the date of closing the en[illegible] for the North Carolina trials be made fifteen days later than the time set for closing the entries for the Eastern [illegible] Trial Club's trials. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the committee on judges—[illegible], Hulman and Seaie—be requested to select [illegible] various trials as soon as possibie, and report [illegible] for publication. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the committee on judges be requested to select a fourth judge for each trial, as an alternate judge. Carried.

The secretary recommended that an amendment to the constitution be made so as to have two financial officers for the club, viz., a secretary and a treasurer; referred to a club meeting for action.

Meeting adjourned.

W. B. STAFFORD,
Secy.-Treas.

The Bloodhound Club.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The first annual meeting of the English Bloodhound Club was held February 21, at Madison Square Garden, New York, Mr. J. L. Wincheli presiding. The secretary-treasurer's report was read and accepted, there being a balance in the treasury after the payment of all liabilities.

It was voted to offer specials at the Boston show, and at the western shows in the future. It was also voted that photographs of the winners at various dog shows be sent to club members.

The committee appointed to investigate the registration of dogs reported that several "fake" pedigrees had been discovered. It was also found that many foxhounds and bloodhounds had been bred together, and the offspring advertised as pure bred bloodhounds. Many instances of this kind were brought to attention of the club by Mr. Winchell, Mr. Davidson, Dr. Lougest and others, and several letters from those who had been victimized in this manner were read.

On suggestion of Mr. Davidson, a committee, consisting of Messrs. Winchell, C. W. Lougest and Dr. A. F. Stahi, was appointed to communicate with the secretary of the American Kennei Club, with a view to obtaining a copy of ail applications for registration, in order that they may be thoroughly investigated and any fraud detected before registration. It was also voted that the club keep a stud book of its own.

The following officers were elected to serve for one year: President, J. L. Winchell, Fairhaven, Vt.; vice-president, Dr. C. W. Lougest, Franklin, Mass.; secretary-treasurer, Charles H. Innes, 23 Court Street, Boston, Mass ; delegate to the American Kennel Club, Dr. A. F. Stahi, Boston, Mass.

After an informal discussion the meeting adjourned, subject to the cail of the chair.

CHARLES H. INNES,
Secretary-Treasurer.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Reading the AMERICAN FIELD of February 16 I came across a letter from Mr. George Lowe on the English setter type of the present and the past. I have not missed a dog show held by the Washington Kennei Club since 1877 (their first), and have seen ail the English setters brought for competition and attended twenty-odd field triais, and so far as I am competent to judge I fuily agree with Mr. Lowe. My views and ideas coincide with his, and I feel highly flattered so high an authority substantiates my views. I have expressed them many times, but have been so sat upon that I have kept silent; but when Mr. Lowe's letter appeared and I sat down to read it I was more than delighted, and it was with the greatest satisfaction that I digested every word. Every word he utters is truth, and I rejoice to know that two gentlemen who can afford it retain the old and true type so fuil of meritorious beauty to the eye of the field sportsman. All hail, Brother Lowe!

NOTES

I READ with interest in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 9 Mr. Adams' article and I agree with him that Plover should have quoted all facts and should have also given the great pointer Rip Rap a notice. If the honorable Mr. John had left his important public business long enough to have attended the United States triais at Grand Junction in 1894, and at West Point in 1895, he would have been badly disappointed in the great Strideaway's work. Come to the field trials, Plover, and then you will know better what to breed to. It is awfui hard for anyone to stay at home and tell much about these newspaper dogs. Strideaway is a good dog for a close country like Bicknell, when heats are not too long. But how I would like to see him in a two hours' heat under competent judges in a big open country like at West Point. The public would see his iate performance repeated, But the pubiic wiii never get to see him again. The proposition of Mr. Adams to run ten dogs in a match is a good one and catches me exactiy. I would rather see it open to as many as would come in; and after paying the expenses of the trials, let the remainder be added to the purse. If there are over ten entries I would suggest a consoiation prize of $50 for the poorest dog in the stake. I am willing to run under the United States club's rules and to let its present committee for selecting judges—Mr. H. Hulman Jr., Mr. N.T. Harris and Mr. J. N. Seaie—select the three judges, and to iet the judges have full power to manage ali details not agreed upon. I will also suggest the secretary of the United States club, Mr. W. B. Stafford, as stakeholder; and that $50 forfeit be put up in the hands of Mr. Stafford, so that ali can know how many entries we will have before we go to West Point. I would suggest that the time limit of this match should not be less than two hours in the first series, nor less than thirty minutes in the second and third series; and as much ionger as the judges want to thoroughiy test the dogs. I don't think any stake with as many as ten starters shouid be ended without going into the third series. This would be a more thorough test of high-class dogs, and would not give outsiders so much room for thinking judges were pulling for their favorites. Some of my dogs are now sick with distemper, and have been since December; and all seem to be off, but stiii I will start two, and perhaps three, in such a stake. But if I cannot start a dog I will give two hundred doiiars toward the purse anyway. This shouid be the best stake of the season. Now come ail who have first-class dogs and iet us have a thorough test of high-ciass dogs without any favors shown to pets; nothing barred; the winner is what we want to see. This stake wiii draw a iarge crowd. Let all who want to subscribe to such a stake let it be known through the papers or by sending their names to Mr. W. B. Stafford of Trenton, Tenn., and he will report how many entries are proposed.

Hickory Valley, Tenn. J. M. AVENT.

UPON reading Plover's article in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 23, it gave me pleasure to find that he is a man who is not infallible, and when he makes a mistake is man enough to say so. Would that all men couid, and would, do so. In regard to Mr. P. H. Bryson's articie in the same issue, in which he charges Lad of Rush with biinking a bevy, this is the second time he has made that charge through the papers, and he says no reporter saw the work. Why he wishes to do Lad an injustice I cannot see. Lad did not biink his point. Mr. St. M. Mundy, reporting for the Turf, Fieid and Farm and the Fancier's Journal, was the first man there. Mr. Bryson and myself were also there. We were within twenty feet of the birds Lad had not located. Mr. Bryson spoke to the dog twice, cautioned him to be steady. I then spoke to Lad, when Mr. Mundy told me I ought not to speak; I had no right to do so. I should not have done so had Mr. Bryson not spoken. I think Mr. Bryson's speaking to him caused him to cast to the left and for the moment iose the birds, but that he would have iocated if let alone there can be no doubt. Now in regard to what he says about holding Lad up, does he recollect Mr. Stephenson, one of the judges, cailing out to him asking why he was holding up Lad, that Novelist was roaming cheerfully on the other side of the woods? This was in sight of the judges, reporters and spectators, except Mr. Madison, one of the judges, and Mr. Avent, handier of Novelist. It does look to me a little strange that all the reporters and spectators should be wrong and Mr. Bryson right. Be that as it may, I have tried to get up a trial so as to show the public whether Lad of Rush has improved or deteriorated. In the AMERICAN FIELD of February 9 I proposed a trial of ten dogs, which I thought iiberal, as I barred no dog, but not a word has come from anyone accepting. I was very anxious to get up this triai, and have kept Lad in Mississippi in the best shape possible awaiting to hear from others; but not a word. Mr. Blankenbaker is anxious to return home, and as there appears to be no chance to get up a race I can see no reason to put any more expense on Lad for that purpose. If it had not been for this race I might have had Lad of Rush "Champion Lad of Rush." I have also iost considerable by not breeding to him. I have had to breed him a few times, could not get out of it, but could have bred him many times more since January 1.

Louisville, Ky. J. L. ADAMS.

I WOULD like to ask, through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD, why the managers of the Westminster Kennel Club allowed the Gordon setter bitch Princess Bonnie to be entered in three classes without having the date of her birth mentioned, as, in fact, were all of Mr. Dixon's dogs, in direct contradiction of the rules for the government of dogs shows as adopted by the American Kennel Club; for Rule III says the entry must clearly identify the dog to be exhibited by name, and, if known, its date of birth, name of its sire and dam and the name of its breeder; should any of these particulars be unknown to the exhibitor it must be so stated on the entry blank. Princess Bonnie was second in open bitches, first in the puppy bitch class and second in the novice ciass. Is it right to aiiow a dog to be entered in puppy and open ciasses without knowing its date of birth? How old was this bitch? Also why did Mr. Davidson fail to take any notice of that good bitch Lady Maud, a dog that he considered good enough to place second on two occasions at Boston, but on this occasion not good enough to be noticed? Also why did he give Lady Maud a red ribbon in novice bitches and write the figure 2 in his book, and then, when the prize money was paid, her owner only receive third money, and when asked if a mistake was not made, say "no?" On iooking up Honest John's book a queer figure presented itseif, and on being questioned he remarked, "Oh, that is the way we make a 3 in England." I would like to say if that was the way he was taught to make a 3 it is about time he went to schooi in America. I am English, and was educated there, and such a specimen of a figure I never saw before. If Lady Maud did not win second prize why did she receive a red ribbon in the ring and only third in the book? The question is obvious when it is known that Princess Bonnie was still in the ring.

Providence, R. I. EDWARD O. TUCKER.

WHILE attending the shows here I have noticed in all the society London papers articles concerning a grand puppy secured by Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, during her late long stay in St. Petersburg. Alex is the name of the dog, and is described as being eight months old and already over twenty-eight inches at the shoulder, with very long, wavy white hair and a splendid evenly marked fawn brindle head. Alex was bred by Mr. A. J. Rousseau (who, by the way, is a Jersey man) in St. Petersburg, by his famous stud dog, Ataman the Great, out of his Outcheschka, the only gold medal wolfhound in the world. Her Royal Highness secured Alex for show purposes and he will be shown at all the big English shows. The fact that the Princess, who could have had the choice of all the dogs in the Imperial Kennels of Russia for a show dog, secured Alex from Mr. A. J. Rousseau's large kenneis, speaks well for his endeavors to keep at the top of the tree as a borzoi breeder. I also hear that last year it was his Naian (Kinjall) that took the first prize at wolf coursing in St. Petersburg. The dog attacked the wolf in a most determined manner and never let him go for a second. Perhaps these few facts will make some of our American borzoi breeders reconsider and alter their opinion concerning Mr. A. J. Rousseau as an authority on the borzoi.

London, Eng. AMERICAN.

Two weeks ago we gave a brief account of how a Rugby (Eng.) master courageously risked his life on a half frozen river in January in order to save an Airedale terrier from drowning; now word comes from Newark, N. J., that on March 1, a man named Horace Johnson undertook a similarly heroic feat at Milburn, N. J., while trying to rescue a dog that was drowning in a pond on the north side of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, a short distance from the station. The dog was struggling in the water near the ice and was trying to raise itself from the water, but was too weak. Johnson threw off his heavy overcoat and started toward the drowning canine. In order to get near it he had to cross an ice covered dam and was in danger of falling twenty feet to the rocky bottom. Johnson then cautiously advanced for about thirty feet on the ice, and, when within a few feet of the dog, stretched himself at full length on the ice and with his right hand clutched the dog by the back of the neck, raising it from the water. His gallant rescue of the poor brute was loudly cheered by a number of people who had been watching with intense interest.

ALLOW me to say that the Irish setter bitch Lady Noreen (13924), which I purchased from the Redstone Kennels at the New York dog show, is by old Champion Elcho out of Champion Noreen and was whelped April 3, 1885. She is a litter sister of Mr. F. H. Perry's Nino, of which you published an interesting account in your journal of February 23, and I only hope that Mr. Perry has as fine a specimen of the true type of Irish setter in Nino as I have acquired in Lady Noreen. As I look at her big, strong body and magnificently long and lean head, dark eyes, rich color and good feather, and then recall the small, puny, yellow-eyed bitches to which we give the highest prizes now at our shows, I am able to realize how we have slipped away from the real Irish type, until our judges are now all at sea and go on giving awards to dogs far removed from the true standard as laid down by the Irish Setter Club. Lady Noreen is excellent in the field and moves as grandly and actively as if only five years old. I am more than pleased with my purchase.

New York. JAMES B. BLOSSOM.

IT has been said that to him that waits all things will come (or words to that effect). Some time ago I sold a puppy I owned in one portion of this country to a gentleman in another, and on its arrival at the latter's home it was minus about one-half or two-thirds of its tail. Of course this affected materially the value of a finely bred English setter puppy. The shipper disclaimed any knowledge of this defect. I never saw the animal, and as it is a triangular conundrum yet unsolved I am led to believe the gentleman from Wyalusing, Pa., is the guilty party, as he is the first one I have seen offering a "tail" for sale or exchange (see his offer for the gun barrels in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD). Perhaps it would be well for him to "rise and explain" where, how and where he got that tail and relieve the minds of at least three "fellow travelers."

Wilmington, Del. E. W. JESTER.

THE Mascoutah Kennel Club's sixth annual show was opened on Tuesday of this week, and at this writing promises to outdo in popularity all previous years, the officers of the club being unanimous in the opinion that for a first day the attendance was a record one. Everything is in good running order, and the show is a credit to the management. A piece of bad news is the death, the night before the show opened, of Mr. J. R. Oughton's well-known Gordon setter bitch Dwight Effie; she was perfectly well when she left Detroit last Saturday night, but when her crate was opened at Chicago on Sunday it was at once seen that she was a very sick dog, and all efforts to revive her proved of no avail.

MR. JOE LEWIS, of Moodus, Conn., has purchased from Mr. E. B. Joachim, through Mr. Jas. Mortimer, the imported beagle dog Ringleader. It will be remembered that Mr. Lewis purchased Robino, another of this imported lot, at Providence nearly a year ago, and lost him by death, but he is determined to keep to the front in beagles. Ringleader won first at Providence, New York and Detroit, and he is the sire of the championship winner, as well as the reserve dog, at the last Crystal Palace Show. Mr. Lewis' enterprise deserves the encouragement of the beagle breeders of this country when he offers the services of a dog with such admirable qualities as Ringleader.

I BEG to advise you that judges and classes have been assigned for our approaching show as follows: Mr. James Mortimer—Bloodhounds, mastiffs, St. Bernards, Great Danes, Newfoundlands, Chesapeakes, beagles, bulldogs and fox terriers. Mr. Charles H. Mason—Spaniels, dachshunde, poodies, collies, terriers (except Boston and fox), pugs and miscellaneous. Maj. J. M. Taylor—Foxhounds, pointers and setters. Mr. H. W. Smith—Borzois, deerhounds and greyhounds. Mr. Arthur Mulvey (Cohassett, Mass.)—Boston terriers. Premium lists will be issued next week.

Boston, Mass. D. E. LOVELAND, Secy.

THE judges at the Pittsburg show, April 9, 10, 11 and 12, with the breeds assigned them, will be as follows: Mr. H. W. Lacy, for St. Bernards, pugs, beagles and Boston terriers; Mr. C. H. Mason, for pointers, setters, retrievers, spaniels, Chesapeakes, whippets, basset hounds, dachshunde, greyhounds, collies, Old English sheepdogs and bull terriers; Mr. James Mortimer for mastiffs, Great Danes, borzois, deerhounds, poodles, all terriers (except bull terriers), Italian greyhounds, schipperkes, toy spaniels, foxhounds, bulldogs and the miscellaneous class.

DR. H. CLAY GLOVER'S name is familiar and his reputation as a veterinarian is well known to all our readers. We have known him for over twenty-five years, and always as a good sportsman and a lover of the dog. The manner in which he has fulfilled his duties as veterinarian at the Westminster Kennel Club's shows for some years past has always called forth commendation, and the fact that he is selected for the important and arduous position is sufficient guarantee for the merits of his Imperial Dog Remedies, a full page advertisement of which appears in this week's issue.

PURSUANT to a resolution carried at an informal meeting of exhibitors, held at Madison Square Garden on Friday evening, February 22, I, as chairman pro tem., was instructed to appoint a committee of five to select names to be notified of a meeting to be called at an early date for the purpose of organizing a metropolitan kennel club, wherein the dog owners in and about New York may find a common interest. I have selected to aid me in this work Messrs. Thos. H. Terry, A. P. Vredenburgh, H. G. Trevor and Jas. Mortimer.

New York. H. T. FOOTE.

I NOTICE in your issue of February 23 an article from Phillip M. Essig, of Natchez, Miss., in which he says that I claimed through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD that the "Southern members joined the United States Field Trial Club for the purpose of invoking rule." In answer I will say that I deny absolutely Mr. Essig's statement and defy him or anyone else to produce the AMERICAN FIELD or any other paper showing wherein I have made such a statement.

Indianapolis, Ind. P. T. MADISON.

I SEE by the pug awards at Detroit that Mr. James Mortimer heartily indorses my judging at Columbus, O., a year ago, of which so much unfavorable comment (by interested parties, of course) was made at the time. Young Penrice (first in puppy class and one of the winning kennel at Columbus) is now placed over Haughty Madge for a special prize, and Al Von (first in the open class at Columbus) wins over Finsbury Duke, just as I placed them. It is only a question of time when justice rights the wrong.

Columbus, O. A. E. PITTS.

IN pursuance to a call by circular letter, issued by Mr. P. T. Madison, of Indianapolis, Ind., inviting all who are interested in the formation of a new field trial club to meet in Battery D, Chicago, March 6, at 7:30 p. m., some sixty responses, in person and by letter, had been received at the time of our going to press, and the organization of the new club was an assured fact. It will be known as the Continental Field Trial Club, and the list of names contains many of the names of the pioneers in field trials in America, but who have not been identified with field trial clubs for some time.

MR. E. M. OLDHAM, the well-known spaniel judge, has accepted a position with Spratts Patent, and his wide circle of acquaintance and thorough business qualifications should stand him in good stead. In the coming year he hopes to make the path of the dog man an easier one to travel, and will endeavor to ease up matters in the way of transportation of dogs to shows. His efforts to this end will be appreciated by both exhibitors and show committees.

IN last week's issue you spoke of Judith and her produce. I send you under separate cover a photo of St. Maurice, a puppy seven and one-half months old when the photo was taken, by Jim Blaine—Judith. I do not dream that the puppies will ever add to her reputation as a producing dam, but I hope that with care and patience I can get him in the "2:30 list." If I fail, however, I will console myself with the fact that his breeding is all right.

Louisville, Ky. W. B. GRUBBS.

IO, Dr. J.B. Lewis' grand rough-coated St. Bernard bitch by Champion Victor Joseph out of Tromba, has been purchased by Mr. Charles Joseph, of Chicago. She is in the challenge class, having won at Rockford, Omaha, Chicago, Lexington and Akron. In reference to parting with his favorite, Dr. Lewis writes: "I consider her one of the best brood bitches in America; and at the price paid for her by Mr. Joseph ($500) she is certainly a prize."

MR. B. F. SEITNER, of Dayton, Ohio, Commissioner of Fish and Game of the state and judge of the pointer class at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show, paid us a visit during the week. The cares of life seem to set easy with him. Mr. Seitner is quite as as good a judge of proper laws for the protection of game and fish as he is of pointers, as may be inferred from reading the note in our Game and Shooting Department.

AT a meeting held on the evening of February 19 the Alameda County Sportsmen's Association decided to forego its dog show at Oakland, Cal., this year, the association deeming it advisable to assist in making the San Francisco show a thorough success, in return for the support given last year to the Oakland show by the San Francisco fanciers.

ALTHOUGH Mr. J. H. Trevor's kennel of poodles proved almost invincible at the New York show, he is said to be holding a good one back for the Pittsburg show. This is the black curly dog Rip, entered at New York but not shown; he was purchased last year in France for Mr. Trevor by Mr. Jas. Mortimer.

PLEASE allow me, through sympathy with the gentleman that lost his dog in Des Moines, Iowa, to thank Mr. F. W. Stoutenburgh for his kindness. If there were more such honorable men probably I would not feel the loss of a valuable English setter bitch that disappeared from her kennel very mysteriously in October, 1893.

Alliance, O. J. M. RICE.

PLEASE thank, for me, the many gentlemen who answered my advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD for a retriever. I would gladly answer each and every one personally; but, alas, I am but human, and it would take a month of hard work to do it. I would say I have been perfectly suited.

Colorado Springs. SAM W. VIDLER.

I AM glad that there is a prospect of having a field trial in Kentucky for 1896. This will be a good thing for the dog men of Kentucky, for I want them to take a greater interest in breeding fine field dogs, and I think a field trial will help that.

Willlamsburg, Ky. NICK DANIEL.

MR. AUGUST BELMONT last week notified the Mascoutah Kennel Club that he could not be present to judge the fox terrier classes at the Chicago show, so Mr. Jas. Mortimer was pressed into service and of course filled the vacancy in an acceptable manner.

MR. THOS. BLAKE, of Detroit, Mich ,who was in charge of a number of dogs at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show, was severely bitten in the hand by an Irish water spaniel the evening before the show opened. He is a clever handler and we hope his hand will soon be well.

WE are informed the dates decided upon for the Los Angeles show are April 17, 18, 19 and 20. It is hoped to attract the public by raffling several puppies, everyone paying admittance to the show to have a chance.

Too much care cannot be taken in the choice of dogs and ribbons, for the entire effect of a smart gown has again and again been utterly lost by having dog and ribbon of a wrong shade.—New York Herald.

I WOULD like the gentleman that bought Nip of Kent to please advertise same in the AMERICAN FIELD, as I would like to note the sale.

Champaign, Ill. HENRY BEHRENS.

MR. JOHN DAVIDSON has been engaged to judge the Pacific Kennel Club's show at San Francisco in May, but we have not yet heard who will judge at Los Angeles.

THE space required this week for bench show and field trial reports compels us to hold over a number of articles as well as Names Claimed, Sales, Visits and Wheips.

MR. NORVIN T. Harris has been quite ill in New Orleans, being confined to his bed for a few days; however, we are glad to hear that he is now convalescent.

THE veteran handler, Ben Lewis, is at the Chicago show with a large string of dogs, all of which he will take to the Denver show next week.

THE WATERLOO CUP

It has been necessary to again postpone this very important event, the state of the ground making coursing impracticable last week, and the commencment has now been set for Wednesday of this week, March 6. It is worthy of notice that Colonel North's kennel, which for the last half dozen years has figured so prominently, not only through Fullerton's efforts but also in the matter of supplying other nominators, on the present occasion does not contain a greyhound in training that is up to Waterloo Cup form, and consequently the Colonel will depend on Messrs. W. J. and E. J. Reilly's fawn and white dog puppy Rumbler, by Herschel out of Hark, to do battle for him. On the other hand Mr. M. Fletcher, who will run Falconr, last year's runner-up, in his own nomination, has so strong a kennel that he is able to supply four other nominators, and the Messrs. Fawcett are in the same fortunate position; while three of Mr. Pilkington's will be running.

NOTES

THE secretary of the Aberdeen Coursing Club has favored us with some entry blanks, on which are printed the conditions of the Aberdeen stakes, for greyhounds of all ages at $5 each, to be run April 16, at Aberdeen, S. D. Entries, accompanied by $2, must be made on or before April 8; $3 to be paid the night of the draw. The club is in the fortunate position of being able to add $100, and generously does so. The winner will get $50 and 50 per cent. of the entrance money and forfeits; the runner-up $25 and 25 per cent., and third and fourth $12 50 and 12½ per cent. each. It is announced that "the running rules of the American Coursing Board have been adopted as the running rules of this club, but for these stakes Rule 8, relating to registration of greyhounds, has been suspended, and dogs will be allowed to enter without being registered in the stud book." The reason for suspending Rule 8 is hard to find. This is a new club, it is true, but if clubs old or new are going to do this sort of thing the usefulness of the stud book will be materially impaired, besides which it will suffer financially. For a meeting to be run under the American Coursing Board's rules, and yet such a vitally important rule as Rule 8 not be enforced, is an anomaly; and how Rule 5 can remain in force and Rule 8 be suspended is another. Wm. Stephenson and Wm. Angell, who are to judge and slip at Oakes the week previous, will perform the same services at Aberdeen.

BONNIE BELLE has not yet received Hershell's attention, or had not up to two weeks ago; her owner, Mr. A. C. Lighthall, writes: "I guess Bonnie Belle is 'stuck on' old England, as she has not come in season yet." Mr. Lighthall is in the fortunate position of being able to say: "I have increased my business so much I don't get much time to get out with the 'boys,' but I hope by next Fall to be able to take a hand in the fun." We hope every coursing man will find this a good business year, and be able to indulge in his favorite sport to his heart's content when next season rolls around. Princess Marie, Bonnie Belle's litter sister, owned by Dr. J. M. Norman, was bred on February 26 to Boomerang. We are sorry to hear the Doctor has lost by distemper the last one of his saplings out of Princess Marie by imp. Babazoun; however, he has lately purchased from Mr. D. C. Luse a pair of saplings by imp. Glenkirk out of imp. Nettlefield, and from Mr. H. C. Lowe a sapling by imp. Lord Neversettle out of Imp. Partera, and has entered all three and his bitch sapling by Boomerang out of Irish Lass in the Altcar Produce Stakes. This gives the Doctor a nice hand to play, and should he win out it would be a popular victory. Next Fall some of the Partera puppies, whelped February 25, 1894, are likely to prove very dangerous opponents.

THE Dixie Coursing Club's meeting, which was announced for February 22, was postponed until March 6; but as Mr. John Highland, of Galveston, had come on with his bitch Lady Eligh, and Mr. W. J. Erwin, of Honey Grove, with Glenlyon, the American Derby and Kenmore Cup winner, and Black Joe, the winner of the stakes at the Dixie Club's inaugural meeting last December, it was decided to get up an impromptu stake and run it at Brookshire. Six entries were made, and the running resulted as follows: Mr. John Highland's bitch Lady Eligh beat Mr. ——'s bitch Gray; Mr. W. J. Erwin's fawn and white dog Glenlyon (imp. Glenkirk—imp. Gilda) beat a dog named Guidan; Mr. M. McDonald's black and white dog Mornington (imp. Lord Neversettle—Imp. White Lips) beat Mr. W. J. Erwin's black dog Black Joe (imp. Lord Neversettle—imp. White Lips). In the second round Glenlyon beat Lady Eligh; and Mornington ran a bye with Guidan. Mr. McDonald and Mr. Erwin then divided. A good gathering is expected on Wednesday of this week, when a silver cup valued at $150 is to be run for. We are glad to know the members of the Dixie Club are enthusiastic over the sport, and to observe that they are purchasing some good greyhounds.

OUR remarks in last week's issue on the advisability of executive committees being increased from three members to five have brought forth the information that Mr. Vidler was fully qualified to serve on the Altcar Club's committee at La Crosse, he having been appointed the previous week by the president to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. F. A. Withers, when he found he could not attend the coursing meeting at La Crosse, from the club's executive committee. We fell into the error through Mr. Withers' name appearing on the card as one of the executive committee. It is suggested that the comments on the executive committee's ruling might convey the idea that the committee was not actuated by the great principle of attaining justice, and we desire to remove any such impression. No one acquainted with the two gentlemen on the committee could harbor such a thought for a moment, and for the benefit of those who do not know them we wish to say that nothing was further from our thoughts.

LAST week we received three or four requests for information concerning the place of holding the Altcar Club's meeting next Autumn, in each case the inquirers stating that a letter had been received from Huron, S. D., announcing the probability of the Altcar Produce Stakes being run there. In face of the announcement the week previous that the Altcar Club's meeting would probably be held at Kansas, Colo., and considering a majority of the members of the club are residents of Colorado or Kansas, it is certainly improbable that the club will hold its meeting in Dakota. The Altcar Produce Stakes having been advertised in the AMERICAN FIELD last month and the month previous, if any such extraordinary change of location had been contemplated we feel certain we should have been advised of it. It is very strange.

A CONTROVERSY having been opened in the Australasian relative to the largest number in a litter of greyhound puppies, a correspondent to that paper instances a case of a bitch belonging to him that, on June 7, 1887, whelped sixteen puppies; on February 13, 1888, seventeen, and on October 31 following, sixteen. This made a total of forty-nine puppies in sixteen months, all born alive and all healthy the day after birth, when, in each instance, the three litters were weeded.

MR. PETER FISHER, of Laramie, Wyo., whom we mentioned a couple of months ago as the possessor of an enormous greyhound, has had the misfortune to lose by death Pearl of Pekin II, a bitch sapling by Boomerang out of Pearl of Pekin, which would probably have represented him in the Altcar Produce Stakes; though she could not have run under that name, the Coursing Board's rules on registration prohibiting the use of numerals.

WRITING on March 1, the date of closing of entries for the Altcar Produce Stakes, the secretary, Mr. T. W. Bartels says: "Have fifty entries in at this writing. Probably get a few more in the next two or three mails All entries bearing postmark of March 1 will be accepted Dr. Van Hummell may send some from England." The advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD of February 23 must have brought them in at a lively rate last week.

JOHN COCHRAN writes that he has been having a bad time with distemper in his kennels, but has managed to get his dogs through all right; lucky man. We are glad to hear that all at Winfield are well. Cochran still has Pearl, the fast and clever winner of the Kansas Stakes (for bitch puppies) at La Crosse, and he is not likely to let her pass out of his hands unless he receives a tempting offer.

MR. CHAS. BARROW, of Denver, has purchased Buckshot, No. 95 in Vol. I of the American Coursing Board's Stud Book, a dog sapling by Boomerang out of Irish Lass (St. Patrick—Daisy Dublin), from Mr. T. W. Bartels.

A BRIEF note from Mr. H. Scott-Durbin, of Hawarden, Ia., dated at King's Lynn, Norfolk, Eng., says he hopes to see the Waterloo Cup run, and to meet Dr. Van Hummell.

MR. A. E. GETHING, of Mobeetie, Tex., leaves for England this week and expects to bring some greyhounds back with him.

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. J. F. Sansom, Kahoka, Mo.

ANOTHER BOY RIFLEMAN

LAFAYETTE, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The inclosed photograph and targets are another demonstration of what our boys can do if they are given a chance. The picture is of Master Willie Douglass, the 8 year-old son of Mr. O. F. Douglass, an extensive pump manufacturer of this city, and his instructor, Mr. J. E. Long, an expert rifleman.

Master Douglass has only been under instructions about

Once again I say give the boys a chance. The practice is genteel and elevating from a moral standpoint and beneficial from a hygienic point of view, inasmuch as it trains an upright position of the body, a quick, keen eyesight and also perfects control of the muscles by will power which is not attained in any other manner. Now, I don't believe that all boys are rifle shots, but I am satisfied that there are thousands of them in the country that would be if they were given a chance to test their ability.

NOTES

IN reading the AMERICAN FIELD of February 23 I noticed an article by Maori, of New Zealand, on .22-caliber rifles and nitro powders. In the Summer of 1892 I loaded some shells for my .32-40 Marlin rifle with Schultze powder, using the same quantity of the nitro as I did of black powder and tried it at a target 100 yards distant. The result was very unsatisfactory. The gun recoiled very sharply and the shells were so swelled that one pulled apart in getting it out of the gun. I tried nitro powder again about two months ago in a .45-70 United States Army rifle, using E. C. powder. The result was worse than before, for of the thirty shots fired six of them split the bullets, causing them to fly wild and whistle like a nail will when thrown from the hand. My experience with nitro powders makes me think that they are too strong for use in a rifle, and therefore will not do good work. Perhaps a nitro powder will soon be made that will be more comfortable to shoot in a rifle than black powder and do equally as good work, but that made for use in shotguns will not do.

Petaluma, Cal. O. M. CAMPBELL.

AT a recent business meeting of the Missouri Rifle and Pistol Club it was decided to change the club's headquarters to 3315-17 Olive Street, where the club will have better accommodations than heretofore. In its new quarters the club will have two ranges, a 50-foot range for the general public and a 75-foot range for club contests and match shooting. In addition, the club, in its new quarters, will have handsomely furnished club rooms for the use of members. The club also has in contemplation the establishment of the finest outdoor range in the United States. It has several locations in view for this, and when a selection has been made the land will be purchased and improvements thereon begun at once.

SOME time since Prof. John Loris, the American rifle and revolver shot, who is now in Europe, offered to shoot Dr. Carver a match with rifle and revolver for $1,000 a side and the championship of the world. Dr. Carver's reply was that he was not an expert revolver shot nor a trick rifle shot, but if Prof. Loris wanted to shoot a match with the rifle at glass balls or blocks of wood or chunks of coal, for $1,000 or $2,000 a side, he would accommodate him and go to England to shoot the race if Loris would guarantee his expenses in making the journey. Prof. Loris is a fine shot both with rifle and revolver and a match between him and Dr. Carver would be well worth going quite a distance to see.

MR. N. F. REVELL, of Litchfield, Minn., disputes the claim of Mr. A. J. Vandeusen, of Winona, Minn., as champion rifle shot of the world, and authorized the publication in a local paper of a challenge to shoot the Winona man a match for $500 a side. Mr. Vandeusen on hearing of the challenge announced himself ready to defend the title and a match is very likely to result.

THE ninth bundesfest of the Western Sharpshooters' Association will be held in Milwaukee, Wis., on June 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23, and the Sharpshooters' Club of that city is already at work making the necessary preparations for a big time.

PISTOL SHOOTING CONTEST

The Signal Corps of the First Brigade, N. G. C., and the police pistol team of Los Angeles, Cal., recently shot a team contest with the pistol, eight men to the team and ten shots per man. The police team had been looked upon as crack shots with the pistol but when they got into a contest did poor work compared with that done when in practice. The scores are given below, showing the Signal Corps team to have won by 31 points.

Mr. McBean, a former member of the club, shot a trial score with Leonard smokeless powder, making 242 points. He then offered to shoot Mr. M. Braun a 100-shot match, Mr. McBean to use the Leonard smokeless powder and Mr. Braun to use black powder, each man to shoot ten targets, 25 yards, off hand. The proposition was accepted and the match arranged to take place on the evening of March 5.

MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF IOWA STATE SPORTSMEN'S ASSOCIATION

BURLINGTON, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Pursuant to a call of the president, the directors of the Iowa State Sportsmen's Association held a meeting in Cedar Rapids last week, a full report of which the secretary, Mr. Henderson, of Cedar Rapids, will probably send to the AMERICAN FIELD. My object, however, in writing this is, to reach, through your valuable paper, as near as possible, all the sportsmen of the state of Iowa, whom we wish to enlist as members of the state association.

The association is now regularly incorporated, the shares being fixed at $1 each, the object being to obtain an individual membership over the entire state as well as club membership. Every sportsman who wishes to join the association has simply to send in his application and remit the amount of $1, before May 1. This will entitle him to membership for one year. Clubs wishing to join the association must subscribe for five shares of stock, which will cost $5. The directors hope in this way that quite a large fund can be raised which will be used to enforce the game and fish laws of the state. Application for membership should be made as early as possible, and should be addressed directly to the secretary, Mr. George Henderson, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., or to the president, Mr. N. S. Young, of Burlington, Ia.

Among other business transacted at the Cedar Rapids meeting was the arranging of a program and selection of dates for the state tournament. Some new features will be introduced at the state tournament which I will mention here in order to invite criticism in advance: All live bird shooting is to be eliminated from the Summer meeting, which will be held at Cedar Rapids on May 11, 12 and 13. The use of 10-gauge guns and black powder are also to be prohibited at the tournament.

Now, the writer of this article is to blame for the above rulings, although they were, of course, concurred in by the brother directors, and if the sportsmen of Iowa want to jump onto anybody, I am that man, for I am to be blamed for what has been done. But do not insist that these rulings shall not be enforced, for after one has once attended a tournament where they are enforced he will certainly be well pleased. In this connection it is well to say that it is the intention of the directors at their next meeting, to be held during the tournament at Cedar Rapids, to make arrangements for a grand live bird tournament, something that will remind one of "olden times," to be held in November or February next.

As all know, live birds are really not fit to shoot during the Summer months, and therefore afford very little sport to the shooter, and no profit to the association. Another novel feature decided on will be the handicap to be put in operation at the tournament, to wit: All winners of first and second moneys in any event are to be handicapped in the next event in which they enter by being obliged to hold the gun below the elbow until after they call "pull!" This is certainly a severe handicap even on the best shooter, and gives the novice in trap shooting a good chance. This was proposed by Mr. Booth, and met the approval of all the other directors. The program, which will be published soon, is certainly an interesting one, and is gotten up chiefly in the interest of amateur shooters.

It must be said to the credit of our Cedar Rapids friends who are to have charge of the tournament, Messrs. Henderson, Lobenstein and others, that they are taking the necessary steps to make the forthcoming tournament the most successful of any held in Iowa for a number of years; and it remains with the sportsmen of Iowa to not only make the tournament a success, but also to put the association on a solid financial footing by simply planking down $1 each for a share of stock. The price of admission to the association is so cheap that a membership of several hundred should certainly be obtained by May 1, which is the last day on which application for membership can be accepted.

DIXIE.

MR. DUDLEY'S PIGEON-SHOOTING BILL KILLED

THE sportsmen of Illinois will be pleased to learn that the bill introduced in the Illinois legislature by Representative Dudley, entitled "A Bill for an Act to Suppress Pigeon Shooting and Similar Sport," was killed in committee on Thursday, February 28, and the credit for this killing vote in behalf of the sportsmen of Illinois is due to one man, W. L. Shepard, President of the Illinois State Sportsman's Association, who was present when the committee met and made a vigorous and logical speech in denunciation of the unwarranted measure. J. G. Shortall, President of the Humane Society of Illinois, was present also for the purpose of supporting the bill, and he delivered a most clean cut and clever argument in behalf of it. By similes and appeals in behalf of the innocent pigeons which "were being slaughtered for sport," he played on the sympathies of the members of the committee and would have come out victorious, undoubtedly, had not Mr. W. L. Shepard, who is a veteran pigeon shooter, been present, and offset Mr. Shortall's theoretical appeal by a practical presentation of facts.

Among other arguments advanced by Mr. Shepard he proved, in contradiction of some of Mr. Shortall's assertions, that there were as many good Christians in trap shooting clubs as in the humane society, and cited himself to sustain his statement. As to cruelty he proved to the committee's satisfaction that as soon as a bird was hit with shot it was benumbed and could not feel pain, even though death was not instantaneous, and that there was no greater, if as great, cruelty in this method of killing birds as that practiced by the marketman when he wrings the neck or chops off the head of poultry. Mr. Shepard also said that all kinds of shooting on field and water have in them more cruelty than birds shot at the trap, for while in the latter case a bird meets death surely, in the former they often are wounded only and for days live a lingering death in the recesses of some marsh or hedge. He also proved to the committee's satisfaction that if the bill passed it would destroy a valuable industry among the farming community, as farmers raised pigeons for trap shooting purposes solely, receiving higher prices per bird than for market poultry, and also that the pigeons shot became at once valuable again as food, and cheap food at that, the sportsman having already paid a good price for it. Mr. Shepard spoke with the earnestness of purpose and responsibility, for he realized that he was the only sportsman from the entire state of Illinois present to look after their interest, and he was almost disheartened from this seeming indifference, for the AMERICAN FIELD, in its issue of February 23, had called the attention of the trap shooters of Illinois to this bill which threatened to rob them of one of their most cherished pastimes, yet none had sent in a protest against its enactment. Mr. Shepard is therefore entitled to great credit for his impromptu effort in behalf of trap shooters, and the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association was lucky in having its president in Springfield on that day.

Mr. Shepard and Game Warden Blow went to Springfield, as we announced last week, to present the new Illinois State Sportsmen's Association Game Law Bill, and hearing the pigeon bill would come up on Thursday, stayed over and—killed it.

NOTES

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of February 23 appeared an article headed "To the Trap Shooters of Illinois" in which, to say the least, I think the editor was very unkind to Mr. Dudley, who introduced the bill in the legislature of our state. The bill was sent to him by a constituent, and was referred to a committee of which he is not a member. Its introduction was a matter of duty and does not commit him either pro or con. As everyone knows, even the late obnoxious game bill was introduced by a member or senator who will not favor its passage. Mr. Dudley may favor the passage of the bill against live bird trap shooting, or he may not. As to that, no matter. The bill must be opposed as one not having merit. Mr. Dudley has introduced several bills in the interest of humane work, which have merit, but the bill in question is not one of them. It should not become a law because it would be wrong to pass it. The present methods of trap shooters are not inhuman toward the brute creation. Shooting pigeons or other birds or fowl is as painless a way of taking life as can be selected. Shooting birds from the trap is not as objectionable as is wild bird field or marsh shooting; not a tenth part as objectionable as is the latter. On marshes many birds are wounded and not retrieved. At the trap, self-interest makes it necessary to gather all birds. Wildfowl and birds are shot to be utilized as food, sport, so-called, being a feature of the pursuit and killing. All pigeons or doves shot at trap are utilized as food; none go to waste. With wild birds, as killed, they are fat, lean or mere skeletons; with birds as found in trap shooting, they are fat, palatable, luscious. The raising of birds for so-called trap shooting has become a great industry among farmers. Millions are raised for the market annually. They are sent from their roosts, poor, lean, sometimes as mere skeletons, and are fattened and made toothsome before being killed. Chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys are sent to market in crates and seldom are in the best condition for food, and they are killed by wringing their necks. Which is the more cruel? But for the trap shooter pigeons would have no sale, and the epicures could not have the toothsome food they ask. Pigeons and doves are generally shot when wild birds are out of season and should not be sold or eaten. Stop trap shooting and you invite the sale of wild birds, which also invites the market-hunter to trap them in Winter. While those who favor the passage of the bill are unquestionably earnest and honest, they are, nevertheless, mistaken; and Mr. Dudley, as have others, will, I trust, listen to reason.

PROGRAMS for the Interstate Association's Grand American Handicap tournament at live birds, to be held at Willard Park, Paterson, N. J., on April 3, 4 and 5, have been mailed to every live bird shooter whose address is in our possession. We fully realize that there are any number of lovers of this popular sport throughout the United States and Canada who have not received a program for this big event, simply because we do not know their address. For the benefit of all such I wish to state that we will be pleased to mail a copy to anyone applying for same. All that is required is to drop a card to the New York office, J. A. H. Dressel, secretary-treasurer, 313 Broadway, New York, or to the manager's home address, Elmer E. Shaner, 122 Diamond Market, Pittsburg, Pa. This will insure the sender's name being placed on our list, to be referred to as future occasions may require. Judging from the number of inquiries we have already received for programs, book of rules, and information relating to the Grand American Handicap, we are assured of a large and influential list of entries.

THE recent holiday shoot of the Country Club, held on its beautiful grounds on the Sound in Westchester, was one of the most successful the club ever held, there being twenty or more members in attendance, besides a number of ladies. More than ordinary interest was manifested in this shoot as it was to be Mr. Geo. J. Gould's first public appearance before the traps, and he had offered a silver cup as one of the prizes to be contested for. Mr. Gould acquitted himself very creditably, taking part in several sweepstakes and in one killing five birds straight. The contest for the Gould cup was at 15 live birds, and was won by Mr. Arthur Duane on a score of 14, closely followed by W. H. Sands with 13 and J. S. Williams with 12. The others who took part in the cup shoot were Mr. Butler, Arthur Sullivan, N. Reynal, E. C. Potter, Robert Lawrence, W. S. Edey, Fred Edey, Edward L. Amontang, Laufear Norrie and De Forest Manice. One sweepstake match was won by D. S. Bacon and Robert Lawrence, while Harry Redmond, George J. Gould and J. S. Williams killed five birds straight in the next match and divided the honors.

THE Buckeye Gun Club of Dayton, O., held its annual meeting at the Phillips House parlors on Saturday evening, March 2, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. L. C. Adams; vice-president, W. Scott McDonald; secretary-treasurer, Wm. Stark; executive committee, C. W. Raymond and Al Wroe; captain, R. O. Heikes. The club will have three or four classes this season, and will shoot for certificates. The shooting for certificates will begin on the first Friday in April and close on the last Friday in October. The club has a membership of seventy-seven, comprising some of the best trap and field shots in the United States. It is safe to say that at least six or eight of its members can shoot above a 90 per cent. gait, and no less than twenty can shoot au eighty per cent gait. The club now has one of the nicest shooting grounds in this country, which are fitted up with electric pull traps, a fine club house and all that is necessary to make everything pleasant for its members.

Dayton, O. BUNT.

AT the recent annual meeting of the directors of the Iowa State Sportsmen's Association, it was decided that the annual convention and tournament should be held at Cedar Rapids, Ia., Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, May 21, 22 and 23, 1895. On account of the scarcity of birds, and the fact that they are nesting at that time of the year, it was decided to have but one test at live birds and that to be for the state trophy. The association has been incorporated under the laws of the state with a paid-up capital of $5,000 and is in a most prosperous condition. Cedar Rapids has a reputation second to none for hospitality, and being the center of a number of railroads, a large attendance is expected at the annual meeting and tournament.

THE Chicago Golf Club, which owns 200 acres of land at Wheaton, Ind., will, as soon as the weather becomes settled, begin improvements thereon, and among other things will set apart a portion of its grounds for trap shooting. The organization has a large membership, and not a few ardent sportsmen are found among its members, consequently trap shooting will constitute one of the pleasures of the club. The present officers of the club are: Captain, Charles B. Macdonald; treasurer, James B. Forgan; secretary, E. W. Cramer; directors, B. M. Wilson, Wm. Borden, E. A. Worthington, E. I. Frost, C. H. Wilmerding and Henry B. Stone.

A NEW gun club was recently organized at Lyons, Ill., with the following gentlemen, residents of Lyons, Riverside and Chicago, members: Lyons—Frank Hofmann, Geo. J. Becker, Frank W. Kuhlmann, John Berner, Wm. Gerber, G. F. Neher, C. W. Fredericks, J. A. Hofmann, F. G. Neher, Geo. Timersdorf, Chris. Reese, Louis Leonhardt and Louis Maerchler. Riverside—David Chicken, Fred Brown, Frank Demar, Wm. Toan, Helmer Nelson, Willis Congdon and Adam Metz. Chicago—C. V. Cerveny and G. P. Matther. The club's shooting grounds are at Lyons, where the club has practice shoots once a month.

CAPT. A. H. BOGARDUS and Mr. C. C. Emory attempted to shoot a live bird race at Saybrook, Ill., on February 22. Just as they had got nicely started the marshal of the town appeared upon the scene of action and placed them both under arrest for violating a city ordinance by shooting within the corporate limits of the city; but afterward when it was remembered that guns are allowed to be fired within the city limits on holidays, and that February 22 is a legal holiday, the men were released; but their shooting match had been spoiled, and now the men thus interfered with talk of prosecuting the city.

AFTER several attempts the sportsmen of this city were successful on the evening of February 25 in organizing the Frankfort Gun Club with a charter membership of sixteen, all amateurs. The special objects of the organization are advancement in the art of shooting, and the better protection of game, which is becoming very scarce in this section on account of a disregard for our laws. The following officers were elected for the current term: President, Chas. Ham; vice-president, O. C. Parson; secretary-treasurer, N. W. Mattix.

MR. EDWARD A. WATSON of Nimrod Hall, Va., writes us announcing a trap shooting tournament at his place on April 14 and 15 and stating that it is his intention to in the future hold a tournament each April and September. For his forthcoming tournament arrangements have been perfected for a special rate of $2 for the round trip from Millburn depot, a distance of seven and one-half miles, and a rate of $1 per day for sportsmen, at the hotel at Nimrod Hall. The program on each day of the tournament will be a series of open sweepstakes in which all who are present can participate.

A NEW gun club with a charter membership of forty-four was recently organized at Stockton, Hunterdon County, N. J. The club has nice grounds located near the city, and all its paraphernalia is in excellent shape. It has a comfortable club house, five target traps set in a trench and the trappers are protected by a good solid screen. The club holds monthly championship contests, at which, up to the present writing, Mr. Philip Rockafellow has been winner.

MR. G. E. HUGHES, a well known sportsman of Fonda, Ia., with his wife and two daughters, will leave this country on March 27 for a tour of the European countries. He expects to be absent all Summer, returning in the Fall early enough to again meet his many old-time friends in the field and at the trap. The boys will miss "George," as he is familiarly called, but they will willingly grant him the vacation he is to take.

THE Morristown (N. J.) Gun Club announces a live bird handicap shoot at the Morristown driving park on Tuesday, March 12. Smith; secretary and treasurer, Wm. V. Helfrich; executive committee, R. W. Smith, W. A. Reynold and H. C. Mallison.

THERE is talk of the Canton, O., and Massillon gun clubs consolidating, making one large organization instead of two small ones. If this is accomplished the combination will be a strong and formidable club.

THE Hell Gate Gun Club, which held its shooting meetings at Dexter Park, last year, has secured new grounds at Recreation Park, Long Island City, and recently held its first shoot of the season of 1895 there.

PIGEON SHOOTING AT MONTE CARLO

The first event at Monte Carlo, following those reported in these columns last week, was the triennial championship stakes, being a contest for a medal and £200, added to a sweepstake of £4 for each entry. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that the contest for this triennial prize is the sporting event of the season, the Grand Prix du Casino not excepted, for if the champion stakes are only £200 instead of £800, they afford, being at 28 meters, with 25 pigeons, a higher test of merit, and are not so likely to be secured by a moderate shot who may happen to be favored with his birds. First shot for in 1883, the championship was won that year by M. Joseph Lafond, while in 1886 Mr. Cholmondeley Pennell secured a victory for England, followed in 1889 by Mr. Blake, and in 1892 by Signor Oreste Galetti. The two latter formed part of the sixty-one who entered the lists this year, when, with a high wind blowing, birds were not easy to kill, and, at the close of the sixth round, only Count Trauttmansdorff, Signor Galetti, Count Dankelmann, Mr. Fred Hoey, Baron de Pallandt and M. A. Poizat had a clean score, while fourteen others, including Mr. Harker, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Chase, Mr. Halford and Mr. Keunedy, had accounted for five out of six. The number of entries in this event was sixty-one, Signor Mainetto Ghido, an Italian, winning the honors and first prize on 26 kills out of 29 birds shot at. Scores:

The Fifth Triennial Championship, a medal and £200, added to a sweepstake of £4 each; the second received 35 per cent. of the entrance money, the third 25 per cent., the fourth 15 per cent.; 25 live birds at 28 meters; previous winners to stand back a meter; 61 entries.

The above event lasted three days and yet when the subsequent event, the Prix de Junon Handicap, was called it had fifty-eight entries, showing that the interest was not flagging. Mr. Fred Hoey, the American who crossed the ocean to be at this meeting, has shown up in nearly every event, but in the events reported this week he, unfortunately, did not get into the money in a single instance. However, he is getting an experience that most trap shooters in America will never get, and which will be worth something to him should he ever again enter an international contest. The scores in the Prix de Juuon Handicap follow:

Prix de Junon Handicap of £40, added to a sweepstakes of £2 each; the second received 30 per cent.; the third 20 per cent.; 58 entries.

The number of entries in the next event, which was shot on a Monday, was not nearly so many as had been seen in previous events, but as the week wore on it is quite likely that the attendance grew better, although the more important events of the meeting have been decided and the interest therefore is not as great as at the start.

Prix de Minerve of £40, added to a sweepstakes of £2 each; the second received 30 per cent. of the entrance money; the third 20 per cent; distance 28½ meters; 43 entries.
